correct the evil, has, in a circular letter sent to each commissioner in the district, notified them that, in addition to the present safeguards thrown around the issuance of the writ, he will require, as necessary to his approval, the additional certificates of the commissioner that the complaining witnesses are of good character and not professional informers. But this amended remedy will prove as futile as the original, and the evil will go on prospering and to prosper. Some more radical remedy must be invoked to rid the Department of Justice of this disgraceful blot.

If the United States attorney should prosecute vigorously all professional witnesses, commissioners, and deputy marshals who are or have been engaged in working up and trying trifling cases for conspiracy to defraud the Government, and all commissioners and brokers for certifying and presenting false witness rolls for payment, a check would be put upon them in localities where such practices obtain; but under the most scrutinizing vigilance and vigorous prosecutions I believe that many irregularities and frauds would creep in, and consequently this safeguard will not sufficiently supply the remedy.

It seems to me from all the authorities I have been able to gather that United States commissioners, as now appointed, are entirely independent of any officer or tribunal and amenable to none, and can not be removed except by impeachment or conviction of crime. In ex parte John Van Orden, 3 Blatch. (S. Dist. N. Y., 1854), the court, Betts J., used this language:

"A commissioner, in the execution of the duties of his office, under the act of September 18, 1850 (9 Stat. L., 462), is, in no legal sense, a magistrate inferior to the circuit court. No provision is made in that act, or in any other, subjecting his proceedings to the control or review of this court, nor are his functions declared to be subordinate to the authority of any other tribunal. The court, in making the appointment of commissioners fulfills an agency imposed upon it by Congress, and no more acquires thereby a supervisory authority over him, or his proceedings in his office, than the President or the Senate has over judges appointed by them. He is not even an officer of the court."

In United States vs. Schumann (2 Abb. U. S. Rep. 523), tenth circuit district, California, 1866, Mr. Justice Field held:

"He [the commissioner] is thus made a magistrate of the Government, exercising functions of the highest importance to the administration of justice. He is an examining and committing justice, bound to hear all complaints of the commission of any offense against the laws of the United States in his district, to cause the defendant to be arrested, to examine into the matters charged, to summon witnesses for the Government and the accused, and to commit for trial or to discharge from arrest, according as the evidence tends or fails to support the allegation. For the faithful discharge of his duties in these particulars he alone is accountable. He has no divided responsibility with any other officer of the Government, nor is he subject to any other control." * * *

The language quoted in the two cases in the absence of any law to limit or supervise their acts is sufficient to indicate very clearly, if not establish the fact that commissioners are independent of any other officer of the Government, and within the sphere of the powers conferred on them by statute, are clothed with authority which seems to be practically unlimited, and that they can not be removed except as suggested. From the language of Judge Betts, quoted above, it is easily deducible, if not positively expressed, that the power of the circuit court is limited to the appointment.

If the court has no power to review the acts of a commissioner, and he is not even an officer of the court, it is difficult to find in the law the power in the court to remove a commissioner. Taking this as the proper status of commissioners, it would be difficult to suggest such amendments to the present laws as would provide the greatest possible benefits to the Government, and at the same time throw around the commissioners such safeguards as would prevent an abuse of the powers given them.

The office of commissioner, being a statutory office, a radical change, if not a remedy for the present evils, is easily suggested; that is to repeal all existing laws on the subject of appointment of commissioners, pass a law placing the appointing power in the hands of the President, with power to remove for cause, limiting the appointment to licensed lawyers of good standing in the community to which they are appointed, prescribe his district, abolish the fee system, and make the office a salaried one, adjusting the salary to the probable amount of business to be transacted in the district.

There is no gainsaying the disgraceful fact that under the present system, the modus operandi by commissioners, great frauds are being perpetrated, large sums of money are wasted, spies, common informers, and professional witnesses are being bred, great outrages are being committed, and vile injustice done reputable citizens and innocent persons, and the administration of justice made a byword and reproach in some of the districts in the United States. To visit northern district of Alabama, examine the accounts of commissioners, learn the manner of proceeding in their courts, see the number of criminally frivolous cases brought and tried, attend the courts and see the crowds of witnesses, and defendants attending, see the witnesses and jury certificate broker plying his vocation in the very corridors of the court-house, visit the jails and see the squalid crowd of innocent and guilty huddled together in a common jail, as hogs in a pen, hear their tales of woe, that their wives and helpless children in their humble homes in some distant mountain cove are depending for a bare subsistence upon the charity of some trusted neighbor who is poorly able to spare it from the scanty fare of his own family, while the defendant is languishing in a loathsome jail cell, a victim to the rapacity of some professional witnesses and judicial officers, is enough to enforce the conviction that it would be a godsend to justice to have the doors of the criminal courts in the district closed. There is no surer way to make a bad citizen out of a patriot than to deprive him of his rights, persecute him in the name of law, and turn a deaf ear to his cries for justice.

I can not too strongly urge upon you the necessity of sending to this district a sufficient corps of examiners to visit each commissioner doing any great amount of business and thoroughly examine all the accounts, papers, and process of his office, and to call before them defendants, witnesses, deputy marshals, and all others who may be able to testify to any fact connected with the trial of any particular case tried before them and bring out all facts connected with the administration of justice by them, and if fraud is developed to lay the facts connected with it before the United States attorney, who should be instructed to prosecute the perpetrators to the fullest extent of the law.

From much experience in such matters I will say that, to a thorough examination into these matters, it is necessary to clothe the examiners with full authority to compel the attendance and answers of witnesses, employ stenographers, and, if necessary, employ the services of guides who know the country and people. Clothed with this authority, I will stake my commission on being able to reduce the expenses of the district $50,000 per annum.

A thorough examination of the affairs of the district and punishment of the guilty is not only demanded by justice, but it is due to the good people of the district, who feel keenly the atimy which is being brought upon their community by the conduct of some of the officers, and are ready, willing, and anxious to render any assistance at their command to unearth the fraud, punish the perpetrators, and purge the district of the pernicious practices.

I respectfully recommend that this report and accompanying evidence be referred to the United States attorney for the district, with instructions to spare neither pains nor expense in bringing the guilty to justice.

Very respectfully,

LEIGH CHALMERS,
Examiner, Department of Justice.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

Attention is called to the letter of Hon. W. E. Curtis, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, of February 16, to Hon. JOSEPH D. SAYERS, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, accompanied by a letter of Hon. Richard Olney, Attorney-General, to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated February 8, 1894, and letter of Hon. G. W. Wilson, Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated January 23, 1894. They are as follows:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
"Washington, D. C., February 16, 1894.

"SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a letter of the Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue, calling my attention to the unequal geographical distribution of commissioners of the United States circuit courts, which results in great expense to the Government, and often in great injustice to defendants and witnesses.

"The letter of the Acting Commissioner was submitted to the Attorney-General for his views, and I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of his reply, and call your attention to his statement that 'the evil to which the Commissioner's report relates undoubtedly exists, and can be remedied only by proper legislation.'

"The Attorney-General refers to the recommendation contained in the President's annual message of 1885. Properly, the remedy for the evil should be considered by the Judiciary Committee, but the expenses of the United States courts are increasing so rapidly that it may be best to consider the suggestion of the Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue and correct the evil in the appropriation bill.

"I refer the letters with a recommendation that your committee consider an amendment to the law providing for the appointment of United States commissioners, having in view a curtailment of the largely increasing expenditures in this branch of the public service.

"Respectfully, yours,

"W. E. CURTIS, Acting Secretary."

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., February 8, 1894.

"SIR: I have yours of the 7th instant, inclosing copy of letter to you from the Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue respecting what he terms "the present unequal geographical distribution of commissioners of the United States circuit courts in some of the judicial districts.'

"The evil to which the Commissioner's report relates undoubtedly exists and can be remedied only by proper legislation. Of course, when the Commissioner speaks of a 'geographical' distribution of commissioners he does not mean to overlook population as a factor to be regarded in the distribution.

"You will remember that the President, in his last annual message, repeated a recommendation contained in his annual message of 1885 to the effect that United States commissioners should be clothed with power of trying and determining certain classes of petty offenses within the grade of misdemeanors—should in effect be a kind of Federal justice of the peace.

"Please consider, if legislation is to be had upon the subject of United States commissioners at all, whether something may not properly be done in the line of the President's suggestion.

"Respectfully, yours,

"RICHARD OLNEY,
"Attorney-General.

"The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY."

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
"Washington, D. C., January 23, 1894.

"SIR: This office has had occasion heretofore to bring to your attention instances in which the present unequal geographical distribution of commissioners of the United States circuit court in some of the judicial districts, operates detrimentally to the interests of the Government as well as oppressively to persons charged with offenses under the internal-revenue laws.

"For instance, in the southern judicial district of Alabama there appears to be no United States commissioner except at Mobile and in Escambia County. Therefore accused persons arrested in the northern portion of the judicial district, upon warrants issued by one of the Mobile commissioners, are carried, with the witnesses, possibly 200 miles for a preliminary hearing to determine whether they shall be held under bail for court, or discharged—the fees and mileage often amounting to $150 to $200 in each case.

"In the northern judicial district of Florida, also, instances have recently been reported where persons arrested in the vicinity of Chipley, Washington County, have been carried more than 200 miles to Jacksonville for such preliminary hearing. In such a recent case it was complained that the persons arrested were not guilty of the charge, and that it was a great wrong and hardship that they should have been carried so far away from home, among strangers, so that they were unable to give bail.

"It can hardly need argument in support of the proposition that upon every ground of right and justice to persons accused, as well as of economy in administration, there should be such geographical distribution of these officers as will afford speedy and convenient means for the preliminary examination of persons charged with offenses under the internal-revenue laws and other Federal statutes. And it is proper also that such examinations should be before a United States commissioner rather than any State judicial officer.

"It is the understanding of this office that the honorable Attorney-General favors an equal geographical distribution of commissioners. But it is also understood that it is not by law made the duty of the United States courts to appoint commissioners in such localities as the convenience of all concerned requires. Some courts neglect and refuse to so appoint.

"I have the honor to suggest that the matter be brought to the attention of the honorable chairman of the Appropriation Committee of the House of Representatives, with the view to some remedial legislation.

"Respectfully, yours,

"G. W. WILSON,
"Acting Commissioner.

"Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
"Secretary of the Treasury."

There has been a great increase in the expenses of United States courts for the last few years which is attributed largely to the institution of frilous prosecutions before United States commissioners and the needless expenses incurred by collusion between commissioners and deputy marshals for making fees and mileage against the Government. The following statement shows these expenses for the fiscal years 1878 to 1894, inclusive:

1878	$2,955,481.57	1887	$3,415,049.76
1879	3,241,520.49	1888	3,900,903.43
1880	3,027,424.56	1889	3,908,226.16
1881	3,193,895.91	1890	4,745,851.88
1882	3,299,625.56	1891	5,028,598.74
1883	3,386,018.24	1892	5,063,120.35
1884	3,296,200.80	1893	5,191,844.95
1885	3,248,858.13	1894, to date	3,345,000.00
1886	3,479,243.64

It will be seen from this table that the expenses of United States courts for 1893 were almost double the expenses for 1878—$2,236,363.38 in excess. These expenses for 1890 were $1,718,126.32 higher than for 1880, and in 1893 they were $128,724.60 higher than in 1892.

The following statement will show the increase in commissioners' fees for the last few years:

1881	159,119.80	1888	123,569.49
1882	155,780.95	1889	135,623.71
1883	150,488.93	1890	188,115.42
1884	135,131.85	1891	207,363.15
1885	147,242.17	1892	256,196.43
1886	160,316.50	1893	265,000.00

It will be seen that the fees of commissioners for 1893 were almost double the fees charged for 1880, or $124,780.10 in excess, more than double the fees for 1888, being $141,569.25 in excess, and being more in excess than the entire fees charged for any year preceding the year 1880. They are $76,884.58 more than for the year 1890, $57,636.85 more than in 1891. From 1888 until the present time there has been an enormous increase in the fees of United States commissioners.

The Department of Justice has for several years made strenuous efforts to restrain these commissioners in their fee-making, but find the only remedy is in legislation. Not only has there been this great increase in the fees of commissioners, but there has been naturally an increase in fees of marshals, as the following will show:

1880	$630,000.00	1887	$735,187.45
1881	742,243.37	1888	738,754.12
1882	652,058.55	1889	797,122.08
1883	780,549.96	1890	980,327.74
1884	692,510.97	1891	1,250,201.07
1885	748,717.81	1892	1,211,925.00
1886	750,266.64	1893	1,450,000.00

From this it will be seen that within ten years these fees have about doubled.

This bill provides for a limited jurisdiction of commissioners within certain districts. This will prevent the most prevalent abuse of the office by cutting off the mileage of deputy marshals, the greatest incentive to fee-making.

It limits the tenure of office to four years and gives the Attorney-General power to remove them for abuses in their office.

It allows the Attorney-General full power to establish rules of process before them and to supervise their accounts.

It limits the number of witnesses in hearings without special directions of the district attorney.

It establishes a fee bill which limits the charges for services and will prevent the existing practice of continuing hearings from day to day, at $5 each.

It requires informations to be made in revenue cases by an officer, and prevents the institution of prosecutions by private informers for fee-making.

The committee believe that the bill will greatly lessen expenses before commissioners and mileage paid to marshals, and will diminish frivolous prosecutions, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

SALE OF LEAF TOBACCO.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6993) to remove certain restrictions on the sale of leaf tobacco.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 27, chapter 1244, volume 1 of Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended by striking out all after the word "repeal," in line 5 of said section, as follows: "Provided, however, That it shall be the duty of every farmer or planter producing and selling leaf tobacco, on demand of any internal-revenue officer or other authorized agent of the Treasury Department, to furnish said officer or agent a true and complete statement, verified by oath, of all of his sales of leaf tobacco, the number of hogsheads, cases, or pounds, with the name and residence, in each instance, of the person to whom sold, and the place to which it is shipped; and every farmer or planter who wilfully refuses to furnish such information, or who knowingly makes false statements as to any of the facts aforesaid, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $500."

SEC. 2. That section 3361 of the Revised Statutes and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill relating purely to the administration of the Internal Revenue Department, and I inclosed the bill to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and requested his opinion. He replied that he saw no objection to its passage. His reply is in possession of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CRAWFORD], to whom I would yield the floor if there was to be any discussion, but as I think there is no objection to the bill, I ask for a vote on it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. As a matter of caution, I want to ask if there is any minority report. I do not think there is any.

Mr. BAILEY. There is no minority report.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I think there was no objection to the bill in the committee.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BAILEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DIRECT TAX, STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the joint resolution (H. Res. 119) to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the governor of the State of West Virginia the sum appropriated by the act of Congress entitled, "An act to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861."

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the governor of the State of West Virginia, under the provisions, conditions, and limitations of the act of Congress entitled "An act to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861," which act was approved March 2, 1891, the sum of $181,306.93, less the sum of $27,328.19, which was paid to the governor of the State of West Virginia on the 25th day of August, 1891, to be held in trust for the citizens and inhabitants of said State, notwithstanding any claim by the Government of the United States against the State of Virginia.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour may be considered as having expired.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. There are only two or three minutes of the morning hour remaining, and without objection the morning hour will be considered as having expired and this bill will be pending in the next morning hour, when the Committee on the Judiciary will be recognized.

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report accompanying the bill 6284 may be printed in connection with the remarks I made this morning.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the gentleman's request will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, in order that I may give my reasons a little more fully on the bill which passed, to which I said I had objection, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks on that subject.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman will be allowed to extend his remarks on the bill indicated by him.

There was no objection.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time to submit the views of the minority, prepared by me, on the bill (H. R. 5160) relating to the Hot Springs Reservation. The bill was ordered to be adversely reported by the committee, and the minority had leave to submit their views. The report has not yet been submitted, but I ask unanimous consent to submit the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the views of the minority will be printed.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If this minority report is submitted, does that bring the bill before the House for action in the absence of the adverse report of the majority?

The SPEAKER. It does not. The bill is not yet reported, but the views of the minority can be printed, in the absence of objection.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CAMPBELL, until Tuesday next, on account of sickness in his family.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7079) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. CALL, and Mr. ALLISON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 20) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] is recognized.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, it is a great misfortune that the consideration of the pending joint resolution should have been delayed in this House until this late hour in the session. It is also a great misfortune that so little time should have been given to its consideration. So I thought yesterday. I think now probably the length of time given to its consideration is far too great. Evidently the House cares nothing about it one way or the other, or whether it is voted up or voted down. I had expected yesterday to give at some little length my views upon the pending measure; but I shall content myself with a very brief statement and leave it to the consideration of the empty seats before me. To say that this is an important measure is to state what ought to be apparent to every person who has read the joint resolution. It involves a change of the Constitution of the United States in two important particulars. And I want to say that we ought to venture very carefully upon any amendment to the Federal Constitution. I had intended to give my views somewhat at length upon the question of when we ought to consider a proposition to amend the Federal Constitution; and I shall only do so briefly, and very briefly at that.

I do not believe that any political considerations whatever should enter into the question of the amendment of the Federal Constitution. No amendment should be proposed to Congress or voted upon in Congress through any spirit of party faction. We should not amend the Constitution at the demand of any political faction or political party. Every amendment to the Federal Constitution ought to be responsive to a demand of the people, founded in justice and in reason. Whenever we shall respond to a demand of a political party, whatever that party may be, in changing the Federal Constitution, we are venturing upon dangerous grounds. It is an instrument which should ever be regarded as sacred, to be amended only when there is some overwhelming demand of the people, well founded, and when it is in the interest of justice.

Now, the present joint resolution contemplates a change of the Constitution in two important particulars. First, it is a change in the mode of electing United States Senators; second, it proposes to change the Constitution in relation to Federal control in the election of United States Senators. So that the joint resolution embraces two distinct propositions. While I might be willing to yield my assent to one proposition, to change the mode of the election of United States Senators, I am unalterably opposed to a change in the Constitution relative to the control of the Federal Government in such elections; and I had prepared, Mr. Speaker, an amendment which I propose to offer if the time should come, and if it is proper to offer it now, I will offer it, or if not so, I will ask to have it read so that gentleman may understand that I shall offer it when the opportunity is afforded. I ask to have it read, because upon that amendment I desire to base some of my remarks.

Strike out all after the word "vacancies," in line 7, down to and including the word "Senators" in line 10; and also strike out all of lines 21, 22, and 23.

Mr. NORTHWAY. It will be observed, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that this proposed amendment which I shall offer and ask members of the House to vote upon is to relieve the joint resolution of all that part which proposes to change the Constitution relative to the control of the election of Senators by the Federal Government, and to leave alone the one proposition—the mode of electing Senators. I believe it to be unwise at this time to put these two amendments together in the same resolution.

The friends of the measure, in proposing a change in the mode of election of Senators, are anxious, I have no doubt, to see that prevail. It will be readily understood here that whatever we may do is but one step in the change of the Constitution. What we do must go to the Legislatures of the various States, and must be sanctioned by three-fourths of those Legislatures before our action shall become a part of the organic law of our land; and it is absolute folly for us to get up any proposition to amend the Constitution when we know that the proposition will not receive consideration at the hands of one-half of the Legislatures of our States.

And so I say to the friends of the measure, those who desire to see the Senators elected by the people, why not submit that proposition, and that alone, for the consideration of the States, so that the States can act freely upon that matter and not be burdened with something else which will cause them to vote against any such proposition as that. So I believe my amendment, which I shall propose, will be in the interest of that very proposition, and will aid in its adoption if it shall pass Congress by three-fourths of the States of our Union. I believe as firmly as I believe anything that if you leave the joint resolution as it now stands, you will not in my day, or in the day of any person who is present here, see it receive the affirmative vote of three-fourths of the States of the Union.

So it is practically to destroy forever the hope of changing the Constitution as to the mode of electing United States Senators if it is coupled with the other proposition to amend the Federal Constitution in its control of those elections. I shall return to this point before I close. I would be very glad to vote for the proposition, pure and simple, to provide for the election of United States Senators directly by the people, and should this joint resolution be relieved from the objection which I have against it I shall vote for it; otherwise I shall vote against it.

In saying that I shall vote for it, however, I want to express myself very briefly as to my reasons. I want to say, in the first place, that I disagree entirely with the report of the committee reporting this measure in some of the statements that it contains. I want to call attention to some of the statements in that report. I am entirely opposed to standing here in this body and charging the other branch of the legislative part of this Government with corruption, with being purchasable or purchased. If there is any one thing that each branch of Congress ought to do it is to see to it that the dignity of the other branch is maintained.

There are passages in the report of the majority reporting this bill to which I can not subscribe. There is no minority report, but I should have submitted one had I been here when the matter was presented to the House, and so I take this occasion to express strongly my dissent from some of the matters contained in the report. To be specific, I shall call attention of the House directly to some of these passages in the report. First let me call attention to a statement on page 2, which I read:

> The knightly courtesy which has always distinguished the intercourse of Senators in the parliamentary battles of the past, and made the Senate of the United States in the eyes of mankind the most imposing, deliberative body in the world's history, has been a powerful agency in elevating the public sentiment of our people and kindling afresh the dying embers of patriotism in the country. Yet it is gravely doubted in the public mind, if the press of the country is to be considered its true exponent, whether such courtesy can be used, without popular indignation, as a cloak for enacting Senatorial falsehoods.

Just what that language means I can not distinctly understand, but I wish to express my entire dissent from this implication of Senatorial subsidy or enacting "Senatorial falsehoods."

I pass to page 4, from which I read this extract:

> The public press for years (in each recurring year) has been teeming with legislative scandals in the election of Senators until bribery and corruption are, we fear, in some localities, fast becoming recognized as a part of the legislative function, while the capacity of the pocketbook rather than that of the head is regarded in like places as the measure of Senatorial equipment. Committees of investigation and the grand juries of the States have been unwilling or unable to detect the frauds, so skillful have the manipulators of it become, until at last an outraged public sentiment has become aroused and has found its just expression in the proposed amendment.

I disbelieve that entire statement. I wish to express here my strong opposition to giving currency to any such statements. This proposed change will not do away with complaints about the election of Senators. A charge of corruption against a Senator is not a charge against the mode of his election, and that is the question that we are dealing with. In this proposed change of the Federal Constitution we are dealing with the mode of electing Senators, and does this committee, or does anybody, say that the mode itself is necessarily subject to corruption and to bribery?

I am opposed to making any such charges. When such a charge goes from the House of Representatives against the Senate of the United States, what have we a right to expect of the people in their opposition to a legislative body? I submit that such statements and such charges are demoralizing. I am well aware that newspapers and individuals, for political purposes, have charged bribery in the election of United States Senators, but I am not aware that it is charged that such evils have resulted from the mode of electing Senators, and, I repeat, that is the question we are dealing with here, and not the question of charges of bribery against certain individual members of the Senate.

I am opposed to heaping or attempting to heap disrepute and dishonor on the Senate in connection with the proposition to amend the Federal Constitution. The Senate must pass upon this question as well as this House, and is it believed that we can use as an inducement for that body to adopt this joint resolution the argument that the Senators are believed to be, and are not only believed to be but are, corrupt? Can we expect to influence the Senate of the United States to adopt this proposed change by any such argument as that? Again, on page 5 of this report I find this:

> The money which corrupts, by purchase, the member of the Legislature for Senatorial elections has debauched him as a servant of the people he is sworn to serve in local legislation. The corporation that can enter the halls of a Legislature and lay its unholy hands upon the members, claiming them as its own in the selection of a Senator, has already destroyed the hope of a pure administration of the local affairs of the people of that State by polluting the source from which such administration is derived. Under the specious guise of interest merely in the Senatorial election, Legislatures are debauched and the purchased member in the Senatorial election can hardly pose as the unbought and the unpurchasable tribune of the people's local rights. If the charges of corruption in Senatorial elections are true, the reflex action on the legislation in the States, incident to such corruption, must be immeasurable in its destruction of the rights and liberties of the people of the States.

Again:

> It is provided that such elections shall be held at the times, places, and in the manner as prescribed by the Legislatures of the States.
> 1. Corporate interference in the election of Senators and the corrupt use of money, as openly charged in the public press of the country and believed by many, have finally crystallized public sentiment in favor of the election of Senators free from any outside influence, whether it be corporate, individual, or governmental.
> (2) This clause simply guarantees that the States shall elect their Senators in their own way, as to them may seem proper, without Federal supervision, as they have been elected since the foundation of the Government, for no attempt has ever been made in the history of the Government to apply Federal supervision to the election of Senators.
> (3) If a condition of things could be imagined when it would be both constitutional and proper to apply Federal authority to the election of Representatives in Congress, we submit that its application to the election of representatives of sovereign States (Senators), the units of constitutional organization, is a very different proposition.

I have not time to pursue this thought, though I should like to do so; but I want to repeat that I am utterly opposed to charging upon the Senate of the United States that it is a purchasable body, that it has been purchased, or that it is a body which represents fraud and perjury. I stand here to defend Senatorial dignity. I believe that the Senate of the United States is one of the grandest, if not the grandest, of all the legislative bodies on the globe; and while it may be true that unworthy men occasionally find seats there, as they do in this House, it is not proper for a body like this to charge such abuses upon the Senate as a whole.

Again the report states, on the first page:

> The necessity for the passage of such an amendment to the Constitution has increased rather than diminished since that time. Indeed, each year but adds to the strength of the argument that the Senate should, by a change in the mode of its election, be made more sensibly responsive to the demands and voice of the people than has heretofore existed. The present Congress has greatly intensified this feeling, and the change seems to be demanded by every consideration of propriety and justice. Originally ordained as a breakwater against the fiery democracy, "fresh from the people," it is now, in the popular mind, believed to be, under the guise of "Senatorial courtesy," an open obstruction to the popular will.

Again, on page 2, I find this:

> So radical in some sections of the country has the feeling of hostility to the Senate become that the sentiment is freely expressed that the Senate has outlived its career of usefulness in the Government under its present mode of organization and election. And members of the House of Representatives have not infrequently been solicited to follow the example of our English cousins and pass a resolution through the House to abolish the Senate as a coördinate branch of the legislative department of the Government, as has recently been done by Parliament in reference to the House of Lords in England.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am utterly opposed to such statements as those to which I have called attention. I know that under party exigency, and, perhaps, in the excitement of the desire to have some particular measure passed, men do charge upon the Senate that it is an obstruction to legislation, but let me tell you that when history shall be written it will be found that there has never yet been a time when it could be justly charged upon the Senate of the United that it had improperly obstructed the popular will.

In our anxiety to have some particular measure passed, we may complain of the Senate and say that it is causing delay and injury to the country, but, Mr. Speaker, deliberation never ruins a nation. Deliberation in a legislative body never ruins a people. It is not true, in my judgment, that the Senate has ever in my day improperly obstructed legislation, and if the Senators represent States, I would be glad to know whether each State has not a right to be heard in debate. Is it proper for one State to be heard and for other States not to be heard? I want to express my strong dissent from the doctrine that the Senate is an obstruction to the popular will and that the popular mind has crystallized in opposition to the Senate.

If that is true, if there is any crystallization of public opinion in opposition to the Senate because it is slow, then it is our business to stand here like a bulwark in defense of the Senate, in defense of its right to full and free discussion. So much for that. If the mode of the election of Senators be changed from what it now is to direct election by the people, it will not, in my humble opinion, affect in the least any such question as that.

But it is expected that we shall get abler men in the Senate under the proposed system of election than now. I should like to know how any improvement can be expected in that respect, because at present three-fourths of the Senators are graduated from this body, and were the election made by the people, the other portion of the Senators might be supplied by members of this House if they should have their ambitions fulfilled. I should like to know why the Senate would be stronger in ability if Senators were chosen directly by the people than it is to-day.

I do not believe it possible, taking the Senate as a body, to have a stronger body. It represents the grandest thought, the best brain of our nation. It represents the conservative opinion of both political parties; and I stand here to say that in my humble opinion no change in the Federal Constitution will give us a stronger body of Senators than we have now. It is not for any such reasons that I would vote for the proposed change. I will tell you why I personally would support this proposition. I do not believe that this change would in the least do away with the idea of money being used in the elections.

Unless my memory misleads me, I have seen as many newspaper charges in regard to members of Congress having bought their way into this body as I have seen of such charges affecting Senators—I mean as many in proportion to the greater number of members in the House. I do not believe that the proposed change would operate as a check upon the use of money, if money is improperly used. I do not believe that money is improperly used in one-tenth of the cases where it has been charged that Senators have bought their way to the Senate, whether those Senators be Democrats or Republicans.

Do you suppose that if they are Republicans they would be able to hold their seats by fraud with Democrats ready to attack them? Do you suppose that Senators guilty of this charge would, if Democrats, be permitted to hold their seats there with the Republicans ready to attack them? Such charges may be made for political purposes, but they are difficult to be proved; and a charge ought not to be made when it affects the members of a body like that, unless there is some foundation for it.

Now, I do not believe that an election of Senators by the people will give us any better Senators or any purer Senators. I might say something as to popular elections, if I felt desirous to do so. I will merely throw out the suggestion that we can at the present time in our own country point out officers holding high positions, elected by the popular will, who would to-day receive not the commendation, but the condemnation of all political parties and yet who have been elected directly from the people and by the people. That, then, is not a reason which would influence me to vote for a change. Why would I vote for a change? I will tell you the only reason.

The people now indirectly elect Senators; in other words, they elect the men who do elect the Senators; they vote directly for the men who elect the Senators. The election is in that sense in the hands of the people. Now, if the people desire to take out the one intermediate step so that they shall vote directly on this question, I see no objection to it; and I believe that a large majority of the people are now anxious to take out this one step—to do away with the power conferred upon the Legislature to vote for Senators. They wish to eliminate this intermediate machinery, and vote directly upon the question.

This is an honorable desire on the part of the people. The power is one which they ought to be permitted to exercise if they demand to do so. They do demand to do so. But do not put this change on the ground that the people or their servants under the present system are bought. The people desire this change because they desire to get nearer their servants; and I believe they have a right to do so. For this reason I would vote to confer upon the people a right to vote directly for their Senators.

Ought I now to vote for this joint resolution as it stands, proposing an amendment to the Constitution taking from this body control in the election of Senators? I say no. The proposed amendment, if adopted, will leave Congress free to interpose in regard to the election of members of Congress just as it always has been at liberty to do, but Congress will be prohibited from having anything to do with the manner or form of the election of United States Senators. Is there any reason for allowing the General Government to control in the election of a member of Congress, when through the same ballot box the people would be permitted to vote for United States Senators, and Congress have no control in that matter? Is there any sense in making this distinction? I will be glad to have some gentleman show some reason for it.

Section 4, Article I, of the Constitution was written by our forefathers and accepted by all the States which became members of this Union, and it ought never to be changed. In my humble opinion it never will be changed in the lifetime of the youngest member on this floor. The report accompanying this joint resolution tells us that in the election of Senators Congress has never intervened with any law.

If they mean that, there is a mistake in the statement, for on the 25th day of July, 1866, Congress passed a very important law regulating the mode and manner of electing United States Senators, by providing that the Legislature chosen next preceding the vacancy in the office of Senator should fill it, and providing that the Legislature should meet at noon on the second Tuesday after it comes together as a legislative body, and thereafter on every legislative day shall take one ballot at least to fill the vacancy in the office of Senator until such vacancy is filled. It also provides that a certificate shall be issued, and the effect to be given to it that by virtue of the law of Congress passed on the 25th day of July, 1866, as will be found by the Revised Statutes of the United States, sections 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19. So that the report in this respect, if it means what it would seem to mean, is in error.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed, diametrically opposed, to taking from the Federal Government any power it may have now relative to the election of officers of the Federal Government. United States Senators, as was said by the gentleman from Missouri, Judge DE ARMOND, on yesterday, in opening this discussion, are not only for the State but for the nation. That is true. Ohio has an interest in knowing who the Senator shall be from Virginia, and Virginia has an equal interest in knowing who the Senator from Ohio shall be. Why? Because the Ohio Senators have as much power in forcing anything on Virginia as the Virginia Senators have in forcing a measure upon the State of Ohio.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTER. Is that not also true as to members of the House?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes; certainly it is. It is true of members of the House, but that power is left so that the Federal Government can control in the election of members of this body. No proposition is made here to take away that power from the Federal Government.

Mr. HUNTER. But does the gentleman claim, under the operation of this joint resolution, that the Senate would have no power to judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its members?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. HUNTER. Well, I did not understand the gentleman's position.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The joint resolution will prohibit the Congress from passing any law affecting the manner of electing Senators, the time of election, or anything else in connection with the subject, yet it leaves Congress full power to determine with reference to the elections, qualifications, and returns of members of the House; and so they divide this power, conferring power on the Federal Government to control in the election of members of the House and refusing the exercise of that power in the case of the election of Senators; and I say, and that is the claim I am making, that there should be no such division.

The power that the General Government has in the premises should be left untouched; and I contend and believe that this division as proposed here should not be made. I do not believe that any respectable number of the States of this Union will adopt a joint resolution which will take from the General Government the power to control under such circumstances.

But, I repeat, it has been said here that the Congress never has intervened in the election of Senators. Now, the case to which I have referred—that is, the legislation passed on the 25th day of July, 1866—was passed under exigencies which may arise again. There is no danger that Congress will interfere with the election of Senators unless some overwhelming public exigency shall arise; but if such exigency should arise, I would be glad to know why we should not have the power to meet it. Suppose a State or a number of States propose to take no part in the affairs of the General Goverment, and they can get strength enough to repeal all their laws and the Senators and Members resign, and yet there shall be found within the borders of such States a patriotic minority of the citizens who desire to maintain their allegiance and conform to the laws of the United States. Do you say that Congress should not have power to confer on that minority the power to assert their rights under the Federal Constitution? Why would you deny it to them? You are venturing, it seems to me, on very dangerous ground to do so, and one that, if adopted, would subject the Federal Government to a very dangerous strain under exigencies that might arise. Let us not do anything of that kind for political purposes or party exigencies. Whatever is done should be done because of an overwhelming demand on the part of the people themselves for a change.

Has any one of the States demanded to have the Federal Constitution amended? If so, I have failed to observe it. I have heard the claim that the people should be permitted to elect the Senators, but no one claims that Congress should abdicate all power over the election of Senators and Representatives. So, why is it here?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have briefly covered this question by the suggestions I have made, and propose to leave it. Under other circumstances I should desire to be more extensively heard on the subject, and it is a great misfortune, as I said before, that we have not more time to give full and more adequate consideration to so important a question.

I stand here to-day with a profound reverence for the Federal Constitution. It has been the bulwark of our people; it exhibits the wisdom of our fathers; it exhibits the constancy of our people, and he who would lay unholy hands on a single provision of that Constitution, and wrench it from its purposes, would do violence to his people and to his country.

We should rather stand in defense of every provision of the grandest instrument that was ever written by mortal man, an instrument which has given us liberty, an instrument which has given us freedom and made us a grand and a progressive people. Let us rather stand by every provision of that Constitution and say that not one line nor one word of it shall be removed from its place except in response to the demands of justice or the overwhelming voice of the people. It is too sacred an instrument to be tampered with. We ought not lightly to deal with it in this manner. We ought not to write a single new line or erase a solitary old one, unless it be in the interest of eternal justice and responsive to the demands of an ever progressive people.

I am opposed to the joint resolution as it stands, for the reason that it is dealing unjustly and violently with a section of the Constitution which I believe is a safeguard, even if we do not operate under it very often. It stands to tell us what we have the power to do; and oftentimes the knowledge that we can exercise a power is sufficient, without any exercise of it. Let us retain in the Constitution all the power that was given to us by our forefathers, the grand men who wrote the Constitution, destroying not one word or line of that instrument except in the interest of everlasting justice.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can offer my amendment at this time, but I will take the decision of the Chair on that point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TRACEY). The amendment is in order at present.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "vacancies," in line 7, down to and including the word "Senators," in line 10. Also strike out all of lines 21, 22, and 23.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to my friend to have the amendment considered as pending.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I do not care to take a vote on it at this time. Let it be regarded as pending, and let the discussion proceed, and we will take a vote on it after we are through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be considered as pending.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] that there are only about forty members in the House, that the House and Senate have met in joint convention, and that all of us want to go there. I believe that by unanimous consent this matter may be fixed for Monday afternoon, and I believe there would be no objection to that. This is a very important measure, and it seems to me it should not be considered when there are so few here. Anyone who objects can stop this bill, and I merely make this suggestion to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. TUCKER. I should be very glad to accommodate the gentleman, but it would be impossible. I believe the gentleman could get unanimous consent to go to the Senate if he desires.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Oh, that is nothing to me. I do not care to do that.

Mr. NORTHWAY. How much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has occupied thirty-five minutes.

Mr. NORTHWAY. By arrangement with the chairman of the committee I am to control the time on this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCETTRICK] is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. MCETTRICK. Mr. Speaker, I agree with my honored Republican friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY], that this resolution should not be a matter of political discussion. I agree with him in much that he has said. I candidly admit my respect for his opinions and the manner in which he has expressed them. I am in sympathy with the principles advocated by the gentleman, but it is my duty to sustain the committee report, which represents those principles, in my judgment, with greater force. If that report be not adopted, I am then willing to join hands with him or my honorable friend from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN], and vote for his resolution, though not for the same reasons assigned by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. Speaker, one of the main reasons urged against amending the Constitution to provide that United States Senators shall be elected by popular vote instead of by the legislatures of the several States, which is the present mode, is that it was so ordained by the framers of the Constitution. That they, being men of great wisdom, knew at that time what would be better for us now than we ourselves know, though we have been fortified by more than one hundred years of subsequent and enlarging experience. No man holds the framers of this fundamental document in deeper veneration than I do.

The foundation which they constructed is an enduring testament to the ability and power of those remarkable men, and one which will survive for all time. No stronger charter of government is known in the history of either ancient or modern times. All this we are pleased to confess and much more, were it necessary to make our case clearer. The fact of the matter is, however, the mode adopted of electing United States Senators was not the unanimous wish of the convention, as the opposition would have you believe. There was a wide difference of opinion as to what was best and wisest even at that time.

Many propositions were made, ranging from that which was decidedly aristocratic and monarchical in character to the democratic method of election by popular vote, which is provided for in the proposed amendment of election by the people. No less than four distinct methods were offered, some of which to-day must sound strangely in the ears of our American people, taught, as they have been, to regard everything tending toward centralization as subversive of liberty and popular rights.

One of these methods was to empower the President to select the Senators from a list of names furnished by the legislatures of the several States; another was to permit the members of the House of Representatives to choose the members of the second branch; a third is the present method of election by the State legislatures; and the fourth is the broad Democratic doctrine of election by the qualified electors of the State, who constitute the real sovereignty, in whom all power originally resides, from whom all power is derived, and to whom all vested authority, whether it be legislative, executive, or judicial, should be accountable.

This is the proposition now before the House. The great majority of the members of the convention were men of aristocratic ideas and lineage with but little faith in the capacity of the people for self-government. They had no previous opportunities for judgment. They were jealous of their own power and, mistrusting the people, were exceedingly cautious about letting this power slip from their grasp. As an example of this class, Roger Sherman, of Connecticut, in the course of debate gave expression to the following remarkable utterance:

The people immediately should have as little to do as may be about the Government.

Such doctrine as this would to-day relegate the public servant who presumed as much with double-quick celerity to the oblivion of private life. Some with aristocratic leanings, like Alexander Hamilton, favored the election of United States Senators by electors chosen by the people of the several States for this purpose, who were possessed of a freehold. They argued that the office should be for life tenure and upon good behavior. In section 1, article 3, of Hamilton's Ideal Constitution, it was provided as follows:

The Senate shall consist of persons to be chosen, except in the first instance, by electors elected for that purpose by the citizens and inhabitants of the several States comprehended in the Union, who shall have in their own right, or the right of their wives, an estate in land for not less than life, or a term of years whereof at the time of giving their votes there shall be at least fourteen years unexpired.

This plan even went so far as to permit voting by proxy in the Senate, providing, however, that no Senator should be proxy for more than two that were absent. It is not my purpose to enter into any extended statement of these proceedings, but to mention briefly a few necessary facts for the purpose of making clearer my argument.

Debate in the convention was lengthy and heated. At times so fierce did it become that dissolution even was threatened and it was only by the wise counsels of Franklin, Madison, Randolph, Gerry, and others that harmony was finally established and an agreement was reached.

State representation was one of the chief causes of dissension. The struggle of the smaller States for equal representation in the Senate with the larger States was finally successful and the representation of the States as units of sovereignty was firmly established. The proposition to elect Senators by the people, made by Mr. Wilson, of Pennsylvania, who from first to last fought bravely for the cause of popular representation, was lost, but one State, Pennsylvania, voting yea.

Upon the final motion to elect Senators by the legislatures of the several States, nine States voted in the affirmative and but two, Pennsylvania and Virginia, in the negative. Thus you will see that the present provision of the Constitution was not unanimous; that able champions of popular sovereignty and popular government were in the Federal convention, whose faith in the people was as supreme as the nation's strength is to-day. These champions represented the wisest and ablest statesmanship of that wonderful body. Therefore the present mode of electing United States Senators was adopted in the convention simply and purely in the nature of a compromise. It was later adopted and laid upon the forty-four great and populous States of to-day by the mistaken action, over one hundred years ago, of thirteen thinly-peopled colonies of small importance which had just assumed the title of sovereign States.

Another factor of the debate, and one which had much to do with its acceptance, was the plea for protection of the commercial and financial interests of the country upon the ground that they needed protection. It was said that the landed interests, which were then more powerful, would eventually become oppressive and overcome the commercial interests, which, it was claimed, needed nursing and encouragement. It was urged with strenuous force that the Legislatures of the several States were even more conservative and reliable than the citizens themselves; that the legislators were possessed of more wisdom in matters of currency and finance.

It was claimed that the legislatures could be more safely charged with the responsibility of electing Senators than could their creators, the people themselves, whose substitutes and agents they are, from whom they derive authority, and to whom they owe strict accountability. What a change in the thought and sentiment of to-day? What a change in conditions also? Who will say that the money interests of this country now need to be protected from the farmers of this country? Where, if the system of the fathers was intended to last for all time, as some would have us believe, are the farmers and the landed interests now?

It is an insult to the memory of the noble and patriotic fathers, who risked life and property in protest of taxation and robbery, to say that all this was done to create a government for the benefit of unscrupulous monopoly and the enslavement of posterity one hundred years later. Admitting, for the sake of argument, that the mode of electing United States Senators adopted by the wise and able fathers, worked no hardship for a time, let us contrast the condition of society then with that of the nation to-day. The country had just passed through a severe and trying ordeal. The six years preceding the adoption of the Constitution were discouraging and disastrous ones.

The Government itself was weak and its currency shaky. The outlook at times was cloudy, but out of it all came the light of the great charter, the Federal Constitution of the Union, which to-day shines as a beacon of brightness to the downtrodden and oppressed of the world. The new experiment had not yet been tried. Any change that promised better things was cheering and hopeful and found ready approval and response. As a people they were industrious, brave, and self-reliant. They were the pioneers of the nation. They were inured to hardship and accustomed to self-denial and restraint; but they had no power to look into the great future and view the grandeur and mightiness which one hundred years of our nation's life were to develop.

Had they seen it they would have been transfixed with amazement. From a little scattered agricultural nation of less than 4,000,000 souls in 1789, when the new Government was established, we have in a little more than one hundred years become a nation of almost seventy millions. We have become the most complete and best equipped nation in natural resources, commercial and manufacturing wealth of the nations of the earth. And yet the country is but in its infancy as compared with the life of other nations.

From the days of the old stage coach we have passed to the era of rapid transit, of steam and electricity; science and knowledge unknown to them have given us the telegraph, the telephone, and other wonderful inventions which have hastened the march of civilization and progress. The meager school training of that period has been substituted by the most costly school system on the earth. With yesterday's happenings of the most distant portions of our own country and the doings of the great world outside, printed together in the morning dailies and read at every laborer's fireside; with free libraries, free lectures, free schools, and compulsory education spreading intelligence among our population, we have developed into a nation of thinkers.

Take for example my own State, Massachusetts, with her system of annual elections, with her accompanying press platform instruction and debates and all her educational facilities—the people have become well versed in the principles of sound government and political economy. Mr. Speaker, one hundred years of such history have cultivated independence of political thought and, better still, independence of political action.

The people in the meantime have learned what the duties of citizenship are. They know their rights. They know that under the Constitution all are born free and equal. That the right to govern carries with it the consent of the governed; that the incontestable, inalienable, and indefeasible right to institute government is theirs alone; that the Government of this country was intended for the common good; that it was created for the protection, safety, prosperity, and happiness of all, and not for the profit, honor, or private interest of any man, family, or class of men. Yet with this knowledge they have witnessed everything that the farmer, the mechanic, and the laborer have asked for refused by Congress, and everything asked for by capital granted. They see their conferred authority outrageously abused by irresponsible public servants. They find themselves powerless either to punish or restrain.

While the country for more than a year has been hanging upon the "ticklish balance of suspense," and the angry voice of willing labor has been heard throughout the land, seeking work and finding none, with the cutting down of wages, strikes, mob riots, bridge burning, and disorders of every nature filling the land, they have seen this irresponsible body heedless and indifferent to the nation's call while their prayers and petitions have been disregarded. While charges of shameless bargaining and unconcealed corruption are being publicly made, they have witnessed the Senate entrenching itself behind its courtesy (?) rules, and refusing to act upon measures which had already passed the House with a large majority.

Whether these charges are true or not, the people have a God-given right under the Constitution to hold their public servants to strict accountability, and if found guilty to return them to private life. The spirit of unrest which is abroad is by no means, as has been claimed, of recent birth. Fifteen States of the Union have already declared in favor of the election of Senators by the people. They include Illinois, Louisiana, Oregon, Idaho, California, Wisconsin, Kansas, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, and New York, and others, while in the platforms of several other States party resolutions to the same effect have been passed.

In several State legislatures, notably that of Massachusetts, the Democratic party, through its representation, has recorded itself by forwarding resolutions to Congress asking, in the name of protection, of safety, and of popular rights, that the proposed change to election of Senators by the people be adopted. This demand, however, is not confined to any party; it embraces all, and is being emphasized from day to day with louder and ever-increasing force.

Under the present method of electing United States Senators we see a privileged money power, in whose name the framers of the Constitution adopted the present method, now grown powerful, arrogating to itself absolute control of the Government, standing between the people and the Government, while dominating and controlling legislation for its own selfish interest. Scarcely a vestige of the system that was intended for the common good remains. The name still exists, but there is scarcely a shadow of the substance. The history of all legislation for more than thirty years shows that legislation here at the capital has been for the profit and private interest of the money class and not for the public good.

How true to-day sound the prophetic words of the martyred President, Abraham Lincoln, when, warning the American people, he said, "Beware of the money power, which seeks to perpetuate its reign until the wealth of the country has passed into the hands of the few and the nation is lost." One-half the wealth of the country has already passed into the hands of a mere handful of speculators, but the nation is not yet lost. Nor will such a calamity be permitted to befall it, for—greater than party or selfish interest—the love of the American people for country and of freedom's blessings must in the end prevail. [Applause.]

But to-day two elements, opposing and hostile, representing diametrically opposite ends and aims, are arrayed against each other. One is the people, the other the plutocracy which Lincoln referred to, which has no pride of country nor of popular government; whose sole end and aim is to control legislation, to do which it must control legislatures; to control which it must either elect or buy, or both. With its natural sordidness, it does not care to do this oftener than it can help.

The protection of the nation demands frequent elections. Constant watchfulness and supervision of the public conduct of public officers are necessary. The power to recall representatives who have repudiated pledges and broken faith with the people is absolutely essential. The people must govern and govern all the time to be safely protected. To prevent this is the safety valve of monopoly and trust.

Frequent elections with popular interference are a menace to the money power. Therefore, plutocracy while in power fights against such interference. It is a natural centralizer of power. It is despotic and tyrannical in tendency, believing that all elections should be as infrequent as possible. It sneers and frowns at everything that is American excepting American money. America appears to be a good country for it to make money in, but not good enough to spend it in. It is Anglomaniac in taste, in strut, in dress, in drawl.

To it nothing seems so vulgarly shocking as to be purely American. It may be seen on our exclusive thoroughfares on any pleasant forenoon during the society season, when the streets are as dry as a chip, with its trousers turned up, because in far-away London the sidewalks are moist and damp with fog and mist. [Applause and laughter.] It can be observed on Connecticut avenue during the society season on any pleasant afternoon between 3 and 5 o'clock, driving a stilted dog cart behind a bobtailed tandem, accompanied by a something sitting upright behind with folded arms and a dreamy, far away look, with apparently no use for anything on this earth. [Laughter and applause.] It can be seen on the other side of the water, knocking at the doors of third-rate London clubs, pleading for admission and coming away with the black ball in its palm.

It may be seen, with its American millions purchasing titles of foreign nobility with the blood money of American labor wrung from the tears and toil of starving humanity and helpless childhood. In a land like ours it can be classed as neither fish, fowl or flesh, nor yet good red herring. It is the sturdy opponent of the proposed method of electing United States Senators by the people, for whose judgment it expresses absolute contempt. To secure legislation favorable to its schemes it must have Senators favorable to its schemes. The money power knows that senatorial nominations can be more easily obtained from State legislative bodies at second hand than from the people themselves. Consequently they fight tooth and nail every effort made by the people to alter the existing method.

In the popular branch, the House, which is elected by the people, the proposed amendment receives the necessary two-thirds vote. In the second branch, the Senate, which is not directly accountable to the people, it is pigeonholed. This is a very significant fact and tells the story in a nut shell. But says the opposition, elections of Senators by State legislatures are more reliable and trustworthy than they would be by State conventions, whose nomination of United States Senators, if their party controlled the State, would be equivalent to an election; while the proposed method would increase fraud and bribery.

The fallacy of this argument can be readily proved. The average member of the State legislature is not more reliable and trustworthy or in any sense more capable than is the average member of a political State convention. Political conventions are chosen bodies consisting of the most prominent members of political parties representing the localities in which they reside. They are either men who have filled elective offices in the past, desire to do so in the future, or are honorably mentioned in connection with party and political power.

The dominating influence in the selection of these delegates would naturally be the dominating influence in the nomination of candidates for the States' legislatures also. Many of these delegates have at some time in the past occupied, or aspire at some time in the future to occupy, a seat in the legislature of the State in which they are qualified electors. It may truthfully be said that men are no better than the company they keep, and that they strictly represent the average sentiment, intelligence, and integrity of their political associates.

The judgment, intelligence, and honesty of these delegates is not more pronounced while serving as members of a State legislature than it is while serving as delegates to a State convention, charged with the responsibility of nominating a capable and efficient candidate for the office of chief magistrate of the State. Under the present method of electing United States Senators, the Federal Constitution confers all the power and responsibility upon the home legislatures, bodies that not were elected to look after anything but the local interests of the State.

From their action there can be no appeal. Whereas under the proposed change in the Constitution the responsibility and power is transferred from the legislatures of the several States to the people of those States, who are the creators of the legislatures, where it rightfully belongs. As the custom is to-day, all responsibility of the Senator to any recognized authority ceases the moment he has been vested with the power to represent the sovereignty of his State. For six long years he enjoys liberty and freedom to do just what he pleases, owing responsibility for his acts to nobody.

No matter how oppressive his conduct may become nor how faithlessly his pledges may be broken, the people have no power or authority to call him to account for his acts. Nor even at the end of his six years term is any accountability rendered before he again becomes a candidate for reelection. The members of the legislature by whom he was elected have long since been retired for good. In the new body, possibly not a dozen members can be found who were privileged to vote for him six years before.

But, Mr. Speaker, in these days of political enlightenment and political independence the nomination of a party convention by no means indicates an election by the people at the polls, even if the nominating party is in the majority. The nominee of the party must now submit his candidacy to the people whose representative he proposes to become before he can be vested with authority to act. If the convention in its preliminaries and methods has been fair and honest, and the nomination in all respects a commendable one, it unquestionably will receive the indorsement of its party at the polls.

If, on the contray, the methods resorted to in making the nomination have been improper and reprehensible, and the candidate be unfit, the qualified electors have it yet in their power to repudiate the nomination of such questionable conventions and either refrain from voting or vote for whom they please. The Australian ballot system, though still somewhat defective in some States, permits this to be done. In no other way can an honest expression of the popular will be given, and the choice of the qualified electors be made manifest. From time to time charges of bribery and corruption have been openly made, both by the press and the people, in connection with the election of United States Senators, and such charges will from time to time be made while Senators are elected by the present mode.

I freely admit that charges of fraud and corruption will also be made when the Constitution is amended according to the method proposed and senatorial nominations are made in conventions. Mankind must be regenerated when the political prize is so great and the temptation to wrong and injustice so strong before honest primaries and conventions can be counted on as the rule.

But, Mr. Speaker, while the elections of Senators by State legislatures give the people no voice whatsoever in their selection in the interim between the holding of the conventions and elections, plenty of time will be afforded the qualified electors for considering the merits of the nominated candidates. The candidate of the legislature may have been but the candidate of an hour, nominated by a legislative ring, sprung on a legislative body and railroaded to the Capitol at Washington, and as I myself have seen it done by the scheme of the moment.

Unquestionably the candidate elected in the case referred to was not the approved candidate of his own party nor would he have been the choice of the opposing party, which furnished the bulk of votes in this instance necessary to elect him. A fusion of a disgruntled handful of members of his own party with all the members of the other was made for the purpose of defeating the candidate of his party. With but two or three exceptions nobody ever clearly understood why this was done nor who other than the successful Senator was the most benefited by the arrangement.

I deny that corruption, bribery, and fraud would be increased if popular elections were substituted for the present mode. That there is fraud and rascality perpetrated at the polls even under the Australian ballot system is a well known and recognized fact. Evidence of this is not wanting. Where unscrupulous men handle the machinery there always will be more or less dishonesty; but the point made by those who oppose the election of Senators by the people is that this corruption, bribery, and fraud will be increased in the nominating conventions, made necessary under the new method.

This is absurd, Mr. Speaker, on the face of it. Every man who has had any experience in political life knows that the same influence and power for good or evil which control and dominate the election of delegates to a State convention are equally potent in influencing the nomination of representatives to State legislatures. The fraud and corruption exercised in electing delegates to conventions in the interest of certain candidates would be equally potent in nominating representatives to the State legislatures in the interest of the same candidates.

But the election of United States Senators is never made an open issue in the election of State representatives. A candidate's judgment in local matters alone is considered; but if in a secret underhand way political wire pullers should nominate members for the State legislature for the sole object of electing some man to the United States Senate, then the people are deceived and injured, and local interests being disregarded must naturally suffer. In the interest of popular protection and public safety the legislature should be divorced from this power and the responsibility placed in the possession of the people to whom it rightfully belongs. I realize that infamy, outrage, and wrong are sometimes practiced in caucuses, primaries, and conventions, which if known and understood by the great community of qualified electors would be oftener met with their bitter condemnation.

Corruption and wrong do not end there, however; the evil influence can reach into legislative halls and fasten corruption there as well. The politicians who nominate and elect tools can, if they desire, use the tools afterward for the benefit of the money power and the corporation and as a matter of private speculation. Corporations not seeking legislation can be frequently ordered with threats to stand and deliver, as honest citizens are sometimes stood up by highwaymen. Bargains can be made with capital which wants special legislation.

By the aid of political wire pullers and their willing legislative tools, laws can be enacted for the benefit of capital, which empower it to fatten and flourish for all time on the sweat and blood of the very people whose misdirected votes elected these corrupt legislative tools to squeeze and rob them; while the bribed may pocket but thousands, the bribers can realize millions, and the honest, well-intentioned but deluded voters, who sometimes struggle and fight for hours in wrangling caucuses to elect these candidates, are now for all time saddled with the privilege of paying for it.

In the mean time, the man with the "pull," who has so successfully "pulled" them, struts about with the air of a king; nay even greater than that, the air of a czar; for like a czar, does he not hold the life and death of his victims in his hands? If his slightest wish be disregarded he can thrust the poor laborer from his employment in the city service (which is the citizen's service) and leave him with hungry wife and weeping babes barefooted in the city streets. Oh, the power of these men with a "pull!"

These men, who know the back entrance of every scheming corporation in the Commonwealth! Who have snatched from the citizens of the city the control of the city service. Who have snatched from the voters of the city the city patronage and the city property to use for their own personal benefit. Who, if they do not occupy high elective offices, control the nominations of those who do. Who perhaps have managed to secure appointive political positions for themselves and members of their families with extraordinary powers and large salaries attached thereto, all paid for by the citizens of the city, who have in many cases converted the city halls of the country into city hospitals for the benefit of family and self.

In some of the large cities of the country political rings, led and controlled by men of this stamp, have managed to get hold of political machines. By shameless bargaining and secret corruption, by selling their influence to corporations and capitalistic schemers, who buy the laws and makers of laws as a farmer buys cattle, they have fastened a vice-like grip upon the body politic. Their lieutenants, understrappers, and tools are, by their influence, frequently made members of political committees, officials in city councils, and members of State legislatures, aye, even of higher elective offices at times, and must patronize and serve their masters or remain at home.

These political czars are the Monte Cristos of public life, who do not waste any time on games for marbles. The world is ours is their motto, and at times it looks so. Immense political organizations are perfected by these men, embracing local district committees, with vast armies of city employés, who do their bidding only upon compulsion and by order of the heads of departments.

These organizations are assisted by the beneficiaries of city contracts and by the employés of their political partners and allies, conspiring corporations who, with the touch of the Monte Cristo button, fairly swarm into caucuses and primaries with an organized force which the unorganized voters find almost hopeless to overcome. Every trick and device known to the rat, weasel, and fox is resorted to by these autocrats of politics both before the primaries and conventions and in them to gain the upper hand. Of their methods it can be truthfully said: "No king so strong can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue." From commencement to finish there is not a single stage of the battle that the contest is not theirs, for they can count in or out as they please.

No man can become a member of a political committee or delegate to a convention who will not subordinate his will to the exactions of the ring. Every means to coerce and control is adopted. To strengthen their hold a city contract is given here, a city situation is tendered there; a delegate's father, brother, or relative obtains employment in the city service whose backbone shows signs of weakening. Everything is done through the patronage of the city and the help of the corporations to strengthen and perpetuate their power. Under circumstances like these a dishonest and unscrupulous ring can continue its control from year to year.

No caucus reform laws nor political rules ever made, even if honestly lived up to, which they never would be in a close call, could protect the qualified electors from the organized power the dishonest machine practices and the unscrupulous methods of these political usurpers.

The conscientious public servant, after years of toil devoted to the cause of humanity and the people who have honored him, who has fought inch by inch against every encroachment of cold-blooded monopoly and conspiring capital, finds his honorable service but an argument and a weapon raised against his election to higher office. Though honor is inscribed on every page of his spotless public record, without means for organization to prevent it, he sees these vampires of political life, who never knew what it was to draw an honest political breath, dictating his political destruction in the name of party organization.

The one whom neither money, self-interest, nor corporation bribery could purchase, denied all city patronage by the ring, hounded by the corporations, while either wholly unnoticed or willfully misrepresented by a subordinated press, is left out in the cold; while the other, protected and lauded by the same press, loaded with the boodle of corruption, with the patronage of the great city hall in his hands, walks off with the office besides. Their vaunted political ability and political power are corruption pure and simple. Take their grasp from the city service, the city patronage, and the corporation, and striplings will at once become their masters. "While the honest men outnumber the rogues ten to one, yet the rogues have ten times as much to say in Government as the honest men. We seek deliverance from the iron heel of a political absolutism which is willing that the city and country should go to ruin so long as power, patronage, and pelf may be the heritage of its henchmen." But, Mr. Speaker, there is a remedy for all this.

Charles Sumner, in 1851, said:

True politics are simply morals applied to public affairs.

The remedy is in the hands of the people. It is for them to apply it. By the proposed method of electing United States Senators by the people nominations under such conditions as these cited would often prove worthless. The most important factor in citizenship to-day is education. With the progress of education the political enlightenment of the citizen has increased.

Take my own State of Massachusetts, for instance. There, education is compulsory. There the public-school system has existed for about two hundred and fifty years. There, where elections are annual, political independence of thought and action, which is the safety-valve of the citizen and the protection of the State, has become a growing feature. The same is true of many other States in the Union. Nominations forced by political "bosses," which subvert the people's wishes, are continually rebuked. Evidence of the truth of this can be shown on the floor of this House this year and in recent years, and will in greater degree be seen in future years.

Therefore the claim made that an amendment which provides for the election of United States Senators by popular vote will simply mean a transfer of elections from State legislatures to political conventions, can be shown to be misleading and erroneous on the face of it. The fact is, such elections will be transferred to the people, who are the source of all power, to whom the elections rightfully belong.

There, with advancing thought and civilization, with developing consciousness of responsibility and power, the path of these cheap politicians and their business partners, the artful corporations and money trusts of the nation, will not be as smooth as they are to-day. The present system of electing United States Senators is not a feature of Republicanism. It has no connection with Democracy. It is subversive of the citizens' rights, who to-day have nothing whatsoever to say about who shall represent them in the Senate, while their enemies, political corporations and avaricious monopolies have.

Further, the opponents of electing United States Senators say: "It will absolve the larger States from living up to the constitutional obligation which provides that no State shall be deprived of equal representation without its own consent." It is impossible to conceive of an imagination that could be impressed by such an argument as this. Such a flimsy pretext will frighten nobody. The late conflict settled forever the right of a single State to secede. The compact of Union has been sealed for eternity. It is in truth a Union one and inseparable. This proposition is not to change the character of the Constitution.

It is not to deny the sovereign entity of the State. It proposes to strengthen it in its coequal representation with the sister States by going to the fountain head and source of sovereignty, the people themselves. The sovereignty of a State is in the people of the State. When you say the State should have a voice in the election of United States Senators, you mean the people who are qualified electors of the State. What constitutes a State?

Men, high-minded men, * * *
* * * * * * * * *
Men who their duties know,
But know their rights, and knowing dare maintain.
* * * * * * * * *
These constitute a State. * * *

All the world over, Mr. Speaker, the march of freedom and progress is onward. The mechanic and laborer of to-day, unlike their antecedents of one hundred years ago, are sovereign rulers and political economists. The knowledge of government and economic laws is no longer confined to graduates of Harvard and Yale. Everywhere the voice of the people is heard growing louder and louder. As education opens up, civilization and enlightenment follow, and a higher type of man is the result.

Manhood is asserting itself and manhood's rights must be regarded. But while under our Constitution, where all are born free and equal, the people have been guaranteed the broadest freedom from interference in the pursuit of happiness and the right to govern carries with it the consent of the governed, it is an undeniable fact that, of the three departments of the National Government, the House of Representatives alone is directly elected by and owes strict accountability to the people.

In the legislative department the Senate is as far removed from, and at times appears to owe as little direct responsibility to, the people whose agent and subject it is, as the Czar of the Russias. The Cabinet officers are appointed by the President, and as far as responsibility is concerned, are beyond the touch of the popular pulse. As to the Supreme Court Justices, they are appointed to life tenure by the President, owing no responsibility for their action and rendering none to anybody.

The wisdom of vesting power for a lifetime in this branch of our National Government has for a long time been a matter of serious public consideration. When a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, whose function is to pass finally on questions affecting individual and public rights, so far forgets himself as to announce an opinion at a public banquet upon a matter which is liable to come before him for judgment at any time, it is high time to order a halt.

The following extract from an open letter to the Washington Post of January 31, 1894, addressed by me, is a universally indorsed opinion of Justice Brewer's contemptuous remarks at Yale College last winter:

> That a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, whose function is to pass finally upon questions affecting individual and public rights, should hold the view that the laborer should sacrifice his rights rather than incur the risk of coming to want is startling information, but that he should gravely announce that opinion in a public address as being beyond the range of controversy, is the danger signal which, as a nation, we shall do well to heed.
> Our forefathers could have lived without destitution under the aggressions of the mother country, but they chose to risk life itself, and bore cheerfully the devastation of their properties and the famine of Valley Forge and other camps, rather than sacrifice the rights and liberties of freemen. The men who compose the great army of industry are not to be denied their rights and foreclosed from the consideration to which all free persons are entitled by false assumptions flippantly expressed.
> But when a representative of that body, which all Americans have been taught to revere as the source of wisdom and the fountain head of justice, publicly indulges in remarks which sneer at the nation's honored dead and scoff at the rights of those living who constitute the nation's support and the nation's pride, it may well be asked whether judicial life tenure, which has been supposed a safeguard, is not, on the other hand, a dangerous menace to our institutions and an anomalous feature in a republican plan of government. It could not be the experience of the judge or the training of the publicist which induced the objectionable utterance above discussed.
> Was it, then, suggested and prompted by the associations and flatteries of wealth and station, and of pride, and pomp and power, and life-long place? Whatever induced the expressions, the man who referred to an ex-President as the husband of Mrs. Hayes, and to the laborer as one whose rights and privileges are satisfied by a chance to earn his bread, will henceforth be remembered chiefly in connection with the man who exclaimed, "The public be d——d!" and that other who unintentionally said, "A dollar a day is enough for any laboring man."

With such object lessons before us; with dissatisfaction and distress on every hand; with confidence shaken and the business interests of a great nation disturbed, is it not high time that we set about to regain the power which we have so carelessly permitted to pass from our hands? Everywhere despotism, whether of kings, or rings, is meeting with popular resistance, while education and civilization are lighting the way to independence of thought and popular freedom. While in "America our own House of Lords" has been recently receiving the close and undivided attention of our urgent and clamorous American people, Great Britain has its contemporary in irresponsibility, the "English House of Lords," upon the run.

Though but the abolition of the veto power is asked for at this time, in the end nothing but the abolition of the House of Lords itself will satisfy. With the Australian ballot in Australia the Liberal and Conservative parties are continually held in leash by the Independents in Parliament. Four years ago in New South Wales the independent members of Parliament, the majority of whom were members of labor organizations and trades unions, threw one branch of the government out of power, and followed it up in the following month by throwing the other out, also.

Again in New Zealand last year the Independents, making one last effort, turned a great conservative majority into a great radical majority. A member of the New Zealand upper House had his commission thrust through a bolt hole to him while he was working on the inside of a boiler. Two other members had their commissions laid on their cases while they were setting type. Another, a porter in a warehouse, had his commission handed to him while he was lifting heavy bales of goods, and when the governor of the colony was asked why he issued commissions to common workingmen as legislators, he pointed out to them that they were among the leading citizens, made so through the adoption of the Australian system of balloting.

Mr. Speaker, this Government was instituted for the common good; it was intended for a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people; it was meant for their protection and their safety; it was created for their happiness and not for the profit and private interest of a class, whose indifference to and contempt for our institutions are a menace and a disgrace. The people have grown tired of this arrogance of popular right and usurpation of popular authority which the anarchy of wealth has forced upon them. They demand that their Government be restored to them; that it become indeed what to-day it is but in name, the Government of the people. To-day the anarchy of wealth is on top, while patriotism and principle are underneath. The great American people love freedom—next to Heaven, they revere that holy and ennobling liberty which sanctifies and lights the path to the Great Eternal. It is their right they seek, their constitutional and god-given right, and a right which, from this time forth, they mean to maintain. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who address the House on this subject may be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, if we can get unanimous consent to extend the debate for twenty minutes, I should be very glad, as it would relieve me of one or two promises for time that I have made. I ask unanimous consent to take the vote at twenty minutes past 4 o'clock, instead of at 4. Would that be agreeable to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. TUCKER. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio to extend the debate to twenty minutes past 4 o'clock, instead of taking the vote at 4 o'clock?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt, in the limited time that I have, to discuss with the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. MCETTRICK] the question of plutocracy. I agree with him that the use of money in politics is both a great and a dangerous evil, but I do not agree with him that it is as extensive as he seems to think, for if that were the case I certainly would never have been a member of Congress.

I have never had the good fortune, financially, to be a plutocrat myself, and the class of men who send me to Congress are not of that character. I do not see any objection to the passage of this bill, Mr. Speaker, unless it be, perhaps, that it gives away some of the rights and powers which the Federal Government has over the election of its own officers. But what I desire to do in the few moments that I have is to refer to some of the remarks that were made by my friend from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]. He says it is a notorious fact that in not a few instances in the history of this country, particularly in its more recent history, persons have been elected to membership in the United States Senate by the present method of selection by the Legislatures of the various States who certainly would not have been chosen had the choice been left with the people.

I do not refer to this statement with the intention of attempting to confute it. I have no doubt of its correctness. But whom did the gentleman mean? Did he refer to any who were considered particularly hardened and refractory Democratic sinners by the President, when yesterday he took the Democratic Senate across his knee and gave it such a blistering spanking, in the somewhat remarkable and very emphatic letter which he sent to the House through the medium of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means? That Democratic Senators deserved the spanking, and indeed as a rule generally merit that kind of primitive and effective discipline, I am sure no one on this side of the House will for a moment question.

But whether the giving it to them, and at the same time strongly admonishing the Democratic House of what the Executive regards as its duty, just at a time when a great measure of great national importance is under consideration in Congress, is not such an interference with the Legislative branch of the Government, as should not be made necessary by the incapacity and wickedness of Democratic members of the Senate and House, is a question of a very much more difficult and serious character. It looks to me to be a great humiliation to the country that its Congress should be controlled by a party needing such severe discipline from such a source. Its patriotism, if it has any, and its sense of responsibility to the people, ought to be sufficient to keep it in line with its pledges, and restrain its eager desire to inflict immeasurable disaster upon the nation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

He further says that obscure and unknown men are supported by powerful interests.

He refers to the Senate. I do not intend to dispute him. There is no question about the correctness of his statement. I have no doubt that he refers to a recent contest in the Senate, and therefore he refers to members of his own party in that body. Now, what I complain of and the people resent, Mr. Speaker, is not so much that these Senators are supported by powerful combinations as that they support the combinations. It is not that powerful combinations support them that we deplore so much as it is that they control them, and hence we received from the Democratic Senate the other day a tariff bill which, while it takes care of the trusts and protects the great combinations in this country, at the same time leaves the farmer the stonecutter, the lumberman, the woolgrower, the mill and factory hands, and the workingmen in our Northern towns unprotected, with diminished profits and reduced wages, or driven into idleness, and hence into poverty and distress.

Mr. DOCKERY rose.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would like to yield to my friend, but in the limited time allotted to me I can not do so.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], in the course of his remarks yesterday, felt obliged to reiterate the stale phrase which we so often hear, of the concentration of power in the Federal Government. And the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], while discussing the bill which provided for the creation of another judge, took up the same theme and very earnestly contended against the extension of Federal authority, declaring for the old doctrine of State rights which gave to this country nullification, the rebellion with its four years of civil war, and was but the other day strenuously appealed to by a Democratic governor and mayor, to sustain lawlessness, rioting, and the wanton destruction of property.

There is something remarkable and suggestive in the time when these remonstrances against Federal authority are made.

The Democrats in this Congress have formulated a tariff bill to destroy every great industry in the North. Its uniform discrimination against Northern prosperity is so marked, and so boldly stands out in all the schedules of that bill, that hardly a doubt can exist that its main purpose was a deliberate attack by the leaders and controllers of the Democratic party upon the vital interests of that section of the country which defeated them in their attempt to destroy the Union.

The very menace of this bill has paralyzed our business, and changed a condition of prosperity unprecedented in the world's history to desolation and almost universal distress.

The gentleman who has taken his seat, in his vehement disquisition upon plutocracy, excitedly exclaims, "Where are our farmers and our laborers?" I will inform him. They are impoverished, many of them pinched with want, and suffering under the blasting influence of the threatened tariff legislation of his party. In the malignant shadow of that proposed legislation our mills and factories have been stopped, our mines have been abandoned, our furnace fires have been put out, our merchants have seen their sales contract, the wages of labor have been reduced, every industry has suffered, and our workingmen have been doomed to the low plane of living of the pauperized and wretched laborers of the Old World.

This they resent. They not unnaturally rebel against it. They justly and righteously feel that they deserve no such terrible doom at the hands of the party which at present controls the legislation of the country. Why should laws so cruel in their effect be prepared for them? Great strikes result, and are attended by lawlessness and violence at the hands of the vicious, some of whom are to be found among all classes of our people.

The President calls into use the strong arm of the Federal power and represses riot. He does not wait for the governors of States to call for help. Even against the protest of the Democratic governor of Illinois, and in opposition to the wishes of the Democratic mayor of Chicago, he sends the Federal troops into the States where lawlessness exists to repress it, to protect the conveyance of the mails, secure the freedom of interstate commerce, and enforce the processes of the Federal courts.

Never before in the history of the Government, not even at the breaking out of the rebellion or in the nullification period, was the Federal authority in the States more sternly and absolutely asserted than by the present Executive in the case of the recent railroad strikes. And his action was almost unanimously indorsed in this House amid vociferous applause, especially on the Democratic side, while it found a no less enthusiastic support in the Democratic Senate.

The President found among the statutes of his country a force bill much stronger than that which Democrats have so often declared against, and which their party defeated in the Senate. I mean the bill to secure fair elections in the South and in certain great Northern cities, where Democrats control the ballot boxes and corrupt the elective franchise. He vigorously applied that force bill and enforced its execution at the muzzle of the revolver and point of the bayonet.

This concentration of Federal power you indorsed with even ostentatious applause. But, as if you realized that you had repudiated your old theory and come over onto the Republican platform, in which we have always held and announced that the United States constituted one nation, with ample power in its Constitution for self-preservation, you hasten to begin again to sing your old song of State rights and the danger of the exercise of national authority. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It is a significant fact and a glorious triumph of Republican principles, that when by the violation of one of those principles in your legislation you had reduced the greatest prosperity known in history to disaster and ruin, and driven our workingmen into idleness, destitution, and despair, a Democratic Administration found itself obliged to enforce a law involving another Republican principle, the principle of national authority to quell a riot which the menace of its own vicious legislation had indirectly produced. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman said again: Yet the people of Missouri, in their interest in legislation, are as much affected by the vote for the right as the vote for the wrong, if the vote be cast by a Senator from the distant State of New Hampshire as if it came from a Missouri Senator.

And here the gentleman is getting upon Republican ground—ground which he repudiated when he voted against Federal supervision of Federal elections. We declared that while we did not propose that Congress should meddle with local elections in the States, yet in the election of members of Congress and electors of President and Vice-President, a man in Maine is quite as much interested in the election in Missouri as in his own State, and has the same right to demand a fair election in the one State as the other; and also that it is not only the right but the duty of the Federal Government to see that the polls are properly guarded, that the voters are not deprived of free and safe access to the ballot boxes, and that a fair count and an honest return of the votes are made. Yet you who vote to indorse the use of Federal troops in the States, even against the protests of their governors, deny the right of the Federal Government to protect the election of its own officers.

The recent action of the President, while it shows in a glaring light your inconsistencies, is a triumph of Republican principles too complete and conspicuous to be overcome by any crawfishing on the part of any Democratic Congressmen who have so enthusiastically indorsed it.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DE FOREST].

Mr. DE FOREST. Mr. Speaker, I admit myself to be one of those who yield with great reluctance to any proposed change in our Federal Constitution. It is not, I think, simply the ordinary conservative sentiment which shrinks from substituting the untried for the tried, and which prefers to endure great ills that we have rather than flee to others that we know not of—not simply this that makes such innovations so questionable—but the circumstances that surrounded the origin and construction of that great instrument were of a character to invest it with a singular value, and a peculiar reverence, a value which we well may fear to mar while seeking to enhance, a reverence which solemnly forbids all rash approaches, all thoughtless trifling, all inconsiderate meddling. Think of it for a moment. There was the occasion, perhaps the most momentous in all political history, when the people of thirteen sovereign States bordering upon each other, each severally possessed of the incomparably precious right of local self-government, won by their united action from the grasp of foreign domination, were groping by the dim and ghostly light of meager and disheartening precedents, for some plan by which to preserve and perpetuate that boon for themselves and future generations against the assaults of common foes, the outbreaks of mutual jealousy, and the abuses which ambition and corruption will ever generate in a popular system of government.

The despotism of the Old World was scowling at the experiment, ardently desiring and confidently expecting its failure. The weary and discouraged heart of oppressed humanity on every shore was sending up fervent prayers for its success. The testimony of dead heroes from new graves—the incense of patriotic blood fresh spilled—the still-echoing thunders of war, like the sanctus bell, all conspired and combined to make the hour one of surpassing significance, of veritable consecration. Amid such impressive auspices, and in such a crucible of fiery experience was the work of that memorial convention of 1787 purged of every petty, partisan, and selfish ingredient, and reduced to the solid gold of purest patriotism and noblest statesmanship. And then there were the men engaged in that work—men who had pledged all that was precious to its faithful prosecution, and who had attested their fidelity to that pledge in deadly battle's ordeal.

Great men indeed, not because they were endowed with any essentially different or vastly higher natural qualities than possessed by others, but because they heard the voices and responded to the call. This is what has constituted the great ones of the world. Not only Joan of Arc, but every other soul that, listening, has caught the first sound of the herald of truth and duty and answered to the invocation. Such was the Abraham of Ur, the Moses of Midian, the David of the sheep cote, the Saul of Damascus, and such were the heroes and sages, who, laying down the sword, took up the pen and framed and executed as though with the very essence of their hearts this New Testament of our liberties.

In this age, when sham and subterfuge, when party intrigue, when demagogic schemes of slavish paternalism, when projects for the absorption of patronage, when combinations and conspiracies to prostitute the powers of the State to the purposes of private and sectional greed and ambition play such conspicuous part in the drama of public affairs, it is refreshing and it excites our wondering admiration to look back and see how those men, differing as they did widely and zealously as to the best means for the attainment of the common object, yet with one voice and united hands applied to the settlement of every doubt and every question the great criterions of elementary justice. And beyond all this, sir, it indeed seems to me, and the more I reflect upon it the more I am impressed with the belief, that there was in the evolutions of that period something far transcending all mere human wisdom and strength.

It seems as though the eternal spirit of liberty that in all former dispensations of government had inhabited only the Divine breast, manifesting itself perhaps to the children of oppression only in some awful Shekinah, some beckoning star, some burning bush, some thunder from Sinai, now descended in its supernatural force and plenitude and filled that chamber where those men were assembled and filled their hearts and minds with a truly Pentecostal inspiration. Well, then, may we hesitate and refuse, except upon the clearest evidence of the most urgent necessity, to lay the finger of change upon a line or syllable of that venerable Constitution. And yet, sir, changes have been made, and in some instances at least have proved salutary. And as a part of that very Constitution, and as a part of the wisdom and patriotism that pervades it, there is this provision for such amendment.

It was perceived that in the developments of time dangers to the body politic might arise, the distinct character of which could not be foreseen, and for which no specific remedy or safeguard could then be devised. And I am convinced, sir, that such a danger we have now encountered in that mode of Senatorial election which it is the object of the present amendment to rectify. Of the fundamental idea of the fathers, that the Senate should stand as the bulwark of the sovereignty and equal rights of the State in the Federal Union, experience has abundantly demonstrated the wisdom. Abundantly has it been demonstrated that our popular institutions, and that liberty which those institutions are designed to guard and perpetuate, are in no way so likely to be lost or imperiled as by any abandonment or relaxation of that idea.

The drift has been toward centralization, and every step in that direction is, in my judgment, a perilous departure from the safe vantage ground of individual freedom. Every safeguard which the Constitution affords against that tendency ought to be cherished, strengthened, and perfected. But in order that this supreme function should be properly discharged by the Senate it is, above all things, necessary that the men selected for that exalted duty should be of a character commensurate with its importance, and the mode of election should be such as in the highest possible degree to secure men of that character. When the Constitution was adopted, the election of Senators by the Legislatures of the several States was supposed to be the mode best calculated to attain that end. Perhaps at that period it was.

The politicians of those days were statesmen. The man who was selected from all the rest by the people of his little community to represent them in the councils of the State was so chosen because he was believed to be, and in fact was, the one of all best fitted to act in that capacity; and he accepted the mission as a duty, not as a privilege, as a solemn and sacred trust, to the faithful discharge of which the best energies of his heart and mind were to be devoted.

He went to the Legislature as he had gone to the field, to carry out in civil life the same ideas for which he had drawn the sword; to save the necks of his countrymen from needless yokes; their limbs from unnecessary fetters; their enterprise, their activity, their natural energy from vexatious intermeddling; to see that they were left in the continued enjoyment of the largest possible measure of personal independence consistent with the bare preservation of public order. He stood there as a sentinel upon guard for that purpose. The thought of pecuniary reward; of bettering his own financial condition; of special interests to serve; of jobs to carry through, was as foreign to his mind as the thought of treason had been when he faced the British cannon.

To men in State Legislatures imbued with such a spirit, it seemed to the framers of our Constitution that it might safely be left to choose for their respective States the Senators who were to exhibit the same spirit and uphold the same principles in the greater councils of the nation. I suppose, sir, it was utterly inconceivable to the noble souls who stood among the still smoldering fires of that great Revolution, and considered the awful sacrifices which that emancipated people had freely made in the contest for self-government, that any individual among them or their posterity could fall so low as to barter away so rich a possession, gained at such a cost, for base ambition or for filthy gold.

Unhappily, however, such a state of affairs has come about, and venalty and corruption, in the exercise of those political functions which were so hardly won and so generously transmitted to us, have now become the chief bane in our republican system of government, a poison that is spreading in that system every hour, is even now approaching its vitals, and which, unless repelled by seasonable antidotes, will ultimately, and at no very distant day, bring stupor and death.

The chief causes are threefold. First, an undervaluation by the individual citizen of the privileges and obligations of his citizenship. By long-continued and uninterrupted enjoyment of his liberty he has lost a sense of its value, and has forgotten that eternal vigilance is the price of its preservation. Thus, lulled to a feeling of security, he has slept at his post, or dallied with the enemy, or has allowed inferior motives to govern his public action. The merchant has said, "I will not go to the polls lest I offend my customers." The laboring man has said, "I will not take the time to vote, for I shall lose a day's wages." The manufacturer has said, "I will take no interest in politics except so far as necessary to secure governmental aid and protection for my particular industry."

The man of no occupation and no principle has said, "I will only cast my ballot for the party that will pay me the highest price." Selfish all, unpatriotic all, dishonest all, and yet none of them perhaps realizing that by such base conduct they have been boring holes in the bottom of the gallant ship in which our common possessions, our freedom, our prosperity, our social and domestic happiness, and all that can make life worth living are embarked. A second cause of this corruption and venality is found in the dangerous and wretched policy, which has in recent years been so boldly announced and made such rapid strides, the policy of governmental control of and interference with the private business concerns of the people.

Every step in the direction of that policy is an additional inducement to bribery, holds out to the purchasable elector or legislator, on the one hand, and to the corruptionist, on the other, the temptation and the opportunity to make vile merchandise of the high and sacred office of the freeman. Of course if it is an admitted principle in the conduct of our affairs that enormous private interests can be legitimately concerned in the legislation of the Federal Government—that the sugar-growers, the mine-owners, the steel-rail makers, the silver-producers, and other vast combinations of capital, can properly be entertained as parties in the councils of the nation—then it necessarily follows that they will endeavor to have their own chosen representative in the United States Senate, and that they will employ such means as are best suited to that end; and that just in proportion as those great interests transcend all others in the amount of capital they represent and the sums at stake, so far will the rights and welfare of the common people be ignored and every great principle of justice be trampled in the dust.

By these causes, developing with most portentous rapidity in recent years, it has become the first duty of all who believe in and are attached to republican forms of government in their simplicity and purity, to resist these dangerous tendencies, not only by discouraging, and so far as possible uprooting the causes themselves, but by imposing, within constitutional limitations, all suitable and wholesome restraints upon their malignant effects. Such we believe will in some measure be the result of an election of United States Senators directly by the people.

True, it will be only a partial remedy. True, even in the popular election, venality and corruption will to some degree enter, but with far less advantage and far inferior chances of success than in the election by the Legislature. In the election by the people, the opposing candidates are publicly named a long enough time before the day of the ballot for a full examination and discussion of their comparative merits. It would not be deemed feasible nor would it be conducing to victory for any party to put in nomination any candidate who had not the requisite qualifications for the office, or who was not shown and believed to be free from all sinister employment or dictation.

Therefore that class of candidates would not be apt to enter the lists, and their corrupting influences would not therefore, in a popular election, be so apt to be exercised. In the election by the Legislature of the State, on the other hand, no one knows in advance with any certainty between what candidates the choice lies. No opportunity is presented for that close scrutiny of their history, their affiliations, their business interests and connections, and their skill and experience in the duties of legislation, which a fair judgment and a just conclusion demand.

Different candidates appear and disappear and perhaps reappear in a long series of ballots, and finally, the commonwealth may suddenly find itself in the proud possession of a Senator who had never before been thought of as a candidate except by some railroad corporation, or mining or other business trust, and who would never have been thought of by them even, except as he would, in exchange for their financial promotion of his candidacy, use his high office for their special benefit. Again, in the election by the people, the number of the electors is so great as to render any attempt at general bribery impracticable.

With the safeguards that the several States of the Union have thrown about the ballot box in the way of registration, impartial inspection, and the secret ballot comparatively little can be accomplished by the unlawful use of money. And no one can know how decisive any particular degree of expenditure may be upon the result. The inducement, therefore, in such an election to corrupt methods is reduced to a minimum. In the election by the Legislature, on the other hand, the number of electors is small. Every one of them can be seen. Every one can be tempted. The character, foibles, and availability for corrupt purposes of all can be thoroughly inspected and understood, and the relative strength of the several candidates can be estimated with substantial certainty.

It therefore is known precisely how many votes can be counted upon, how many must be secured, what the expense will be; and it merely becomes a question who has the longest purse and who will make the most unscrupulous use of it. In the election by the people there is but one ballot, at stated places, on a stated day, and that is decisive. In the election by the Legislature it often happens, and can usually be so arranged by interested parties, that many ballots are taken, running through a number of days, in which, as the secret ballot and other like precautions can not be well adopted in such bodies, the preferences of each representative and the chances of each candidate can be canvassed and speculated upon and the amount of effort required to produce any proposed result in later ballots readily determined.

Obviously, therefore, we say, the election by the people is on every point better calculated to promote the honor of the Senate and welfare of the whole country. I therefore, sir, give my unqualified support to this measure. I feel that it has a claim upon our attention superior to that of any other pending or contemplated legislation. It is idle to look for wholesome and refreshing waters from fountains of defilement. It is worse than idle to expect that great popular reforms can be effected, the strongholds of hoary privilege broken down, the cries of the helpless and oppressed be heard, respected, and answered, so long as the agencies through which such relief is sought are freed from a sense of just responsibility by the pride of purchased power, or committed to the ignoble service of some private master.

This is the reform of reforms—the essential prerequisite to all safe progress, to all sound conditions.

We have staked the hopes of our country on the sovereignty of the masses. In that direction lies our only prospect of national immortality. The story of lost rights scattered all along the pathway of history admonishes us that the only sure guaranty against such losses is found in the actual, watchful, ceaseless personal exercise of those rights by the freeman himself. That as the husbandman who would thrive must follow his own plow, or the merchant who would prosper must sit by his own counter, so in the higher pursuit of freedom—

> Let hearts who love her use their own tongues,
> Let every eye negotiate for itself,
> And trust no agent—

for experience has shown that any other policy leads to disaster.

Tyranny driven out by force returns by fraud. Confidence breeds imposition. Delegation of power is the prologue to usurpation.

Let the intermediary be dispensed with. Let Senators be chosen by the direct vote of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I am told that the measure now under consideration is popular, and that it will be unpopular to oppose it. But I confess I can see no good reason for changing the organic structure of our Federal Constitution merely because of some irritation against the Senate owing to its counter action on the tariff, or because of some impatience at the delay caused by its protracted debates.

It is proposed to amend the Constitution by providing that Senators hereafter shall be elected by the people of each State, instead of being chosen as now by the Legislature thereof.

In the limited time assigned me, I shall endeavor to call the attention of the House to the arguments urged in behalf of this resolution, and to demonstrate how essentially shallow and narrow they are; and on the other hand, I shall call attention to the ideas which controlled the members of the Federal Constitution in 1787, and which led to the adoption of the existing provision.

If we examine the report of the committee, submitted by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], we find two reasons stated for this proposed change in our organic law. The first is that the Senate is not sufficiently responsive to the demands and the voice of the people; in other words, that it is too independent, that it is not dependent enough. He tells us that the present Senate is "an open obstruction to the popular will." The other reason adduced by the gentleman has been found by him in certain magazine and newspaper statements, tending to show that the Senate is unpopular.

It seems that he has read somewhere of a clamor for the abolition of the Senate, similar to that which has been raised in Great Britain for the abolition of the House of Lords, and for that reason, in order to bring the Senate once more into popular favor, we must change the mode of election of Senators; we must change in this respect the form of the Federal Constitution as it has existed ever since the 17th day of September, 1787.

Looking further into this report we find cited a report submitted by the same gentleman in the Fifty-second Congress; and there we find another reason urged for this proposed change. This reason is the alleged venality of the State Legislatures; the change must be made because money can be used, because the money of corporations or the money of individuals of large wealth is used to corrupt the Legislatures. I think, gentlemen, this is an aspersion on the Legislatures of our various States.

I can not speak for all of your States; but I know the gentleman from Missouri yesterday said that in Missouri the same Senators would have been chosen by his Legislature; and I can say for the State of New York that I am familiar with the illustrious list of our Senators, embracing the names of Gouverneur Morris and De Witt Clinton, of Martin Van Buren, William L. Marcy, and Silas Wright, of John A. Dix, Hamilton Fish, and William H. Seward, of Roscoe Conkling, Francis Kernan, and William M. Evarts, and with the records of their election, and I do not believe the election of any United States Senator in the Empire State has ever been controlled by the use of a dollar.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? Does not the gentleman know that the Legislature of the State of New York, which he so warmly commends to public favor, adopted a resolution indorsing this proposed amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. BARTLETT. I was informed to that effect by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] about an hour and a half ago; and I presume his statement, like most of his statements of fact, is absolutely correct. But because the Legislature of New York made a mistake two years ago, that is no reason why the Federal Constitution should be changed.

Let us for one moment look at this theory of pleasing the people. Let us consider the words of George Washington when the Convention of 1787 was about to assemble—while they were waiting for a quorum. What did he say about pleasing the people? "If, to please the people, we offer what we ourselves disapprove, how can we afterward defend our work?"

These noble words show that to the mind of that great man there was something higher than merely placating the populace. He believed that principle was higher than a mere attempt to please the people.

As to subserviency, I call the attention of the gentleman to an essay on the Federal Constitution by Noah Webster, written shortly after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, wherein he says that the delegate should represent the interests of the whole people; that every member should act for "the aggregate interest of the whole confederacy;" that he is not the legislator of a single State alone, but the representative of the interests of the whole Union.

And I say that we have a striking illustration lately of that fact in the conduct of one of our most distinguished Representatives on this floor, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who lost his renomination for a seat in this body because of his devotion to principle, and whose conduct has received the universal commendation of men on both sides of the House; a gentleman who, rather than yield to the unreasoning and mad requests of his constituents, held out for a sound currency and thereby lost his renomination. This instance shows that to some men principle is higher than the behests of constituents, when the constituents are in the wrong.

I would say here in respect to this proposed change, that if you want any change made in the manner of the election of United States Senators it would be better to abolish the Senate altogether. Rather than to gather up another little House of Representatives, springing from the same source of power as the present House of Representatives, it were better to wipe out or abolish the Senate altogether as now constituted. But if it remain, as it must, do not take away the conservative principle on which it is based. I wonder that some of you do not advocate returning to the single body of the Congress of the Confederation, with each State enjoying but one vote.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] yesterday, in his historical résumé, said that when the delegates from the several States met to frame the Federal Constitution they found certain elements of arbitrary government, and he specified "those features" as he called them, one, the veto power of the President, the second the life tenure of the Federal judiciary, another the long term of a Senator, and then the mode of the election of Senators. So I presume that after we have passed this first revolutionary measure, we shall have all of these other conservative safeguards of the Constitution attacked, and attempts made to break asunder these "shackles" as the gentleman calls them, and to destroy and demolish the original fabric of our forefathers.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the views of the gentleman from Missouri as to desirable changes in the Constitution are affected by the ultimate fate of two legislative measures which have come from his State during the present session, one the Bland seigniorage bill, which fell under the Presidential veto, and the other the antioption bill, which will probably not receive much favor in the Senate.

Now, let us consider for a moment one principle which we find adopted in the Constitution as it stands. We have the authority of all the great men who took active part in the debates—of James Madison and George Mason, of Virginia; of John Dickinson, of Delaware; of Elbridge Gerry, of Massachusetts, and Roger Sherman, of Connecticut—that the mode of electing the Senators was chosen for two reasons: First, because it was a filtrated method of selection; and secondly, because it gave the State——

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TUCKER. I wish to make one correction. Mr. Mason was in favor of electing Senators by the people in that convention. He did not favor the process of electing them by the State Legislatures.

Mr. BARTLETT. George Mason, of Virginia, closed the debate when the present provision was adopted in Committee of the Whole, and these were his words:

> The State Legislatures also ought to have some means of defending themselves against encroachments of the National Government. In every other department we have studiously endeavored to provide for its self-defense. Shall we leave the States alone unprovided with the means for this purpose? And what better means can we provide than the giving them some share in, or rather to make them a constituent part of the national establishment?

In other words, the main argument in 1787 in favor of the election of Senators by the State Legislatures was that thereby the State government as an entity is given an active share or part in the forming of the National Government.

That such was the fact is proven by No. 62 of the Federalist, where James Madison, in speaking of the appointment of Senators by the State Legislatures, says:

> It is recommended by the double advantage of favoring a select appointment and of giving to the State governments such an agency in the formation of the Federal Government as must secure the authority of the former, and may form a convenient link between the two systems.

And the words used by John Dickinson, of Delaware, in the debate in Committee of the Whole on June 7, 1787, are significant:

> The preservation of the States in a certain degree of agency is indispensable. The proposed national system is like the solar system, in which the the States are the planets, and they ought to be left to move freely in their proper orbits. If the State governments are excluded from all agency in the national one and all power drawn from the people at large the consequence will be that the National Government will move in the same direction as the State governments now do, and will run into all the same mischiefs.
> "A State exists as a political society; and it exists as a district of individual citizens, said William Samuel Johnson, one of the then Connecticut delegates: "In one branch of the General Government the people ought to be represented; in the other, the States."

And George Bancroft, in his History of the Constitution, tells us that in Committee of the Whole the choice of the second branch, or Senate, was with one consent intrusted to the individual Legislatures, and he adds these conclusive words:

> In this way the States as States made their lodgment in the new Constitution.

It follows, therefore, that the framers of the Constitution, were they present in this House to-day, would inevitably regard this resolution as a most direct blow at the doctrine of State's rights and at the integrity of the State sovereignties; for if you once deprive a State as a collective organism of all share in the General Government, you annihilate its federative importance.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCETTRICK] is in error when he says that the existing provision as to the choice of Senators was a compromise.

The plan he now favors—election by the people at large—secured but 1 vote in the Federal convention, while the existing provision was adopted unanimously in Committee of the Whole; and in convention, with but 2 dissentient votes out of eleven States; and the two States Virginia and Pennsylvania, which voted against the resolution, "that the members of the second branch of the Legislature of the United States ought to be chosen by the individual Legislatures," did so because they desired a representation in the Senate proportionate to population.

The sound, wise, conservative plan then adopted was no compromise. It was the only scheme which found any strong support in the body of the convention. The gentleman from Massachusetts has inveighed at some length against plutocracy and plutocrats, and has told us of the overweening danger of the money power. But he need not fear; for there is no danger in this country to-day from the aggregation of wealth in the hands of individuals.

We can take care of the rich man, the would-be plutocrat against whom so much vehemence is displayed. The danger to our free institutions on the contrary is to be looked for in another direction—from the socialist and from the anarchist who would destroy property and render life itself of but little value. And if it were safer and wiser in 1787 to guard against such influences by a derivative mode of choosing Senators, such safeguard is far more imperative to-day. At that time James Madison said of the Senate thus to be chosen:

> It will seasonably interpose between impetuous counsels and will guard the minority, who are placed above indigence, against the agrarian attempts of the ever-increasing class who labor under all the hardships of life and secretly sigh for a more equal distribution of its blessings.

And in 1788, in his great pamphlet on the new Constitution, James Iredell, of North Carolina, later a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, wrote thus:

> Considering that in every popular government the danger of faction is often very serious and alarming, if such a danger could not be checked in its instant operation by some other power more independent of the immediate passions of the people, and capable, therefore, of thinking with more coolness, the government might be destroyed by a momentary impulse of passion, which the very members who indulged it might forever afterwards in vain deplore. The institution of the Senate seems well calculated to answer this salutary purpose.

Of course, the passage of this resolution by the House will come to naught, for it can never secure a two-thirds majority in the Senate, and if ever passed by the Senate it will never be ratified by the Legislatures of the requisite number of States, for they will not be anxious to admit their suggested incompetency or to confess their alleged venality. But the resolution should die here in this House.

At the opening of the Federal Convention in May, 1787, Washington said of its projected work:

> Let us raise a stand ard to which the wise and the honest can repair; the event is in the hand of God.

The Constitution, Heaven-born, and ushered into being under Divine auspices, has lasted unimpaired in its majesty and beauty for more than a century. The standard then raised by George Washington and his fellow-patriots still floats above us. Let it not be lowered; let the honest and the wise still repair to it, and leave the event in the hand of God.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN]; and while on my feet I desire to ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who desire to do so may print remarks on this bill in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PICKLER. That refers to all members?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes. Permission has been granted already to gentlemen to extend their remarks in the RECORD. This embraces all members.

Mr. BURROWS. It is usual, Mr. Speaker, and I believe the gentleman from Virginia will have no objection to modifying his request accordingly, to fix some time to which this permission shall extend.

Mr. TUCKER. Well, say ten days from this time.

Mr. BURROWS. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then, in the absence of objection, gentlemen desiring to print remarks in the RECORD will have permission to do so on this subject, provided such remarks are furnished within ten days.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I believe I am recognized for fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to what I consider a very important question involved in this joint resolution. I shall not consume time in discussing the general principle of electing Senators by the people. I believe we can take it for granted that not only in the country at large, but in this body, there is an overwhelming sentiment in favor of restoring to the people the right to elect their Senators by a direct vote. It matters not by what course of reasoning we reach that conclusion. We may conclude that the Constitution was a compromise in the beginning; that this plan was inserted as a necessity, and that the necessity having passed away, we can and ought to change it; or we may conclude that it was wise at that time, because then they had poor means of communication, and little means of knowing the character of the men for whom they voted, but that with our daily newspapers and our telegraph facilities we need not now delegate our powers. But whatever may have been the reason for adopting the present plan in the beginning, we realize to-day that no man can stand upon the floor of this House and defend the election of United States Senators by State Legislatures and at the same time defend the election of governors and of State representatives by a vote of the people. No distinction can be made between this and other representative offices.

If the people of a State have enough intelligence to choose their representatives in the State legislature; if they have enough intelligence to choose their executive officers; if they have enough intelligence to choose their judges and their officials in all the departments of the State and county, they have enough intelligence to choose the men who shall represent them in the United States Senate. To oppose the popular election of Senators is to question the wisdom of our form of Government.

We all recognize that there is a reason for the election of Senators by a direct vote to-day that did not exist at the time the Constitution was adopted. We know that to-day great corporations exist in our States, and that these great corporations, different from what they used to be one hundred years ago, are able to compass the election of their tools and their agents through the instrumentality of Legislatures, as they could not if Senators were elected directly by the people.

It is said that conventions will nominate. Yes, but behind conventions stand the voters, and the delegate to a convention dare not support a man whom the member of a Legislature might vote for with impunity. The candidate nominated by the convention must appeal to the voters, but the candidate chosen by a legislative caucus appeals to no one, and is responsible to no one. Men have been elected to the Senate whom no party convention would have dared to nominate.

We are told that we must not change the Constitution because it is a sacred instrument. Who is the best friend, he who flatters and worships, or he who reproves and corrects? He who would make such alterations as changed conditions necessitate is a better friend to the Constitution and to good government than he who defends faults and is blind to defects. Besides, the Federal Constitution has already been amended fifteen times. Amendment was contemplated and provision made for it in the instrument itself.

Our State constitutions are frequently changed, and necessarily so, since circumstances change from year to year. Pennsylvania has had four constitutions, Missouri four, Texas three, Virginia five, etc. Each generation is capable of self-government, and must suit to its peculiar needs the machinery of government and the laws.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire, however, to dwell upon this phase of the question, but I want to call attention to what I believe to be a very important paragraph in this bill. This bill makes the election by direct vote compulsory, and includes a protection against Federal interference. We might as well recognize conditions. There is no statesmanship in shutting our eyes to the facts and asking for things which, though we desire them, yet we can not secure. If two-thirds of both Houses and three-fourths of the States were Democratic, we might be able to secure a provision which would protect the election of United States Senators and Representatives against Federal interference.

If two-thirds of both Houses and three-fourths of the States were Republican they might secure an amendment electing Senators by a direct vote and putting the control of such elections under the supervision of the General Government. But there is not to-day, there has not been for years, and probably will not be for years to come, a time when two-thirds of both Houses, and three-fourths of the States will be controlled by one political party. Therefore, it is worse than useless to attempt to engraft upon this measure a political principle which can never be adopted until three-fourths of the States are in the control of one party.

Therefore the Democrat who insists that we shall not have the election of Senators by the people unless we provide against Federal interference might just as well insist that we shall not have it for years to come. The Republican who insists that we shall not have it until we authorize Federal control might as well announce that he does not want to elect Senators by the people. We as Democrats should recognize that we must go before Republicans and ask them to vote for this bill, and Republicans should recognize that they can not secure the ratification of any amendment without the aid of Democratic members and Democratic States.

Mr. NORTHWAY. If you will strike out that provision you are talking about, I will vote for the bill.

Mr. HUDSON. My friend states that the Democrats are in favor of electing United States Senators by direct vote of the people. I want to ask him if he does not know that the Omaha platform of the Populists declared in favor of the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people? And in order to call my friend's attention to the doctrine declared by that convention, I will read the eighth section of the platform:

Resolved, That we favor a constitutional provision limiting the office of President and Vice-President to one term, and providing for the election of Senators of the United States by a direct vote of the people.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that that is in the Populist platform, and I do not think it makes the proposition any worse because it was embodied in that platform. The platform adopted by my Congressional convention also declared in favor of the election of Senators by a direct vote. The proposition is good, it matters not who advocates it. It is good whether the Democrats advocate it, or whether the Republicans advocate it, or whether the Populists advocate it. It is good because it is consistent with "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people;" and I welcome it whether it comes from the Populist platform or from any other source, or whether it comes without the indorsement of any convention.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose a substitute for this resolution—but I shall not have it read until later—which will simply leave it optional with the State whether it will elect Senators by a direct vote or not. The justification for this substitute is simple and plain. If we leave it optional with the States, we are not compelled either to prohibit Federal interference or to provide for it. The optional plan gives to the Republican party all the protection which it now has.

It gives to the Democrats who want to prohibit Federal interference all the protection which they now have. If we adopt this substitute we leave it to the States to say whether they wish to elect Senators by the people under the Constitution as it is now. If the Republicans say that will give the right of Federal interference, let them believe so and vote for it; but it does alter the Constitution. If those who oppose Federal interference fear the General Government will attempt to control the election of Senators, I say to them this bill provides that the State may go back and elect by the present plan, if it desires, and thus secure all the protection it has now. Therefore it gives to the man who opposes Federal interference every safeguard that is now provided. It gives to the man who favors Federal control every safeguard that he has to-day. My substitute neither adds to nor takes from the Constitution, so far as Federal control is concerned.

I beg you not to yield to party prejudice. I appeal to you who favor popular elections, is it not wiser to take this course than to attempt to fasten this proposition to some political question upon which the parties differ? We know that in the Fifty-first Congress the Republicans passed a bill through the House which was more stringent than the law we recently repealed in regard to Federal elections. We know that in this Congress the Democratic party repealed certain Federal election laws, and on the passage the Democrats voted for and that every Republican voted against that bill.

Need we any more evidence to prove that the Republican party stands by its advocacy of Federal control? Need we any more evidence to prove that the Democratic party opposes Federal interference? We realize that the two parties stand face to face on this proposition, and are irreconcilably divided; and is it not wisdom to choose a plan of electing which passes between the lines and does not antagonize either side?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield just a moment.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if the present Executive has not found among the statutes and recently enforced a stronger force bill, at the point of the bayonet and at the muzzle of the musket, up in Illinois than the old force bill which you voted against and which your party voted against?

Mr. TUCKER. Do you approve his action?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will answer, if I can get the time.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I will not be led aside from the discussion of this question by any such interrogatory as that; and it only shows that if you attempt to tie to this question any other question you will soon be in a field of discussion that is absolutely boundless.

Why not, then, Mr. Speaker, accept a proposition which leaves this political question out, and which will bring the people face to face with the simple proposition: "Do you wish to elect Senators by a direct vote of the people or not?"

Ah, sirs, we go forth to battle with all the allied power of wealth against us, and if we give to them a single excuse behind which they can intrench themselves we shall toil in vain for this reform. If we go forth from this Hall with a partisan principle or party tenet tied to the proposition to elect Senators by a popular vote, every railroad corporation, every gigantic aggregation of wealth will be appealing to party prejudice, and they will not appeal in vain. If we attempt to prohibit Federal interference they will go to the Republicans and say, "Are you going to give up the right of the Federal Government to control elections?" If Federal interference is authorized, they will go to the Democrats and say, "Are you going to surrender the right of self-government?"

But, sirs, if we eliminate partisanship, if we eliminate the question of Federal control, and bring it down to the naked question, "Are you in favor of election of Senators by the people?" we can defeat any combinations formed against us.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] said yesterday that men would not vote for the optional plan if opposed to popular elections because they knew that it might soon be a burning question in the States. I believe, Mr. Speaker, under the optional plan it would at once become a burning question in the States. Give to the people of the States the right to express themselves, and you can depend upon it they will secure this reform.

But, sirs, we have not now that right and will not soon have it if the proposition is to be weighted down by a great political controversy. I have such confidence in the merits of this proposition that if you leave it to the people of the States to decide I believe they will decide it right. I have such faith in the merit of the proposition, that I am even willing to leave them the power to go back, if they want to do so, because I do not believe that this revolution will turn backward.

And now, sirs, if we want to secure the election of Senators by the people we must submit a proposition free from the Republican idea of Federal interference, and free from the Democratic idea of noninterference. We may just as well cease the attempt to secure this reform if we are going to tie it to Federal-election laws. I appeal to members on both sides of this House, members who in their hearts desire this reform, members who in their own judgment believe that the time has come to give the people a chance to vote for United States Senators, Democrats, Republicans, and Populists alike, to join in a proposition which will eliminate the political question and leave us simply the question of election by the people or not.

I shall vote for the election of Senators by the people in whatever form it is presented. If I must choose between the compulsory election of Senators with Federal interference prohibited, and compulsory election with Federal interference authorized, I shall vote to prohibit Federal interference. But if it is necessary to have Federal interference permitted, as in the case of the election of Representatives, in order to secure the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people, I will vote for it in that form; but I consider the optional plan very much stronger than either.

It is not original with me, although, so far as I know, I was the first to propose it in Congress. Judge Thomas, of Deadwood, S. Dak., first suggested it to me, and I accepted the suggestion as a good one, because the plan avoided the question of Federal control, acted in the line of the least resistance, and recognized the Democratic principle of allowing the State to decide the manner of election for itself. Mr. Bushnell, of Wisconsin, presented a minority report in favor of it in the last Congress, I having then introduced a bill embodying the optional feature.

The substitute which I have presented is the only one that I have seen which avoids all other questions. If anybody has any other proposition which will avoid both Scylla and Charybdis I will willingly support it, but no such proposition has been offered and I do not know of any that has been suggested anywhere. This leaves the State to do as it pleases and avoids all side issues. No person can complain of this proposition on the ground that it takes away an existing right. No person can oppose it who does not want to engraft on the Constitution some new provision not there to-day, and I ask you are you going to load this question down with burdens that it ought not to carry?

Are you going to make its fate depend on other propositions over which people are contending, or are you going to do the patriotic thing and say that because you believe in the election of Senators by the people you will submit that proposition, simple and direct, for the people to decide upon? If you do the latter I believe that victory is ours. I believe that we can call upon the common people and summon them to the defense of their rights; but, sirs, if we ask them to accept this proposition connected with some party tenet we must go out and fight the prejudices of thirty years. Is it not the part of patriotism, is it not the part of wisdom, to strike from this everything but the one proposition and make the opponents of popular government come out in the open field and fight for the control of politics by corporations, if they dare to make such a fight? [Applause.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. EVERETT].

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, in the ten minutes, which is all that I can ask for, there is no time to give my views at length on this subject or to discuss the question as it deserves to be discussed. There is no time to discuss it in what has been allotted to us by the Committee on Rules, and I earnestly protest against the action of my honored friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], who has insisted on settling in so short a time so vital a question as the amendment of our Constitution, and has insisted on discussing the constitution of the United States Senate at a time when this House of Representatives is much more interested in the actual Senate, and what it is saying and doing, than in its future constitution. [Laughter.]

But, since it must be so, let me say a few words and touch a very few points to show that I am an old conservative, an old Tory, if you like such a word as that, who wishes to stand by the Constitution which was made in 1787 more by an act of inspiration than by ordinary human wisdom. Gentlemen have dwelt here on the wonderful growth of the country. They have dwelt on the progress of a hundred years, which our fathers at Philadelphia never could have anticipated.

Why, sir, that progress is owing to the Constitution. It is because our people were governed by that Constitution that they have spread over the wilderness. It is because we were under that Constitution that we have developed our natural resources and increased our population. It is because we were under the bond of the Constitution that we have received and assimilated the oppressed peoples of Europe. It is the Constitution that has carried us through our wars. It is the Constitution that has raised us from weakness to greatness.

It is because we have had this element of stability, it is because we have had a noble system of government which could not be changed without the greatest difficulty, it is because the whim of the moment could not alter our methods of election, of administration, of judgments, that we have risen to this colossal height. And Mr. Speaker, it is the whole Constitution that has done it. The President, the House of Representatives, the Senate, the judiciary, all have been art and part of this great system. You can not put your finger on any of the great incidents in the advance of your country without finding traces of the hand of every part of our Government.

It is not a question of bearing the ills we have rather than flying to others we know not of. It is because I do not want to change a thing that has proved so wonderfully good, for any imagined gain that I oppose this change. And, sir, in this long history, aye, down to the present time the Senate of the United States, elected by the method appointed by our fathers, has done a noble and glorious part. There is not a State represented on this floor, from Virginia, the old Dominion of my honored friend [Mr. TUCKER], to the youngest of the States, that can not show Senators of whom it is proud, chosen under this old method.

It is said that the Senators chosen by the Legislatures do not represent the people, but if you go to the people of any State and ask them whether their Senatorial representation has not as a whole and with few exceptions done them credit and given them glory and honor, they will tell you that that is indeed the case. There may be poor Senators; there may be poor Representatives; there may be poor Presidents; but, looking at the whole history of the country with all its changes and advances, in its prosperity and in its adversity, in its day of small things and in its day of greatness, the record of the Senate, the record of the Senatorial representation of the States, has been grand and glorious, and has carried out what the people of the different States demanded.

It is said that the Legislatures are subject to corruption; that they are open to bad influences. Who choose the Legislatures, Mr. Speaker? Where do those Legislatures come from? They come from the people; they come from the very ones to whom you wish to intrust the election of Senators. I believe in the people; but I believe that if there is corruption in the Legislatures it must be because there are weak spots somewhere in the people that lead to this corruption. If there is corruption showing itself in the elections of the Legislatures which choose the Senators, that corruption will show itself sooner or later in the popular vote.

Reform your Legislatures. Think more of them. Think more of what a trust you are putting into their hands. Make your Legislatures right, as you ought to, and your Senatorial delegation will be right also.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, it does not follow that because officers are chosen directly by the people, therefore they are the best representatives of the people. Let me present to you two cases by way of contrast. The judges in my State are appointed by the governor for life. I would ask any lawyer here who knows the Massachusetts reports whether the reports of the decisions of those appointed judges, with their life tenures, do not stand on an equality with the best reports of the best courts where the judges are chosen by popular election. I can assure you that the judges of Massachusetts discharge their offices to the entire satisfaction of the people.

Let me point to an opposite instance in France. It was a vast, an overwhelming popular vote of millions that gave away the liberties of France to the Emperor Napoleon III. The tyrant was at last overthrown. A republic has succeeded, which is proving one of the most stable as well as the most liberal of governments, and which has the love and sympathy of those everywhere in the world who love republican institutions. The President of that Republic is chosen, not directly by the people, but by machinery somewhat similar to that by which our Senators are chosen; yet who shall say that the martyred Carnot and the noble Perier are not far better representatives of the Republic of France and its people than was the tyrant who was elected by so-called universal suffrage?

Mr. BRYAN. Do you think our President ought to be elected in the same way as the President is elected in France?

Mr. EVERETT. No; because I believe every country should have its own way of choosing its own officers. The gentleman can not catch me in that way. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRYAN. Do you not think your illustration, then, loses its force?

Mr. EVERETT. No; I do not. I say that very often an intermediate way of election works better than a direct way, and represents the people more effectually.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may be that what I say is unpopular; it may be considered undemocratic; it may be considered old-fogyish. But I want one word to be said in this House and on this side in favor of maintaining that Constitution, which has made us what we are—no, it is the people themselves that have made the country what it is; but the people have done so because they have been guided, restrained, helped by a most wonderful machinery working together, with all its parts fitly joined and compacted. Break one part of it and I believe you will break all. The Constitution has been amended before. The first few amendments might almost be considered as belonging to the original instrument. Since then there were, before the war, certain attempts to amend it. Several of those proposed amendments were voted down. They were declared at the time to be unnecessary.

Congress passed them and called upon the States to adopt them, but they were rejected. Who remembers them now? Who can tell me what were the amendments that were passed upon and voted down? But the Constitution stays. It grows in spirit and force. Year after year develops new resources in that amazing instrument. And if the country should grow to twice its size, if we should have a hundred States and two continents under the "Star Spangled Banner," there would still be sufficient resources in the Constitution as it is for the prosperity, the honor, and the glory of every State and every citizen of our vast domain. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I was about to yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SWEET]; but as he is out of the Hall at the moment, I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] to occupy ten minutes of his time.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], and then I propose to yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TRACEY). The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] has twenty minutes remaining.

[Mr. GROSVENOR witholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, for my part I am utterly unable to treat the pending proposition as a serious one. I quite agree with the gentleman from Masschusetts [Mr. EVERETT] as to the indecency—if I may enlarge his expression—of having a question of this magnitude come up for consideration in this fashion. Here is a proposition to change the method by which the coördinate branch of the Federal Legislature is to be chosen; a proposition to change a system which has existed for a great many years in our history.

Instead of its being discussed in a manner suitable and proportionate to its dignity and importance, it is crowded into the space of a part of two days, and there is not that inclination on the part of the House to give it the consideration and attention which its importance deserves, but upon an examination of the most general character, participated in by a few members only, it is proposed to do this great act.

In addition to this the gentlemen in charge of this bill have seen fit to incorporate into it a most offensive proposition to take away from the United States its right of control, which it has by the Constitution, as to its own legislative body.

It seems to me that every circumstance attends the presentation of this thing which should make the House look upon it as a farce, and that no member can be regarded as disposing of the matter according to his mature opinion. It therefore becomes worthless as an expression of sentiment on the part of the House. It is in absolute defiance of every declaration of the Democrats of the House with regard to the deliberation which should attend the transaction of important matters.

It is thrown into the wastebasket in the same collection and in the same connection with bills for the relief of disabled officers who have not got the promotion which they thought belonged to them. To dispose of a great constitutional question like this in such a fashion is a farce and an absurdity, which I did not believe a Democratic Congress, even with an hundred majority, would attempt to perpetrate. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. I will yield time enough to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] to have his substitute read.

Mr. BRYAN. The chairman of the committee [Mr. TUCKER] states that he understands it is before the House as a substitute, as I understood it to be, and therefore it will not be necessary to read it until we come to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the substitute will be considered as pending.

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTHWAY. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has ten minutes.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in saying that I am in favor of changing the mode of electing United States Senators, and the part of this proposition that would secure their election by a vote of the people I would favor; but I do not believe that any one of the promoters of this measure expects anything like success from it. They have coupled with it a proposition that they knew would not meet with the approval of the great mass of the people. If they had been content to allow the major proposition to stand by itself I think there are very many people in the section of country from which I come who would have been glad to see it prevail; but I do not believe the people of this country propose to allow the States to take away from the Federal Government the power to have control of these elections, and allow the States alone to participate in them.

We have had too many illustrations of the evil effects of that kind of legislation, or of that kind of action in the face of, and in the absence of legislation, and I do not believe that the people propose to consent to give to the different localities absolute sway to determine for themselves just what procedure they will indulge in. Congress ought to have some control in this matter, as is now provided in the Constitution.

Allow me to suggest a want of good faith upon the part of the promoters of this proposition. If you had desired to secure an amendment of this kind, knowing the difficulties that there are, knowing that you must secure the consent of the Senate, would you have burdened it by making a party question of it in this way? If you were simply animated by an honest desire to secure a change you would not have weighted it down in the manner that you have. You have so worded this that although there are many Republicans who desire the change, none will feel at liberty to vote for your resolution, and it seems to me that you have not acted in good faith when you declare here that you have an honest, earnest purpose to secure a needed change in the Constitution. I will vote for the measure, plain and simple, to bring about such a change. I will not vote for it handicapped and burdened as it is.

You know that with the proposition as it is now, there is not the shadow of a possibility of carrying it through the Senate of the United States. You know that it is a mere pretense, and you are introducing and proposing this now solely because you want to out-Herod the Populists of your localities in their demand for this change. You know it will do no good here, in the way of securing legislation, but you expect it to do something for yourselves on the hustings. You do not want the change yourselves, many of you, but you want to appear to favor the change.

Mr. TUCKER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

[Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

[Mr. TUCKER withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "vacancies," in line 7, down to and including the word "Senators," in line 10.

Also strike out all of lines 21, 22, and 23.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have three minutes of my time remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. NORTHWAY. That amendment, if adopted, will eliminate everything from the joint resolution except the one question of the election of Senators by the people. Adopt the resolution as it is without the amendment, and you have this anomalous condition of affairs: that Congress can control as fully as now in the election of members of the House, but can not say anything relative to the election of Senators. So we shall have the people voting at the ballot box for members of the House and at the same ballot box for Senators, Congress having control so far as the election of members is concerned, but being without control so far as the election of Senators is concerned.

We shall then have a Constitution that will be like a goat with one horn. For that reason I have offered this amendment eliminating all but the proposition for the election of Senators.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the language proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Line 7, page 1, strike out the following language:

"And in lieu of all of paragraph 1 of section 4 of said Article I, in so far as the same relates to any authority in Congress to make or alter regulations as to the times or manner of holding elections for Senators."

Also, in lines 21, 22, and 23, page 2, strike out the following:

"The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators shall be as prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof."

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. NORTHWAY, there were—ayes 49, noes 119.

Mr. NORTHWAY. No quorum.

Mr. TUCKER. Let us have the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Speaker appointed to act as tellers at the desk Mr. NORTHWAY and Mr. TUCKER.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 67, nays 137, answered "present" 4, not voting 143; as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. NORTHWAY was rejected.

Mr. REED (during the roll call). I hope we shall have the unassisted judgment of the tellers.

The SPEAKER (suspending the call). The Chair did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. REED. I was simply saying that I hoped we should have the unassisted judgment of the tellers.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the tellers to determine.

Mr. TUCKER (one of the tellers). This gentleman [referring to one of the reading clerks who was near him at the Clerk's desk] is here at my request.

Mr. DINSMORE (having voted "no"). I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DRAPER].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My colleague, Gen. HATCH, requested me to secure for him two days' leave of absence on account of sickness; also to state that on this question he is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HARMER], and if present would vote "aye" on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, leave of absence will be granted to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] for two days.

There was no objection.

Mr. CULBERSON. My colleague from Texas, Mr. GRESHAM, is detained from the House on account of illness.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I am paired with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. CLARKE. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the substitute of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN]; which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert the following:

That the following amendment be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall become and be a part of the Constitution, namely: That section 3 of Article I be amended as follows:

Strike out of the third section of Article I the following words: "The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote;" and insert in lieu thereof the following words:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The Senators shall be chosen by the Legislatures of the several States unless the people of any State, either through their Legislature or by the constitution of the State, shall provide for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people, then, in such case, during the existence of such statutory or constitutional provision, United States Senators shall be elected in such State at large by direct vote of the people; a plurality shall elect, and the electors shall have the qualification requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature."

The question being taken on agreeing to the substitute, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. BRYAN)—ayes 78, noes 66.

Mr. TUCKER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Pending that, I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. As I understand, there is a special order for this evening—the session for pension bills.

The SPEAKER. There is.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TUCKER and Mr. BRYAN were appointed as tellers to act during the call of yeas and nays.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry: Suppose the roll call is commenced, would it be continued beyond 5 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. It would have to be concluded.

Mr. TUCKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The yeas and nays are ordered on this question. Now, is it in order to take a recess until to-morrow, and let the matter come up then?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. REED. It is in order to ask unanimous consent to do so.

The SPEAKER. Of course by unanimous consent it might be done; but the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess now as of 5 o'clock.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And then the yeas and nays will be in order in the morning.

Mr. REED. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry. In case unanimous consent is not given, the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock, or as soon as the roll call is concluded, would it not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that it was not the intention to take away the Friday night session.

Mr. REED. Then I will make another parliamentary inquiry. Is there anything to make this a continuing order to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered.

Mr. REED. It is considered ordered by the resolution adopted?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the previous question on the final passage of the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then it comes up to-morrow as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. It will come up to-morrow.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is right.

Mr. BRYAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made and the Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll. The gentleman from Virginia, Mr. TUCKER, and the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. BRYAN, will please take their places as tellers.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 88, nays 108, answered "present" 2, not voting 153; as follows:

So the substitute was rejected.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. GEISSENHAINER with Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, for this day.

Mr. KILGORE with Mr. WALKER, until 8 o'clock p. m.

Mr. TATE. Mr. Speaker, on page 9067 of the RECORD I am recorded as not voting. I was present and voted "no" on that roll call.

Mr. RAY. I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. He is necessarily absent and desired me to say that if he were present he would vote against this proposition. I would vote for it.

Mr. DINSMORE. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with Mr. DRAPER. I voted in the affirmative.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to withdraw my vote. I voted to make a quorum. I am paired with my colleague Mr. HOUK.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The House will now take a recess under the rule until 8 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted to business from the committees named in the rule. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] will preside at the evening session.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Mr. BROOKSHIRE, as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is in session pursuant to clause 3, Rule XXVI, for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, with Mr. EVERETT in the chair.

PATRICK KELLEHER.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6405) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Patrick Kelleher, late private Company C, Thirty-eighth Illinois Volunteers.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill was pending last Friday night, when no quorum voted.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I hope that bill will be withdrawn, and that it will not be pressed, because it will only obstruct business. If that bill can be passed over, I hope we may have an opportunity to consider some really meritorious bills. I move that that bill be laid aside for the present.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, what bill is this?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the title of the bill.

The title of the bill was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum was made last Friday. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] is in charge of the bill. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN], chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, asks unanimous consent to pass this bill over without prejudice, for the present. Is there objection?

Mr. LOUD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Patrick Kelleher, late a private of Company C, Thirty-eighth Illinois Infantry, by removing the charge of desertion standing against his name and granting him an honorable discharge from said service.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I hope the gentleman from California will not object to my request.

Mr. LOUD. I have done everything that was fair and reasonable in regard to this bill. I have offered to withdraw it on previous occasions, and my offer was not accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to this bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emolument of any kind shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I make the point of order that the point of no quorum was pending and it is still pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina make the point that no quorum is present?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Yes; I make the point.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. It is not in order to make that point until some vote is taken.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. That point can not arise without a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I think that the status of this bill is this: When we adjourned on last Friday night for the want of a quorum tellers had been ordered, and that is the parliamentary status of the bill now. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I will call for a division, and shall make the point of no quorum, and insist upon it. My idea is just this: We have just begun the evening session, and we have ample time to send out and get the presence of members. If they are in earnest and mean that they want Union soldiers to have pensions they ought to be willing to come here and give them pensions by producing a constitutional quorum. I shall insist on the point of no quorum in order that a call of the House may be had, that we may send out and get these people who are playing the hypocrite from one Friday night to another here in Congress.

Mr. LOUD. Regular order.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Let them come here and give up some of their pleasures. That is my idea about the matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement which will occupy only two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be allowed to make a statement.

Mr. LOUD. If I may have two minutes in which to reply, I shall not object.

Mr. PICKLER. Debate is not in order, is it?

Mr. LOUD. No, debate is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana wishes to make a statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement that has just been made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT]—and I know that he makes it in the utmost good faith—I want to say that we have two hours and a half, by limitation of the rule. In two hours and a half we can not get a quorum here, but we can expend from $250 up to $1,000 in trying to get a quorum here, and then we shall be compelled to adjourn.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Let me suggest right there that if we spend that time to-night, by next Friday night members will know that they have got to be here, and in that way we shall finally get a quorum.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been tried frequently, not in this Congress, but in previous Congresses; and I am sure that if a call of the House is ordered and the Sergeant-at-Arms is sent out to bring in absent members, it will simply mean a waste of time and a waste of money and the passage of not a solitary bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, further, if I may be permitted, that bringing a quorum will not help this matter any. When any of these bills are called up a member who gets the floor can hold it for an hour, and we would not be able to pass more than two or three bills if we had a quorum. We were assured several weeks ago that if we would not call up those bills for pensioning widows, as we finally agreed to do, and did, gentlemen would not make the point of no quorum.

Now, after we have put aside that class of bills and reached another class, that agreement, it appears, was merely a rope of sand, and the point of no quorum is again made. There is no good faith shown in carrying out that agreement. When we agreed to let those widows' bills go back, it was understood by the House that these factious objections would not be made, but they are made to another class of bills, in order to defeat all this class legislation, in my opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JONES. I desire to make a few observations on the bill.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to make a statement before the gentleman proceeds in respect to the real business before the House. The amendment to this bill had been adopted, and the House was dividing on the motion to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation. That is the status of the case. You can not go back to the amendment of this bill. This bill has passed the stage where that can be done, and we have got to dispose of it without any further debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is now informed that the amendment was agreed to, and the question as the Chair now understands it is on the motion that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. JONES. It is to that motion that I desire to address myself.

Mr. LOUD. I believe that it is the universal rule of the House, where tellers have been appointed, that the procedure must revert back to that. Debate had closed. I do not think that there is any doubt as to the status of this case, and that it must go back to where it was last Friday night.

Mr. POST. On last Friday night we had a case in exactly the same position, and the Chairman directed the tellers to take their places at once.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to discuss that question. I do not know that I am prepared to do so. I supposed from the remarks made by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that the matter would be taken up just as if there had been no direction for tellers to take their places on the point of no quorum being made. My recollection is that on that question the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole has held both ways. Indeed I am very sure that the matter has been decided both ways this session. I do not want to raise that question; but simply desire to submit a few remarks in the event that the Chair holds that this question can be debated at this stage of the proceedings.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Virginia as speaking on the point of order raised by the gentleman from California as to the stage of the bill?

Mr. JONES. I was speaking to that just now, but I simply say to the Chair that I have no desire to make the point on that question. I simply want to say that in the event the Chair holds, as has been held in the Committee of the Whole, that the bill was in a position that it could be discussed, that I desired to submit a few remarks on the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, last Friday night when the House adjourned tellers had been ordered, and while we were proceeding under that order, it was disclosed that there was no quorum present. The roll was called, and at the close of that the House adjourned. Now, this bill comes up in the regular order at this meeting, and it seems, under the rule, we should begin right where we left off and proceed with a vote by tellers. Debate has closed upon this case, and surely nothing remains except to proceed with the vote by tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is raised by the gentleman from California as to the parliamentary status of this bill. Tellers having been ordered before the committee rose, the question is whether the bill resumes the position in which it was left on the rising of the committee, and whether tellers should be reappointed. The Chair would state, with proper diffidence from his inexperience, that he believes that point has been ruled both ways. The bill has been thoroughly debated, and the Chair will rule that the bill stands as it did on the last Friday night session, and that tellers should take their places. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] will take their places as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 24, noes 2.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of no quorum. If that is insisted upon the Chair, under the rule, must direct the roll to be called.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana (during the roll call). I ask unanimous consent that the further call of the roll may be dispensed with, and that the committee may rise.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I object.

The roll call was resumed and concluded.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask that those who have failed to respond on the first call be excused.

Mr. HULL. If that is done, we shall have to adjourn.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. We must adjourn anyhow.

The CHAIRMAN. There is only one call of the roll in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. A motion is in order to excuse any individual who may be absent on the second roll call.

The CHAIRMAN. After the Committee of the Whole rises, the gentleman may make his request that members be excused.

The committee rose; and Mr. BROOKSHIRE having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. EVERETT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6405) to remove the charge of desertion pending against Patrick Kelleher, late private, Company C, Thirty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, the committee had found itself without a quorum, whereupon the Chairman had directed the roll to be called, and now reported the names of the absentees to the House to be entered on the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll call shows that 53 members, less than a quorum, have responded. The names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain that request. The gentleman can be recorded as present.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5894) making appropriations for the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895; and

A bill (H. R. 6108) making appropriation for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. BERRY, on account of sickness in his family.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to report back from the Committee on Indian Affairs the bill making appropriations for the Indian service for the year 1895. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to request unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate, one hundred and twenty in number, be nonconcurred in and a conference asked with the Senate thereon.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana reports back from the Committee on Indian Affairs the Senate amendments to this bill, and by direction of the committee asks unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and request a conference thereon. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. ALLEN, and Mr. WILSON of Washington were appointed conferees on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. REILLY, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, reported in lieu of House bills 305, 4411, 6947, and 6950 a bill (H. R. 7798) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for the settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain railroads, and to secure to the United States payment of all indebtedness of certain companies therein mentioned; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. REILLY. This is a substitute, and I ask that it be printed and the original bills lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The bills in lieu of which the gentleman reports the bill, the title of which has just been read, will be ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. REILLY. I also ask leave of the House that members of the committee who desire to submit minority views will have that privilege.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the minority will be permitted to file their views, to be printed with the report of the committee.

There was no objection.

SECTION 553, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. COOPER of Florida, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4950) to amend section 553 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DIRECT TAX, WEST VIRGINIA.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at ten minutes before 1 o'clock. The Clerk will read the title of the bill called up by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] on yesterday just before the expiration of the morning hour.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 119) to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the governor of the State of West Virginia the sum appropriated by the act of Congress entitled "An act to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861."

The SPEAKER. This bill is in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House that this resolution was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], who is unavoidably detained from the House this morning. Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, who introduced the bill, I think originally, feels a great interest in it, and I ask unanimous consent that the second morning hour may be dispensed with to-day in order to allow these gentlemen to be present when this bill is considered in the next morning hour to which the committee is entitled.

Mr. REED. Are we in the second morning hour now?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

Mr. REED. Can not the committee take up some other bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. I am perfectly willing to take this bill up on Tuesday. I do not wish any advantage, I will state to the gentleman.

Mr. REED. But suppose you lay it aside, and take up some other bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill was pending in the morning hour.

Mr. CULBERSON. I would say in response to the gentleman from Maine that we would not be authorized to do that under the rule; we have only one hour left.

Mr. REED. Very well; I have no objection to the request of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks for unanimous consent that the morning hour be dispensed with for to-day.

Mr. BURROWS. Do I understand that the committee is to have the hour at some other time?

The SPEAKER. The committee had an hour on yesterday, and under the rule they can use another hour if necessary.

Mr. BURROWS. And the committee would lose its right to day?

The SPEAKER. It would lose its right——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that.

The SPEAKER. What is the suggestion of the gentleman?

Mr. CULBERSON. That the committee would lose its right to call this up in the next morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that when the committee finished this bill it would not be able to call up any other bill. That is to say, it would lose its right after the consideration of this bill, if its consideration occupied the hour.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is correct.

Mr. BURROWS. When will this come up?

The SPEAKER. The next day that we have a morning hour. This simply postpones its consideration for to-day.

Without objection, the morning hour will be dispensed with for to-day.

There was no objection.

REINSTATEMENT OF CERTAIN RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

That Saturday, the 21st instant, after the second morning hour, the House shall proceed to the consideration of House bill 3249; that at the hour of 4 p. m. the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the amendments, if any, and on the bill to its final passage; and the vote shall then be taken without delay.

This order not to interfere with conference reports, or revenue bills, or general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3249) for the reinstatement of clerks dismissed from the Railway Mail Service between the 15th day of March and the 1st day of May, 1889.

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the rquisition of the Postmaster-General the Civil Service Commissioners shall certify for reinstatement, whenever a vacancy may occur, in a grade or class no higher than that in which he was formerly employed, any person who was dismissed from the Railway Mail Service, through no delinquency or misconduct of his own, between the 15th day of March and the 1st day of May, 1889, or who was dismissed from said serviceafter said last-named date upon any order made prior thereto.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the morning hour has been dispensed with, I ask unanimous consent that the final vote on the bill and amendments be taken at 3 o'clock, instead of 4. I apprehend that two hours equally divided will be ample time for the discussion of this question.

Mr. BRODERICK. There is a minority report in this case, and there are a number of gentlemen on our side of the House who will want to be heard, and I should not be willing to make that agreement at this time.

Mr. REED. What is the proposition?

The SPEAKER. That the vote be taken at 3 o'clock instead of 4.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to its being taken at half past 9. Postponement would be very satisfactory.

Mr. BURROWS. Inasmuch as the rule fixed the time for taking the vote at 4 o'clock instead of 3, there might be many members who would not be here until the time fixed in the order for taking the vote, namely, at 4 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, the bill designated by the order of the House is the bill introduced by myself and referred to the Committee on Civil Service Reform, upon which no report has yet been made. A similar bill, introduced by Judge Houk, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and has been reported and is upon the Calendar. The latter bill is No. 4017. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be substituted for the one designated in the order, and that whatever amendments are proposed be offered to that bill instead of the one designated in the special order.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that can be done. The Chair hears none.

Mr. REED. What is the nature of the request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] states that the bill designated in the special order (H. R. 3249) was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and has not been reported; but that an identical bill (H. R. 4017) was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. The bills are identical, and the gentleman asks that we substitute H. R. 4017 for the bill (H. R. 3249).

Mr. REED. I will ask, before consent is given, how does that help the matter?

Mr. BYNUM. It does not make any material difference. We desire to take up the bill which is on the Calendar, instead of the one that has not been reported.

Mr. REED. What is the difference?

Mr. BYNUM. A very slight difference.

Mr. REED. Have we any rights against the bill as it stands now which we should lose by the substitution? We do not want to lose any chance of beating a partisan bill of this kind—purely partisan.

Mr. BYNUM. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. REED. If this is a mere desire on the part of the gentleman from Indiana to have his name attached to a partisan bill we have no objection, but if it in any way facilitates the passage of it we do object.

Mr. BYNUM. I am very sorry to disappoint the gentleman in the point he is attempting to make. I am asking to dispense with the bill that I introduced, and to take up one that Judge Houk introduced, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and was reported by that committee, and which is upon the Calendar.

Mr. REED. Then, if the gentleman desires to be generous, and to bestow the honor upon somebody else, that I have no objection to, on his assurance that it does not deprive us of any opportunity to beat such an utterly unsuitable bill.

Mr. BYNUM. It is the bill of Judge Houk that I am asking to substitute.

Mr. REED. I think it would look a little more decent to have it that way.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House will consider the bill H. R. 4017.

There was no objection.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, at no time in the history of the country was the clamor for office so insatiate as upon the accession of the last Republican Administration to power. The old-timers, who had spent most of their lives in office and had become imbued with the idea that the Government positions belonged to them, reënforced by the younger element, which had been almost entirely excluded from the public stalls, came rushing to the capital by the thousands, eager to receive a crumb from the table supposed to be so plentifully supplied.

Rich and bountiful, however, as was the feast, it only served to sharpen the appetites of the hungry horde that swarmed through the lobbies; invaded the White House, filled the Departments and drove the members of the Cabinet to seek refuge in their private rooms. The endeavors to appease this inordinate demand resulted in the most brutal assaults that were ever committed upon the civil service of the Government. Amongst the many open, flagrant, willful, and corrupt violations of the principles of the civil service during this period was the dismissal from the Railway Mail Service of nearly 3,000 efficient Democratic clerks and the appointment in their stead of inexperienced Republicans.

The facts, briefly stated, were as follows: On the 1st day of December, 1888, President Cleveland issued an order placing the Railway Mail Service under the classified service, to take effect on the 15th day of March, 1889. It has been openly charged and never denied that the order, as it left the hands of the President, fixed the date on which the service should become classified the 15th of February instead of the 15th day of March, as contained in the order when promulgated by the Civil Service Commission. In view of what subsequently transpired, it does not seem improbable that such was the fact.

I shall not, however, at this time question the genuineness of the order as it was finally issued, as the transaction was criminal enough without including the elements of forgery. Mr. Harrison became President on the 4th day of March, 1889, and within one week after his inauguration issued an order extending the time when the order of Mr. Cleveland was to take effect from the 15th day of March to the 1st day of May, 1889. That this extension was made for the sole purpose of enabling the Administration to make a raid upon the service in the interest of its partisans is as clear as the noonday's sun. From the 4th day of March, 1889, the day on which Mr. Harrison became President, to the 15th day of May, a period of less than two months, seventeen hundred Democratic clerks, with records for efficiency and integrity theretofore unequaled, were summarily dismissed, and their places filled with virulent Republican partisans without experience.

A more outrageous partisan assault upon a class of Government clerks who had earned and secured their positions by laborious and efficient work can not be found, even in the history of the unparalleled greed of the Republican party. What excuse was offered for this raid upon the most important branch of the public service? The present Administration is ready to protect this branch of the public service from impairment by the strong arm of military power, but the last Republican Administration was willing and eager to destroy its efficiency for the sake of rewarding partisan heelers.

No rascal, however, was ever caught in the perpetration of a crime so heinous as that he was unable to conjure up some excuse for its commission; and so it was in this case. It was claimed that no lists had been secured, and therefore that it was necessary to extend the time, that examinations might be held and the same prepared. Even if it had been true that sufficient opportunity had not been given to make all necessary arrangements, the necessity for the retention of the experienced men until such were completed was only the greater. This excuse, however, was but a shallow pretext.

Three months and more had elapsed from the time the original order had been issued. Why had nothing been done during this long interval of time? For no other reason than that the Civil Service Commission, composed at the time of a single member, and he a bitter Republican partisan, not only failed to discharge its duty, but in every conceivable way obstructed the efforts of subordinates to do so. Strong as the facts and circumstances are in support of this belief, we are not dependent upon them alone to prove this assertion. True, the hen's tracks all lead to the fox's hole, but we have an eyewitness to reynard's incursions into the barnyard.

On the 14th day of last February, there appeared in the Washington Post an interview with Mr. Cumming, who, during the time this fraud was being practiced was a clerk under the Civil Service Commisssion, and was cognizant of how this pure and inmaculate branch of the public service was manipulated in the interest of the Republican party.

"I see," said Mr. Cumming, the promotion examiner of the Treasury Department, "that Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, in a letter objecting to the Houk bill with reference to the reinstatement of the railway mail clerks, states that the classification of the Railway Mail Service was ordered by President Cleveland to take effect on March 15, 1889; that it was absolutely impossible for the Civil Service Commission to complete the classification by that date, and that in consequence it was deferred until May 1. This statement is misleading in what it contains and in what it omits, and presents a highly inadequate picture of the spoils system in active operation in the spring of 1889.

"The facts are somewhat as follows: On January 4, 1889, President Cleveland ordered the classification to take effect, as he supposed, on February 15, 1891. By some mistake the date was made March 15, 1889. The Civil Service Commission then consisted of only two members, Messrs. Edgerton and Lyman. Some time in February, through the instrumentality of Mr. Morgan, a Democratic clerk on the Commission's force, the President was informed that no steps were being taken to hold examinations and secure lists of eligibles by the prescribed time. Owing, it is said, to an unsatisfactory interview on this subject with Mr. Edgerton, who might naturally have been expected to be zealous in protecting Democratic employés in office, President Cleveland dismissed him. As the result of this proceeding, and of the Senate's failure to confirm George Thompson's nomination, made immediately thereafter, the Commission consisted solely and exclusively, until about the middle of May, of Mr. Lyman."

"On March 11, after more than two months of dillydallying, and four days before President Cleveland's order should have taken effect, President Harrison was informed in writing by Mr. Lyman, the sole Commissioner, that it would not be possible to have the list of eligibles ready before May 1. I was during that entire period, and for a year and a half thereafter, chairman of the central board of examiners of the Civil Service Commission. I was away on leave, and holding examinations from Virginia to Texas, inclusive, between January 1 and about March 20. I had examined at least a dozen Texans and a lot of Tennessee ans for the Railway Mail Service, and other examiners had held examinations in other States. On my return to Washington, sometime late in March, I found that no effort had been made to mark any of these papers, and that the marking of the regular departmental papers was way behindhand."

"You got at them at once, of course?"

MR. LYMAN'S BUSINESS METHODS.

"Not by a decided majority. The board was always subject to the orders of the chief examiner, W. H. Webster, so far as concerned the work to be done. Although—not to speak of the railway mail papers—the work on the regular departmental papers was greatly in arrears, I found that he had ordered one of the most efficient members of the examining board to rearrange the old examination papers in the Commission's vault, and to make selections from them for publication in the next report of the Commission, which would come out late in the summer or fall.

"Two or three other members of the board were put at work getting upexamination questions for candidates for the position of post-office inspector—a business that could have kept without spoiling for two or three months. One or two others were sent out on examination trips, and during most of this time we were ordered to mark the departmental papers, giving them the preference over the railway mail. I do not often indulge in herculean tasks, and never take a pride in work for its own sake; but if I had not got two or three members of the board switched off on these railway mail papers with me, and had not put in full time week days and Sundays, during the month of April, I believe Mr. Lyman would have been in a position to state to President Harrison that the classification could not go into effect until June 1."

"You saved your distance, however, didn't you?"

"Yes. But by this time the deed had been pretty effectually done. A few days after Mr. Lyman told us that, according to his information, out of 4,500 clerks in the Railway Mail Service, the Democrats had, on retiring, left 1,500 Republicans in office; that now, in May, the Republicans had left 1,500 Democrats in office; and that he thought that was about fair.

Mr. Speaker, the members of the Civil Service Commission assume to be paragons in the administration of the law. They have arrogated to themselves a guardianship over all other officials, and loudly proclaim their superior virtue; and yet I venture that there can not be found in all of the Departments of the Government a proceeding that discloses such moral turpitude.

That it was the purpose of Mr. Lyman to delay and obstruct action until Mr. Wanamaker and his subordinates could displace all the Democrats that could be spared from the service is too patent for argument. The vigorous efforts of Mr. CUMMINGS thwarted his purpose, and when the 1st of May arrived the conspirators had not completed their work. Nearly a thousand Democrats who had been marked for dismissal were still in the service, which had already been crippled.

The fact, however, that the service became classified on May 1, did not deter such reformers as Wanamaker and Lyman from completing the work they had begun. They had gotten rid of 2,000 Democratic clerks, the other 1,000 must go, and after this date, when the service became fully classified, 927 more clerks were dismissed and 1,212 were appointed by the disgraceful and fraudulent practice of antedating the notices of removals and appointments. It was upon the consummation of this last act that Mr. Lyman congratulated himself that the job had been so successfully accomplished. As an evidence of the persistent manner in which this conspiracy was pursued I append as an exhibit to my remarks the report of the Postmaster-General, giving the number and dates of appointments, made after the 1st of May, regardless of the civil-service regulations.

True, the legality of this proceeding was questioned; but that was only a slight impediment, as the Attorney-General came to the rescue with an opinion that such proceedings were strictly legal, and no doubt he felt like quoting the sentiment of his subordinate in Indiana, who, in speaking of the letter of Col. Dudley advising the division of voters into blocks of five in charge of trusted leaders with necessary funds, "only indicated a patriotic interest" in public affairs. The President, the Attorney-General, the Postmaster-General, and the Civil Service Commissioner were all parties to this disgraceful transaction.

In all the history of spoils and spoilsmen there never has been such a merciless and cold-hearted raid made upon a class of Government officials who were diligently striving to discharge their duties, while their superiors were secretly plotting their removal. The measure under consideration, although introduced by the late Judge Houk, was drafted by myself, and is, in substance, the same as a bill introduced by myself at an earlier date.

At the time I first introduced the measure I had but a faint conception of the extent to which this abuse had been carried. As soon, however, as the contents of the bill became known, I began to receive letters from every part of the country, giving information as to the ruthless manner in which Democrats had been discharged and the indecent haste in which Republicans had been rushed into their places. While I am not at liberty to give the names, I can not refrain from publishing extracts from a few of these letters, as they convey more forcibly than I can express, the manner in which the work was accomplished:

NEW YORK, September 23, 1893.

DEAR SIR: As one of the twenty-five hundred clerks removed from the Railway Mail Service, in Harrison's memorable raid of April 30, 1889, I wish to heartily thank you for introducing your bill providing for the reinstatement, as fast as vacancies occur, of employés of the Railway Mail Service, dismissed by the Republicans for political purposes.

I will say right here that I do not want to be reinstated in the Railway Mail Service. I have a good position in this bank and do not care to exchange it for any political office.

Your bill is a good, just one, and it should pass both Houses of Congress without a dissenting Democratic vote. Hundreds of bright, keen-witted, ambitious young Democrats went out of the service on the above-mentioned date, and they were mostly succeeded by a lot of old, superannuated, broken-down slow coaches who were a disgrace to the Republican party—to which, of course, they all belonged. This was not the case in every instance, but was generally true.

The young blood infused into the service by the advent of zealous Democrats raised the standard of the service more than 20 per cent. In 1884, and previously, 75 to 90 per cent was considered an excellent record in the examinations, but the standard commenced to go up, and when I left the service in 1889, 96 per cent was considered quite a necessary mark. The old-timers growled and sputtered at the way they had to study, but the young Democrats had set a hot pace, and as the old fossils had to trot double, they had to do their level best to keep up or drop out entirely.

I know of quite a number of good, capable men who have applied for reinstatement, and they have received cool replies from hold-over Republicans now in office down there in Washington, stating that their applications have been "placed on file," or "referred to the proper officers."

Yours, very truly,

Hon. WILLIAM D. BYNUM,
Washington, D. C.

MICHIGAN, September 22, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I notice in to-day's papers that you have introduced a bill for the reinstatement of postal clerks so unceremoniously bounced by the Harrison Administration between March 1 and July 1, 1889. This act on your part is one of the most praiseworthy movements yet made in Congress. I had the honor to serve as postmaster at this city from September 1, 1885, to November 17, 1889, and in the period referred to in your bill I witnessed the most unjust and outrageous removals of thoroughly competent men for no other reason than the poor fellows, like myself, happened to be Democrats. And right here, let me say, some of the most thoroughly competent men ever employed in the service was found amongst the number.

The Republicans in their hurry to get Democrats out and Republicans in disorganized the whole service of the country, and in a number of instances put men in who had been bounced for incompetency by the Democratic party, not for politics. The present Superintendent of Railway Mail Service stood by and saw these outrages committed, and by silence sanctioned the whole proceedings, and on general principles ought to have been bounced long ago. He is a stench in the nostrils of all Democrats who know about the affair. These removals were by all odds the most outrageous treatment of loyal and competent Democrats in the entire history of our Government, and I am very thankful that there is one Democrat with grit enough to try to right this fearful and outrageous wrong.

Very respectfully, yours,

Hon. WILLIAM D. BYNUM,
Washington, D. C.

ST. JOHNS, MICH., October 6, 1893.

MY DEAR SIR: Please accept my thanks and gratitude for the interest you have taken to champion the cause of the poor railway postal clerk by the introduction of a bill before the House for their reinstatement over civil service, without examination. I myself, being one of the number of 2,000 or more competent and efficient Democratic clerks, have positive knowledge that the method of J. Lowrie Bell, General Superintendent under the Harrison Administration, dated the red letters of removal back in order to obtain priority to May 1, 1889, thus many being decapitated at the rate of three a minute in violation of all law and decency; a great slaughter, indeed. This great wrong is hardly given a passing notice, while the perpetrators of it hold high official positions. Such a renovating was never known before in the history of the Government.

In nearly every instance young, vigorous, active, healthy, and ambitious clerks were decapitated to make room for the old, decrepit, and worn out clerks, who were compelled from incompetency to give way under Mr. Cleveland's former Administration. What is the result? To-day the Railway Mail Service is 95 per cent Republican. J. Lowrie Bell, the man who did all this work, still holds the position of Second Assistant Postmaster-General; all the division superintendents and their chief clerks are Republicans, and not a Democrat clerk or appointee therein has got into the service in six months in this Democratic Administration. Mr. BYNUM, to just scan your eye over the doings and manipulations of the Civil Service Commission, during the reign of Harrisonism, it discloses the fact to be that through the machinations and party zeal of the Republican majority of said Commission, the so-called eligible list contained on an average of nine Republicans to one Democrat, among the successful applicants passing the per cent to make a record.

Very respectfully, yours,

Hon. W. D. BYNUM, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

UTICA, N. Y., September 22, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I wish to thank you for the bill introduced by you providing for the reinstatement of railway postal clerks removed by the Republicans in 1889. Not for myself, but on behalf of many worthy men.

I was in the Railway Mail Service four years and by hard work and study made good progress, as I was promoted to the position of chief clerk at Syracuse, N. Y., with about 7,000 miles of route and 225 men to take charge of.

I know what the service is and what it needs. In my own case I was given a certain number of days in which to hand in my resignation. Others were not given even that consideration (?) and were brutally removed. In many instances removals that were dated prior to May 1, 1889, were held and forwarded along in the fall, for they did not dare remove too many men at once, as they had already greatly demoralized the service. Some of the best Democrats and best clerks in this State—men of most excellent records and characters—were thrown out, though they were in every way better fitted to fill the positions than the green hands and absolutely poor clerks appointed in their places.

Yours, very truly,

Hon. WILLIAM D. BYNUM,
Washington, D. C.

NORWALK, OHIO, October 7, 1893.

DEAR SIR: As president of the Democratic EX-Postal Clerks' Organization of Northern Ohio, it gives me pleasure to assure you of our hearty indorsement of the bill introduced by you, for the reinstatement of Democratic clerks removed by the Harrison Administration between certain dates. It is an act of justice, which will rectify at least in part, the ravaging of this Department of the Government by John Wanamaker. We have cited this great wrong to the Civil Service Commission, and while they admit that in some instances it would be just to reinstate, yet fear that some innocent men might be removed from the service by doing so.

Let me say to you, honored sir, that among these innocent men, in whom the Commissioners take so much interest, are many of the conspirators who, when General Vilas was Postmaster-General, threatened, and did form an organization requiring Republican clerks to write out their resignations, committing same to a committee which was authorized to forward said resignations to Washington in case of removal of any of said clerks in favor of Democrats, and thus block the railway mail system of the United States. A Republican official who was aware of these proceedings notified the Department at Washington, and eighteen of the arch conspirators were removed forthwith. Almost the first act of the Harrison Administration was to reinstate many of these men.

I am, most respectfully, yours,

Hon. WILLIAM BYNUM, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

TURKEY, N. C., October 2, 1893.

DEAR SIR: Having seen in the New York World that you had introduced a bill with reference to the restoration to service of ex-Democratic railway postal clerks, and being one of the number myself for whose purpose your bill is intended to secure justice, I herewith beg leave to thank as well as congratulate you for the position thus manifested in our behalf.

During Mr. Cleveland's first Administration I received an appointment as railway postal clerk on one of the trunk lines of the country from Washington, D. C., to Wilmington, N. C., passed my examinations on all the post-offices in Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, with a general average about 95 per cent; was always prompt and attentive in the discharge of my duty; had my absolute appointment and was actually under the civil service, but was removed May 21, 1889, to gratify a Republican that wanted my place. All the Democrats on mine and connecting roads were removed in like manner.

I am, yours,

Hon. WM. D. BYNUM,
Washington, D. C.

The most striking illustration, however, of the haste to get rid of Democrats and restore Republicans comes from the State of Maine. I am conscious that the living of that State are always willing to sacrifice themselves in the public service, but I was not aware that in their eagerness to get rid of Democrats they were willing to make requisition upon the sextons of the cemeteries. Such, however, seems to be a fact.

WATERVILLE, ME., October 16, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I received a copy of the bill you introduced in the House a short time since, and I wish to say to you that the ex-postal clerks are very much pleased with your undertaking and trust the bill may pass.

In their haste to remove us from the service they appointed one man who had been dead for more than one year, another who was nearly dead and who told the superintendent that he could not go back, he was too sick; but they made him go on, as they said, till they could straighten things out. He went on, and after a few months resigned, went home, and died.

Yours, respectfully,

Hon. WILLIAM D. BYNUM,
Congressman, Washington, D. C.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in the palmiest days of Congressional spoils, I venture that a record more replete with a debauchery of the public service can not be found. It has been said by way of excuse that during Mr. Cleveland's Administration a large number of experienced and efficient clerks were dismissed from the service to make room for Democrats, and that the great number of changes made during that period had impaired the efficiency of the service, and that it was necessary to restore the old clerks to improve its standard.

This assertion is unqualifiedly false. It is a well-known fact, and the official records support me in this statement, that the service had never before attained the standard of efficiency it did during the Administration of Mr. Cleveland. From the very beginning the service began to improve. From the annual report of the superintendent of the Railway Mail Service for the year 1893 I take the following figures:

Table of pieces of mail distributed, etc., annually since July 1, 1883.

Year ending June 30—	Number of pieces distributed.	Increase.	Number of errors.	Increase of errors.	Decrease of errors.	Number correct to each error.
1884	4,519,661,900	538,145,620	1,167,223	203,745		3,872
1885	4,948,059,400	428,397,500	887,704		279,519	5,575
1886	5,329,521,475	381,462,075	1,260,443	372,739		4,228
1887	5,834,000,875	505,479,398	1,734,617	474,174		3,364
1888	6,528,772,060	694,081,185	1,765,821	31,204		3,694
1890	7,947,723,600	820,886,470	2,769,245	991,950		2,834

It will be seen from the foregoing table that in 1885, the first year of Mr. Cleveland's Administration, there was an increase of nearly five hundred millions of pieces distributed, and a decrease in the number of errors of nearly three hundred thousand. In 1884 there were 3,872 pieces correctly handled to each error, while in 1885 there were 5,575 pieces correctly handled to each error. During the year 1888, the last wholly under Democratic Administration, 7,026,837,130 pieces were handled, with a total of 1,777,295 errors.

To each 3,954 pieces correctly handled there was one error, while during the first year, wholly under Republican Administration, from July 1, 1889, to July 1, 1890, 7,847,723,600 pieces were handled, with a total of 2,769,245 errors. The increase of errors was 991,950. The first year under the reforms inaugurated by the Republicans, the number of pieces correctly handled to each error fell from 3,954 to 2,834. It thus appears from the official records that in the first year of Mr. Harrison's Administration the standard of efficiency was reduced nearly 28 per cent.

I know it to be a fact, as stated in some of the communications I have quoted, that at the time the Democratic party first came into power there was a large number of old men in the service that had to be removed for inefficiency. To show how lax the Administration prior to 1885 was, at the transfer station in Indianopolis were four or five clerks, not one of whom had ever been required to take a case examination.

At the end of Mr. Cleveland's Administration every clerk had a record of examinations and could take a run on the Pittsburg, the most important line, in case of an emergency, and yet all these competent and efficient clerks were removed and the old ones restored, and from that day to this the record of examinations opposite their names is a blank, no examination having been required, and not one of them could separate the mail on the most important line to the edge of Marion County.

The great haste to restore these men will be easily comprehended when it is known that they were active partisans, one of them at least having left his post of duty in 1884 to serve as a deputy marshal, on election day, in Cincinnati under Lot Wright. I regret seriously that this bill has encountered the opposition of Mr. Roosevelt. I believe it is a just and meritorious measure, but of course it would be high treason, if not sacrilegious, for this House to pass it after he has communicated to this body his opposition.

In his message he says that this bill is the same as the one introduced by myself and referred to the Committee on Civil Service Reform, which was never reported. The reason that it was never reported by that committee was because a quorum could never be gotten together to report anything. Continuing, he says:

The classification of the Railway Mail Service was originally ordered by President Cleveland to take effect on March 15, 1889. It was absolutely impossible for the Civil Service Commission to complete the classification by that date, and in consequence the classification was deferred until May 1, 1889, at which date it actually took effect (nine days before I myself was appointed Civil Service Commissioner). Advantage was taken of the delay in the classification to turn out twenty-three hundred Democratic clerks, replacing them, without examination, with Republicans. This was undoubtedly an outrage. But in the first place it is all wrong to try to cure it by committing another wrong now, and in the next place it was an outrage precisely similar in character to what has occurred in a number of the newly classified post-offices within the last eight months.

In 1889 the Republican administration of the Post-Office Department took advantage of the necessary delay in classifying the Railway Mail Service to make sweeping removals of Democratic clerks and replace them by Republicans, just before the law went into effect.

The shallowest crossroads pettifogger could set up a plea more consistent with truth and more convincing in logic.

According to his version there was not sufficient time to make the classification; the extension of the order from March 15 to May 1 was for an entirely legitimate purpose. The most "childlike and bland" statement, however, is that the classification actually took effect May 1. Does he not know that after he became a member of the Board, on the 9th of May, that more than eight hundred dismissals and appointments were made in violation of the very rules he says were in force?

His endeavor to place the proceeding on a parity with the removal of letter-carriers by certain postmasters, under the present Administration, is demagogical. The cases are not similar. Under Mr. Harrison there was a willful failure to classify the service, a fraudulent extension of the time, and an open and flagrant violation of the rules of civil service after they were in full and complete operation; while under the present one, admitting all that he charges, there were only dismissals and appointments before the service became classified.

The most remarkable statement in Mr. Roosevelt's message is, that of the 2,600 clerks appointed at the beginning of the last Administration but 900 are now in the service. According to his figures 1,700 have been dropped for incompetency. This is much worse than I supposed. Why the haste to remove competent clerks and get in such a large number of incompetent ones? It can be explained upon no other theory than that it would be easier to get rid of an incompetent Republican than a competent Democrat, conscious that they would have no difficulty in securing another Republican under the manipulations of the civil-service law.

I venture that if Mr. Roosevelt will furnish the names of the 1,700 appointees from the classified lists, he will find that more than 90 per cent are Republicans.

The Civil Service Commission commands neither the confidence nor the respect of the people. Its principal endeavor has been to prevent incompetent Republicans from being discharged and competent Democrats from securing positions. No Department of the Government needs a renovation more than does this hypocritical body.

The measure under consideration should and will receive the commendation of every sincere civil service reformer.

It simply gives to a set of efficient persons the right of restoration to the service when vacancies occur, without further examination. Why compel those who have been in the service for two, three, or four years and demonstrated their qualifications to go through an examination to prove their fitness? The Civil Service Commissioners no doubt are opposed to the measure. Under its provisions a Democrat may occasionally find employment in the service instead of a Republican through their manipulations.

Mr. MCNAGNY. I wish to ask the gentleman, for information, whether it is not true that hundreds of men were appointed in the Railway Mail Service afterwards?

Mr. BYNUM. Hundreds of them were appointed afterwards. As I said, 1,212 were appointed after the 1st day of May, and between that and the 1st day of September, on fraudulent orders dated in April.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Can the gentleman from Indiana state the per cent of those who were Democrats and those who were Republicans in the Railway Mail Service at the time when that order actually went into effect?

Mr. BYNUM. I can not state that. All I can state is the number of Democrats removed, which was about 3,000 after the inauguration of Mr. Harrison.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. What was the total number in the Railway Mail Service under Mr. Harrison's Administration?

Mr. BYNUM. Between seven and eight thousand.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Can you state how many Democrats have been appointed since the present Administration came in.

Mr. BYNUM. I can not; but I am informed that it is less than 10 per cent.

I reserve the balance of my time. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

APPENDIX.

REPORT OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,

In reply to the fourth inquiry I have to state that the number of clerks appointed, reappointed, or reinstated to said service and who commenced service subsequent to the 1st day of May, 1889, though appointed, reappointed, or reinstated upon orders bearing date prior thereto, was 1,212, and the dates upon which said clerks entered upon their duties were as follows:

	No. of clerks.		No. of clerks
May 1, 1889	145	June 10, 1889	7
May 2, 1889	36	June 11, 1889	3
May 3, 1889	44	June 12, 1889	5
May 4, 1889	40	June 13, 1889	4
May 5, 1889	17	June 15, 1889	4

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully,

W. S. BISSELL,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. CHARLES F. CRISP,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, no arrangement has been made as to who is to control the time on either side of the House. By the request of some members of the committee, I will be recognized for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONEY). The gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield such time to the gentleman from Maine as he desires.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, since this bill presented by the gentleman from Indiana has met with the enthusiastic applause and approval of the Democratic party, it is perhaps well enough just to state what it is. The outgoing President, in December, 1888, proposed to bring into the civil service classification the clerks in the Railway Mail Service.

But he realized the fact that he had utilized the four years of his Administration in packing that service with Democrats, having dismissed about 90 per cent of Republicans that were then there and filled their places with Democrats; therefore, in the midst of his zeal for civil service, he recognized the utter impropriety of closing up the Railway Mail Service from the Republican party by making an order which was to go immediately into effect. He therefore gave eight days after March 4 for the opportunity for removal. That did not prove satisfactory in all its arrangements, and was only a sort of tribute to the decency of plunder.

When Mr. Harrison came into office and became President of the United States, the Civil Service Commission reported that they did not have time to make the arrangements necessary for the classification; and therefore the date of going into effect of that order was postponed to a period which might be equal to one month. Was there anything indecent or unsuitable in that? No man with any sense of fairness would for an instant say so. Immediately changes were made; and there never was a time when changes were more necessary. My district I know about. It was filled with a set of incompetent men; and the whole service throughout the country was filled with such a set of men that the complaints of business men were loud, frequent, and importunate.

Now, of the men who were appointed a very large part of them I know from a sample that I had in my own district, a very large part of them were old employés, men who had not been out so long that their reinstatement was anything but an advantage to the service; and the service was instantly improved by that action.

Then again, it is defensible from another point of view. The report of the Civil Service Commission left no doubt what ought to be done, and the result is its abundant justification. And here let me say a word in reply to the gentleman from Indiana with regard to the Civil Service Commission. That Commission, with a single exception, has been composed of men who had a real, honest zeal for the public service. Governor Thompson of South Carolina, I personally know, and I know that his action as a member of that Commission was creditable to him and honorable to the country.

Mr. Roosevelt is thoroughly well known in this House, to a great many members of it individually, and any eulogium of him by me would be entirely unnecessary; but if there has ever been in the public service a more faithful, straightforward and honorable official I ask any man present to name him here and now. He has been thoroughly just, upright, and righteous in his administration of his difficult office. No obstacle has prevented him from doing his duty.

No partisan feeling has kept him from attacking his own side whenever there was occasion to do justice, and no fear of the other side has ever prevented him from attacking them when it was necessary to do it in order to do justice, and any assaults from the gentleman from Indiana or any other source will fall entirely to the ground. I am not sure that the public service has got so much better men by reason of the adoption of the civil-service system.

I am not one of those who believe that men who are interested in politics are not men of intelligence and capacity, and if there could have been a suitable division, so that not only every man would know what appointments he had to assist in, but also that the public might know upon whom rested the responsibility for appointments, I am not entirely sure that the service would have been improved by any change. But there were many scandals arising from controversies between members of Congress, between Senators and members of the House, and our lives were rendered a burden, and, for my part, I have been very glad to have my portion of the public administration taken away from me and bestowed upon anybody else, as a matter of personal comfort. And I am bound to say further, having noticed the proceedings of the Civil Service Commission, that their action has been on the whole creditable to them.

Now, what is proposed here? It is proposed to throw open this branch of the public service to the reappointment of a set of men who went out of office amid the applause of the entire business interests of the country. Why? Simply to give an opportunity for gentlemen to force upon the Departments their personal favorites, their political friends. There is no other purpose in this bill. If there is among these men any good thoroughly satisfactory man whose service the Government has wanted, somebody has got possession of him before this time, or had until the Democracy blasted all the industries of the country.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Was it the Democracy or was it the McKinley bill?

Mr. REED. Was it the Democracy or was it the McKinley bill! Well, now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maryland is, of course, not the flower of our intelligence, but he knows better than to ask such a question as that. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. You have not answered the question, however.

Mr. REED. I think I have, and to the evident satisfaction of the House.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I do not think you have. There is a difference of opinion there.

Mr. REED. Well, the difference is only between you and all the rest of us.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. That is sufficient.

Mr. REED. It is Athanasius contra mundum, and no Athanasius in the case either! [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I was remarking when I was rudely interrupted, this is a mere partisan bill for the purpose of getting in a lot of Democrats who are not fit for anything, or else some of those Democrats that the party have turned out of employment by destroying the industries of the country. Of course, I sympathize with that class of people, but I do not think the Democratic party is the one to do them justice.

The people of the United States are going to do them justice, probably, by leaving the McKinley bill alone, because the Lord has confounded the Democratic party. [Laughter.] It reminds one of some of the stories in Scripture history where the angel interfered specially and set the wicked by the ears—set them to attacking each other and pounding each other's faces, the best thing that any of them could pound on this earth. [Laughter.]

I am sorry that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] did not frankly tell us what was the difference between this bill and the one for which he caused this to be substituted without stating what the object was. I am sorry he did not tell us frankly that this bill leaves the unprotected Postmaster-General open to the assaults of the Democratic politicians to an extent that was not even contemplated in the imagination of the gentleman from Indiana who framed the first bill.

Mr. BYNUM. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This bill is not susceptible of that construction. The first bill, the one that I drafted, provided that the Civil Service Commission should certify in these cases, but upon reflection, this service never having been in their control, of course the Commission never had the list. The Postmaster-General had a full list, had all the records, and when I came to investigate the matter more closely, I found that the duty which I had proposed to put upon the Civil Service Commission could not be performed by them, but could be performed by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. REED. Why did not you tell us that when you asked to substitute the one bill for the other?

Mr. BYNUM. It would not make any difference.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes, it would. It is evident that this bill means a practical plan of civil-service looting, while the other bill means nothing at all.

Mr. BYNUM. Under the first bill, if the Postmaster-General should undertake to enforce the rule as there provided, the Civil Service Commission would have no discretion. They could do nothing except certify the list, as they do now.

Mr. REED. In other words, your bill for which you have substituted this, would not have been effectual at all, would it?

Mr. BYNUM. Certainly it would.

Mr. REED. How would it have been effectual?

Mr. BYNUM. I think it would have been effectual.

Mr. REED. I think that anybody who reads the two bills—which I did not do at the time—will perceive that the bill which the gentleman from Indiana has caused to disappear would be entirely ineffectual, while the present bill will yield the finest results of the system which has met with the disapprobation of the American people.

Mr. BYNUM. I am very free to admit that the last bill is a "perfected bill;" and we have brought up the other in order that it should be perfected.

Mr. REED. "The last bill a perfected bill!" Then I have correctly described the "perfected bill" which has met with the approbation of the Democracy. That is all the argument it is necessary to make.

Mr. BYNUM. I want to ask the gentleman one question. How can he say the service was greatly improved by the removal of Democrats and the appointment of Republicans, when the records show that the efficiency fell 28 per cent?

Mr. REED. Simply because before the change came the complaints were universal all over this country that the postal service was never in so bad a condition as it was when President Harrison came into power, and because immediately thereupon the complaints ceased. That is a practical test, and it is sufficient. Now, you propose to undertake the demoralization of the service, and it meets with the applause of the Democratic side. I am awaiting here a protest from some gentleman on your side who did not applaud.

Mr. HALL of Missouri and Mr. OUTHWAITE rose.

Mr. REED. I really feel bound in courtesy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE].

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I was not desirous to put a question to the gentleman from Maine; I was seeking the floor in my own right.

Mr. REED. Then I will reply to the gentleman afterward.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I understood the gentleman from Maine to take the position that the Republican side of this House, and Mr. Harrison when he was President, showed great zeal for civil-service reform. I want to ask him whether he is not cognizant of the fact that Mr. Harrison, during his entire term, never said a word about extending the civil-service system by any order to the letter-carriers and others in the employ of the free-delivery offices at cities or towns of less than 50,000 inhabitants until after he was defeated in November; and then on the 15th of January following he extended the civil-service regulations to all free-delivery post-offices in cities of 50,000 inhabitants and more, for the sole and only purpose of keeping in office 14,000 or 15,000 Republican employés?

Mr. REED. I waive the fact that the gentleman has addressed to me a stump speech instead of a question; and I will answer whatever of interrogatory he has propounded. I answer in the first place, that I do not know; but if what he says is true, President Harrison was only following in the footsteps of the civil-service reformer now in the White House, who managed in December, 1888, to try to close up, to hermetically seal, the postal service after he had dropped out 90 per cent of Republicans and put in 90 per cent of Democrats. Being a Democratic President, he is of course a good man. And especially after the judgment he has shown in his description of his party in this House and the Senate, to follow such a man as that is of course creditable. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I shall occupy only about five minutes in stating some knowledge that I have in regard to the main question involved here. At the time the Administration changed on the 4th of March, 1889, and during the period covered by this bill, in the Congressional district in which I was residing at the time I requested and had put back into the service six postal clerks who had been removed because they were Republicans, and for no other reason, during the Cleveland Administration.

Every one of those men is still in the postal service, and many of them—I may say most of them—have been promoted to the highest grade of the service. During this same period of time, upon my recommendation, five new men were appointed. Each one of these is now in the postal service; and one of them has taken the gold medal for completeness of knowledge and efficiency, and there is not one of them who has not been promoted as rapidly as the rules of the Department would admit.

Of the men who were removed as incompetent, one of them had been over and over again reported prior to the 4th of March, 1889, and was finally reported as having ridden or been carried, totally insensible with intoxication, from Cincinnati to Parkersburg in the mail car; yet he had been retained in the service month after month in spite of repeated charges. To fill his place one of these new appointments was made.

Mr. BYNUM. Does not the gentleman know that during the Administration of Mr. Cleveland the Republican clerks formed a conspiracy in the shape of an organization by virtue of which they placed their resignations in the hands of one person to be delivered in case any one of them was discharged—thus organizing what might be termed a "strike," and that a great many Republican clerks were dismissed because they were members of that conspiracy?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I know nothing whatever of that. I am talking only now of what I do know.

Mr. BYNUM. Well, it is a fact, at all events.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But whether it be a fact or not, can not a man strike?

Mr. BYNUM. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it a crime to strike under a Democratic Administration?

Mr. BYNUM. Well, now, I apprehend the gentleman from Ohio will not enter into a defense of an arrangement by which the whole service enters into a conspiracy to refuse to serve the Government if one of the members is discharged.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I only discredited the story; that was all. Because I never knew in all of my experience anyone who was willing to enter into a conspiracy with others to get out of the service. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYNUM. If the gentleman applies that to the Republicans he is doubtless correct.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no doubt that conspiracies might be formed to get into the service, but never, I think, to get out of it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know of another thing, and I challenge the records of the country to contradict it. By whatever process it was brought about, the postal service of the country was in a most deplorable condition when Harrison's Administration began. I venture to say now that if the gentleman from Indiana will propose an amendment to his bill so as to provide that no man—no one of these men dismissed—shall be reappointed unless he can pass a civil-service examination up to 50 per cent of perfect, that there will not be one of those postal clerks who was discharged in my district who will ever get within a thousand miles of halfway in the service again. [Laughter.] Now, why do you not do that? The gentleman says they were competent men, competent clerks——

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not now. When I have concluded my sentence I will indulge the gentleman.

I say if the gentleman will put into this bill a provision to the effect that none but competent men, and found so by an examination, shall be reinstated, the good faith of the performance will be manifested absolutely and become apparent on the record. But without that the good faith is woefully lacking.

Mr. BYNUM. If the gentleman is not willing to trust the Postmaster-General to restore none but those having the best records for efficiency, I do not think that the bill could be framed or drafted to carry out successfully that idea.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Your Administration has the power to——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I should like to have a few minutes more.

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield four minutes additional to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, that the present Administration can take the postal service out of the civil service if it wants to. But as long as it is under the civil-service rules—and your Administration seems to be proud of it and holds on to the members of the Commission which the gentleman from Indiana has denounced so bitterly—it seems to me to be an unjust discrimination to permit men who can show nothing except a political recommendation to go back into the service, while other men who did not happen to be in the service can not go in at all except through the process fixed by the Commission.

Mr. BYNUM. I think the gentlemen from Ohio is not stating the conditions of the bill absolutely fairly. Again, I say frankly, that in drafting the bill I thought I was carrying out the civil-service idea to the fullest extent.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, now, let me see whether you are or not.

Mr. BYNUM. Let me call the attention of the gentleman——

Mr. GROSVENOR. My attention has already been called——

Mr. BYNUM (continuing). To the record of efficiency.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Indiana says that he has put a limitation upon the power of the Board; that these parties shall be reinstated unless they went out of the service by reason of "delinquency" or "misconduct." Now, what is delinquency or misconduct? What do you mean by that? Stupidity? Is that delinquency or misconduct?

Mr. BYNUM. The civil service have used those terms in connection with the rules as to restoration, and I was simply quoting the language of the Commission.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why not say, if you believe these men to be perfectly competent as you say, that they shall be eligible to be reinstated provided they can pass a moderately fair examination?

Mr. BYNUM. I will state this——

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Will the gentleman now allow a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, yes, although I believe my time is about gone; but I have no doubt the gentleman has an important inquiry.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia for a question.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman——

Mr. GROSVENOR. But I thought you wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I do, but I wanted to preface it. The gentleman from Ohio is a very distinguished member of the Congress of the United States, and I would like to know from him whether he thinks he could pass a civil-service examination such as that required for a railway postal clerk?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I think I could if the gentleman from West Virginia would put the questions. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I have no doubt the gentleman could if I were to put the questions, because I would ask him the right kind and not ask him about matters with which he is not familiar, and with which the postal clerks can not be expected to be familiar; questions which have no possible relevancy to the subject.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes, or such time as he may desire, to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. EVERETT].

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that anybody should undertake to defend the proceeding of the last Administration in hastening to make these removals during the short period of delay. I think the fact that Commissioner Roosevelt, who came into office immediately after the 1st of May, spoke of it as an outrage, is sufficient answer to all attempts to defend it. But I can not assent to the statement that it was the fault of the Board, or rather of Mr. Lyman, who then constituted the Board, and not of greater men than he, who had the postal service in charge.

Mr. Lyman himself feels sore and indignant that he should be charged with an attempt to nullify President Cleveland's action, when he was making exceptional exertions to carry it out, and I have here a letter from Commissioner Lyman, which he has sent to me, which I desire to have read, and I hope sufficient time will be allowed for the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1894.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation this morning, and in order that you may have the facts then stated clearly before you, I beg to make the following statement in relation to the classification of the Railway Mail Service under the civil-service rules.

The classification order, made by the direction of the President, was issued by the Postmaster-General on December 31, 1888. In pursuance of that order rules for the government of the Railway Mail Service were prepared by me, and were approved by the President January 4, 1889, to go into effect on March 15, 1889.

The work of preparation for placing the Railway Mail Service under the rules thus approved was immediately begun, and was prosecuted with the utmost vigor until its completion. This work involved the consideration and solution of many new problems. It was a new branch of the service, differing in many respects, and requiring different treatment, from any then classified. It was extremely important, in view of all the conditions then existing, that as few mistakes should be made as possible, and that the work should be so well and thoroughly done as to disarm criticism.

Among other things it required the preparation of a large number of blanks and circulars, their printing and distribution throughout the whole country to intending applicants, an enormous correspondence with such applicants, the receipt of requests for blank applications from thousands of persons in all parts of the country, the sending of blanks to such persons, the receipt back of such blanks executed, their proper examination and registration in this office, the organization of boards of examiners in every State and Territory, the arrangements for holding examinations in every State and Territory, the sending of notices to all persons from whom applications were accepted of the times and places of these examinations, the determining the character of the examinations and the preparation and printing of the examination questions, the actual holding of the examinations, the marking of all the papers of these thousands of applicants at the office of the Commission, the sending notices of the results of such examinations to the applicants, the making up of the registers, and all the incidental work connected with these divers transactions.

All this necessarily covered a period of time and embraced an amount of work and a number of details which can only be appreciated by those who are familiar with such matters. This, understand, was additional to the regular work of the office, and had to be attended to without increase of force.

After the change of Administration, on the 11th of March, 1889, four days before the time for the rules to go into effect, when these preparations were going on as rapidly as possible, but without any registers completed or near completion, I addressed a communication to the President of the United States, stating the facts and recommending that the date when the rules should go into effect be changed from March 15 to May 1, believing that by that date it would be possible to have eligible registers established, and that it would not be possible to have them established at an earlier date.

The President approved the recommendation, and made the necessary order. When the date arrived, May 1, registers were still lacking for some fifteen States and Territories, notwithstanding the utmost efforts put forth in this office and the lengthening of the office hours from 4 to 5 o'clock for weeks prior to that time. A very strong pressure was brought to bear upon me, as the sole Commissioner, to have the time further extended. This pressure I resisted, believing and repeatedly stating that the time should not be extended one single day beyond what was absolutely necessary for the establishment of the eligible registers.

To this position I rigidly adhered, and was sustained in it by the President. Every resource at the command of the Commission was used to hasten the establishment of eligible registers, and any person who states to the contrary, or who states that there was any unnecessary delay in putting the civil service rules into operation for the Railway Mail Service, or that I yielded to any pressure from any quarter in the matter, states what is not true.

If the extension of time that was absolutely necessary was taken advantage of to make partisan changes in the Railway Mail Service, the responsibility for those changes should be put where it belongs. No part of it belongs to me or to the Civil Service Commission.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. LYMAN, Commissioner.

DR. WILLIAM EVERETT,
House of Representatives.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, I believe that letter to state the facts as far as I have been able to inquire into them, and without casting any imputation on the character of the gentleman whose evidence to the contrary was read, I would suggest that he himself states that he was away from Washington a large part of the time, in the service of the Commission, when he thinks that the work might have been expedited.

I shall not fight the whole civil-service reform battle over again, here, Mr. Speaker, and I certainly shall not enter into any defense of the character of the Commission. Their work is open to all. I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] is mistaken in saying they have not the public confidence, but he and I might discuss that subject forever without changing each other's opinion. I believe it to be a fact, and I believe the final vote in this House and the vote in the Senate on the appropriation bill and the expressions of the public press show, that the classified service is to be permanent in this country, and is accepted by the people. I believe that a great wrong was done in the case of these clerks, but, as usually happens with a great wrong, it is a thing not easy to right.

The wrong lies at the door of the spoils system, and it is one of the legacies that the dying spoils system is leaving us, that it has inflicted upon us wrongs which we can not right without equal wrongs in turn. I do not believe it is possible to go back and reinstate those who were turned out by a high-handed, arbitrary, and unjust exercise of power, and it is one of the things that makes me so keen against the spoils system, that it perpetrated an act of injustice under the cover of law which can not easily be rectified. I find it difficult to cast my vote either for or against this bill.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. EVERETT. Certainly.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. As I understand the bill, it only provides for the reinstatement of these people when vacancies occur. It does not provide for turning anybody out of his present position.

Mr. EVERETT. I am afraid that opportunities would be found for turning people out if the bill were passed.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Certainly not while Mr. Bissell is Postmaster-General.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Vacancies will be made.

Mr. EVERETT. That is what I am seriously afraid of, although, as the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. PENDLETON] is well aware, I have unbounded confidence in Mr. Bissell, whom I believe to be one of the most intelligent, most honest, most fearless, and most patriotic officials that there ever was in control of a great Department of the Government.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I agree with the gentleman. If the gentleman thinks that, why not trust Mr. Bissell?

Mr. EVERETT. Because there will be a pressure put on him to make vacancies that an archangel would find it difficult to resist. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYNUM. I should like to ask the gentleman if he does not think that a clerk who has been in the service for two or three or four years, where a record is kept of work performed by him, where a check was kept on his work and reported every month, and he attains an efficiency of 98 or 99 per cent, is better qualified to go into the service than a man who may have never been in, but who passed an examination before the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. And stood well in literature.

Mr. EVERETT. I can not say I do. I believe that in certain cases that may be the fact, going back to the record of five years ago; but I believe that now the other system has been established, it should be stuck to in spite of such gross injustice as this; or, to take the words of my eloquent friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] in his speech yesterday, the motto of the Democratic party should be vestigia nulla retrorsum. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BRODERICK. The time has not expired for debate. I would like to know how much time we have.

Mr. BYNUM. We are ready for a vote if the other side is. [Cries of "Vote!" on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The opposition has consumed thirty-five minutes, as the Chair is informed by the Clerk.

Mr. BRODERICK. I supposed we had an hour and a half.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the time fixed for the vote is 4 o'clock, and if there has been no other agreement the Chair will so hold.

Mr. BYNUM. There is no other agreement, but I supposed the House could vote when it wants to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask unanimous consent that the House now proceed to vote on the question.

Mr. BRODERICK. We may be able to agree after a while, and before 4 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the vote be taken now.

Mr. BRODERICK. I object. We may be able to agree hereafter, but not at present. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a pismire attack on the civil service. Instead of a good square blow to strike down the whole thing, they here commence a nibbling process; and I think it is all wrong.

I discover another feature in this bill. It seems to me to be a retaliatory measure upon the President. [Laughter on the Republican side.] A day or two ago it was thought he attempted to usurp the legislative duties of this House; and this seems to be an attempt to usurp the appointing power of the President. It is providing for legislative appointments, and therefore, in that view, is all wrong.

But another great objection to this bill is, that its aim is to let in these discharged postal clerks without going through the examination prescribed in the civil service law.

Mr. Speaker, if these men are qualified, their experience in the postal service ought to give them an advantage against all competitors and comers, and they do not need this advantage. The presence of this bill in this House is a confession that their removal was timely when it was made.

Now, something has been said about the action of President Harrison. I know something of that. When Mr. Cleveland, outgoing, put up the bars, he left no time for the incoming Administration to inform itself touching the condition of the service. It was impossible to appoint a chief of the Railway Mail Service and have him inform himself within the limited time he had. President Harrison wisely extended the time to the 1st of May; and what did Mr. Bell, the chief of that division, do?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question or make a suggestion there?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Let me finish the statement. He laid down this rule—I remember it well—he put the Railway Mail Service into three classes, "best," "fair," and "poor;" and among the "best" he did not allow the political knife to enter. In my district, and over the country I believe, those who ranked as "best" were undisturbed. They were not disturbed in my district.

Mr. GEAR. They were not in mine.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. They served all through the Harrison Administration, and are serving now.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I desire to say that the extension of the order by President Harrison was made on the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Very good. I am glad to have that statement made.

But for those who were marked "poor" he had no standing in the service to protect him. There is where changes were made. In my district I went and had restored a number of "A No. 1" postal clerks, who had served in the Union Army; and they were put into the places of men who were marked "poor;" and I approved of the position of the Administration.

Now, gentlemen, let us not go in a cowardly way to attack the civil service, and attack it like a lot of pismires; but if you are against the civil service law come out and repeal it like men, but do not commence in a petty way to do so.

I am in favor of the law, for one; and I heartily indorse the statements of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] in what he said in speaking in such commendatory terms of those gentlemen who had been engaged in conducting the business of that Commission; and I, for one, enter my protest against usurping the power of the President and trying to overthrow by the nibbling process the civil service law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BYNUM. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear my friend, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], say he is in favor of the law. It is a very proper thing, I know, that my Republican friends should be in favor of the law at this time and opposed to replacing any clerks, because as I understand at present they are about 99 per cent Republicans.

Mr. GEAR. Not at all.

Mr. HUDSON. I make the statement as I have it.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Would it not be advisable to have some information on that subject before you make that statement?

Mr. HUDSON. I have examined the matter.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. You are away off.

Mr. HUDSON. I was in favor of the law when it went into force, and I am heartily in favor of it now, if it is fairly administered.

But the manner of its administration by the former Postmaster-General, Mr. Wanamaknr, was a farce, and every American who has average intelligence knows that it was a farce. I was astonished to hear the distinguished leader of the Republican side [Mr. REED] say this morning that the dismissals that were made early in the Administration of Mr. Harrison were necessary.

I have examined that matter. I have had occasion to examine it somewhat carefully because I was connected to some extent with post-office matters during the Administration of Mr. Cleveland and during the early part of the Administration of Mr. Harrison, and I believe the fact to be generally, as I know it to be in the West, that more than half of the railway postal clerks in the service at the time Mr. Harrison was inaugurated were Republicans, and I think, as a friend on my left suggests, that that was true all over the United States. As a matter that came within my own personal knowledge, I may state that not a solitary postal clerk from the southern district of Kansas was removed, although every clerk in the postal service at the time Mr. Cleveland first came into office was Republican. But few of them were removed.

In the State of Kansas, and in the Western States generally, a large mileage of railway was built during the first Administration of Mr. Cleveland, and in every instance where new appointments were made there was an effort—I think a natural one under the circumstances—to equalize the service and to have Democrats appointed. Now, to my own knowledge, nine Democrats were appointed in Southern Kansas, all young men, all competent; not one of them was discharged before the 1st of May, as I now remember; but by the 1st of September, after Mr. Harrison's Administration came in, every one of those nine men was discharged, though not one of them was charged with incompetency.

The record shows that fact, and to-day there is not in the southern portion of the State of Kansas, nor anywhere within my knowledge in the West, or at least there was not when Mr. Cleveland was inaugurated the second time, a solitary Democrat in this service. Three men that were discharged sent to me (as I had been instrumental in securing their appointment) their last examination papers, which showed that their qualifications were largely above the average.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HUDSON. I will yield for a question.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Do not you know that there are Democrats in the Railway Mail Service in Kansas?

Mr. HUDSON. I do not.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I call your attention to Mr. Blackburn, of the city of Topeka.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague may know the fact, but I do not. Mr. Blackburn is perhaps the only one in the State.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. No; there are others.

Mr. HUDSON. Does the gentleman deny that nineteen-twentieths of the men in that service are Republicans?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Nineteen-twentieths of them are not Republicans, and you know it.

Mr. HUDSON. I assert the fact to be that these Democrats of whom I have spoken were turned out, as I have stated, and the records show it, and not one of them for incompetency, but wholly on political grounds.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. HUDSON. I do not yield. The gentleman is simply asserting a proposition, and I do not propose to have him stand up here and make his statements in my time. He can make his own speech when he gets the floor.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I give you the names, but you do not name anybody.

Mr. HUDSON. You give one name.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Well, that is more than you do.

Mr. BRODERICK. I will give you another name, Mr. Nye, of Lebanon, and others appointed during Mr. Cleveland's first Administration.

Mr. HUDSON. Well, Mr. Speaker, they have found two. Now, I have stated, and the record will show, that these Democrats were turned out on partisan grounds. I want to say further that the pretense of Postmaster-General Wanamaker that the service required the turning out of those men is contradicted by every report that has ever been made on the postal service. When I was interrupted, I was about to say that in three instances men who had been discharged as late as July sent their examination papers to me, which showed that they got above 90 per cent, and they were conceded by the superintendent of the service, whom I saw myself, to be much above the average. I asked him if there were any charges against them, and he said there were not. I sent these men's cards to the Civil Service Commission with an inquiry as to why this had been done, but have never received a response. I want to make the charge here and now that there never was a greater piece of humbug than the attempt of Mr. Wanamaker and those working under him to oust these clerks and put in new men, and as a result of that action the service fell off 20 per cent, as the reports show.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Does the gentleman say that the business of the post-office fell off 20 per cent?

Mr. HUDSON. I say that the proportion of mistakes was 20 per cent greater—that the efficiency of the service fell off 20 per cent.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. What was the increased railway mail mileage?

Mr. HUDSON. It was very little after Mr. Harrison came in. The railroads had been built prior to that.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HUDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Has the Democratic convention in your district been held yet? [Laughter on the Republican side].

Mr. HUDSON. The Democratic convention in my district has not been held, but if it had I would say that the Democrats in my district have been fairer than the Republicans.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It is clear that the gentleman is working for an indorsement by that convention.

Mr. HUDSON. I am standing here to tell the truth, and if that brings a Democratic indorsement, it shows that the Democrats will appreciate the truth, which is more than the Republicans always do. [Laughter. Applause on the Democratic side].

Mr. PAYNE. Is the gentleman for this bill?

Mr. HUDSON. I believe this bill is right because nine-tenths of the men turned out of office at that time were unfairly and unjustly turned out; and I believe this bill would operate as a fair measure, giving them simply a fair chance to be restored.

Mr. PAYNE. Are you not afraid that in this onslaught now made on the mail service by putting in men who have not had experience in recent years, the record of the service for efficiency may go down 20 per cent again?

Mr. HUDSON. No, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. You have no fear of that?

Mr. HUDSON. No, sir; because I believe that these men when restored will render as good service as they did before; and they were rendering better service than is being rendered to-day, as is shown by the report of the Railway Mail Service.

Mr. PAYNE. If these men were competent and were young men, why can they not get in under the civil-service regulations?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HUDSON. I should be glad to answer the gentleman's question if I had time. They might get in under the civil-service regulations; but why can they not get in under this bill?

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I think that the absurdity of this bill can be very easily seen if we will reflect for a few moments and see what would be the result of such a measure if logically carried out in all the Departments of the Government. There can be no reason, so far as I can conceive, why railway mail clerks who have been discharged should be restored—why the civil-service law should be repealed for their benefit in order to open the door for their restoration—any more than similar measures should be adopted in the case of clerks of the Departments here, or in any branch of the Government now subject to the civil-service law.

If this measure is to be adopted in the present case, why, then, if the Administration should change politically at the end of the present term, should we not come in and ask that the same thing be done for railway clerks who may have been turned out under the present Administration, and that a similar measure be adopted for the benefit of clerks in every one of the Departments? No gentleman has given any reason, there can be no reason given, why the civil-service law should be repealed in order that these railway mail clerks may be put back into their places, unless the same reasoning applies in favor of clerks in the Treasury Department, the War Department, the Interior Department, and every other Department of the Government.

I believe, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has said, that civil service has come to stay. I believe it ought to stay. It ought to stay for many reasons. It ought to stay in order to save the members of Congress from having two-thirds of their time taken up in attending to applications made to them for official appointments, as was the case under the old "spoils system." It ought to stay because it puts the business of the Government upon business principles—upon the same principles on which the head of any great business acts when he keeps in his service employés who have filled their places well, who have rendered good service, without regard to their politics or their religion.

So far as regards the facts which existed under the Administration of Gen. Harrison and the Administration prior to that, I can speak only with reference to my own State. I know that when Mr. Cleveland went out of office at the end of his first Administration there was not in my district one railway mail clerk who was a Republican. Every Republican in my district and every one in the State of Maine had been turned out; throughout the entire State there was not a Republican in the Railway Mail Service.

Now, hwat did Mr. Harrison's Administration do? I saw myself the superintendent of the Railway Mail Service for New England; I saw him in the interest of retaining a Democrat in office after Mr. Harrison had been inaugurated. I asked the superintendent what his policy would be. He said he should restore the old clerks who were competent, putting them in the places of those in the service who were incompetent, but that competent railway mail clerks, though they were Democrats, would be retained.

I can speak of one gentleman who was employed on the trains coming into and going out of my own city. A Republican railway mail clerk there was discharged under the Cleveland Administration, although he was efficient, and in his place there was appointed a young man by the name of William B. Snow, a Democrat. He made a good clerk; he was in every way a respectable man; and when Mr. Harrison came into office I myself went down to the Post-Office Department and filed an application, leaving it there over my own signature, to have him retained. And under Mr. Harrison's Administration he was retained, until he himself resigned to go into a private business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would like to have a moment or two more.

Mr. BYNUM. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, my time has expired, I believe.

Mr. BYNUM. I will yield the gentleman a minute to answer me.

Why did you feel it necessary to go down to ask the retention of a man if he was a competent clerk?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will say to my friend from Indiana that I generally look carefully after my affairs and my friends also. I do not trust to anybody else; and if the gentleman from Indiana wanted a position anywhere that I had influence to help him to secure, and desired to secure for him, I should take no chances, but attend to it at once and probably before he got ready to ask me. It was not because I felt it realy necessary that I immediately interfered for this worthy young man, but because it is my habit to take care of my constituency to the best of my ability; and I did it at that time for a Democrat, as I have done on many other occasions. And I will further say, if my minute has not expired, that I have been at work for the last six months to get that same gentleman, who went out on his own motion to enter into private business, restored to the postal service, and simply because he was a very efficient clerk and I believed it to be a good thing for the public service, although he is a Democrat.

The restoration of the few postal clerks whom this bill would let in is not a very serious matter in itself. But it is an entering wedge to the overthrow of the civil service. It is an insidious, a covert attack upon the whole civil-service law, and for that reason more than for any other I am radically and unqualifiedly opposed to it. I hope never to see that law repealed. I would rather see it extended and made more complete than it is. The spoils system is contrary to good sense and good morals. It is incompatible with an efficient public service, and an injustice and cruelty to those servants of the Government who have been efficient and faithful, and whose experience is too valuable to be thrown away simply to give their places to others who want them. No business concern in the country adopts that system, and none could succeed if it did.

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have been a Representative in this House for nearly twenty years——

Mr. DOCKERY. And a faithful and efficient one.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I thank my friend for his kind expression. But I remember well when I first came here that I had, as I presume members usually have, some applications for appointments in the Railway Mail Service; and on that subject, I speak only from memory now as to the exact time, but my impression is that it was more than two years before I could get a single appointment in the Railway Mail Service under a Republican Administration, for the reason that the service was regarded of so much importance to the country generally that they would not make changes and put out competent and faithful men on any grounds excepting such as were sufficient to warrant a removal, and put an incompetent or an inexperienced man in his place. I believe that has been the policy of every Administration since I have been a member of the House of Representatives, to appoint only capable men in the Railway Mail Service and not to make changes unless they were made for good cause. And this is true policy.

Now, gentleman say here that a large percentage of the railway mail clerks were Republicans kept in office under the Administration of Mr. Cleveland.

I do not know how it was in other districts, but I do know that in my district a very large percentage of the appointees in that service were Democrats, and that not more than two or three out of ten, at least, were Republicans on the day that President Harrison was inaugurated, on the 4th of March, 1889. They had made nearly a clean sweep, I think entirely a clean sweep, in the county in which I live, and I found eight or nine Democrats in the Railway Mail Service who had been appointed to their positions under Mr. Cleveland's Administration to one Republican left in the service.

I thought it unkind on the part of President Cleveland, after his Administration had extended over nearly the entire period of four years, and after he had been defeated by the people of the country, then for the first time to turn his attention to this service and issue an order putting it under the civil service law. After the election, and when it was known that he was to cease to be President on the 4th of March following, he issued an order to put the Railway Mail Service under the civil service law and rules, not, however, to take effect immediately, as stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], but to take effect on the 15th day of March following, as I remember the date.

Mr. TERRY. What do you think of the order of President Harrison, issued after his defeat, extending the civil service law to the free-delivery service?

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I should not approve of anything of the kind, but I believe that it was done on the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. HUNTER. Only Mr. Lyman.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. On what ground Mr. Cleveland made the change I am not able to say. If I had been President of the United States for four years, without bringing this service under the civil service law, I would have allowed it to remain there until my successor came in, and have left the matter to his judgment to determine what should be done in reference to it.

But I am not discussing now the propriety or the impropriety of the order. I am only stating that about eight out of the ten employés in the Railway Mail Service in the district I represent were Democrats when President Harrison was inaugurated, and they had been appointed in the place of competent Republicans who had been removed to make place for them. Some changes were afterwards made upon my own recommendation, but three or four Democrats were left in the service in my county, and are still in the service because they were competent. Like the illustration given by my friend and namesake from Iowa [Gen. HENDERSON], in making removals they would only allow me to remove the more inefficient or poorer clerks.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman of course understands that President Harrison, after his defeat, extended the civil service to the free-delivery clerks.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I have already stated that I believe it was done on the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission. Now, it may be that Mr. Cleveland extended the order to embrace the railway mail clerks under that recommendation. But I certainly thought it was an impropriety for a President who had served four years, or nearly the entire term of his office, without interfering with such service, then, just at the close of his Administration, to put the service under the civil-service law and rules, and still have the order to take effect after the expiration of his term, and thus make it possible to appoint Democrats in place of Republicans. It would have looked better, it seems to me, to have let the matter stand until his successor came into office, for such action as he thought proper to take.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYNUM. Does the gentleman know that Mr. Arthur did the same thing before he went out of office in all the Departments in Washington here?

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. No, I do not; and I want to say that this country never had any better President of the United States than Chester A. Arthur, all honor to his memory. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my colleague [Mr. HENDERSON] that the statement that what was done by President Harrison just before he went out was upon the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, I have no doubt is true; and that it meets with the approval of the present President I apprehend is also true, because he seems to continue substantially the Civil Service Commission—a good Commission no doubt. I do not know just what its politics is. I suppose, perhaps, it is Republican, a majority of it. I am not sure about that, but I think so. But that is not to be wondered at. I do not know whether there could be any simon-pure Democrat found who would make a good Civil Service Commissioner. But that is not material.

In what little time I have I want to say about this Railway Mail Service, that I am not known in the House or anywhere else as being a wonderfully zealous friend of civil-service reform, so called, as we have it in this country. I do not mean that I do not want a good civil service. I do; but I have said before, and I will say again, that it seems to me the service we have is not the American system, nor is it the English system, and it seems to me that it has the vices of both systems largely, and the virtues of neither.

But as to this Railway Mail Service, I believe it is the one service in the Government, above all others, in which men should have a permanent tenure, dependent only upon efficiency, and without reference to politics. It does no good to say that Cleveland in his first Administration turned out 90 per cent of this force of railway post-office clerks. He did, and filled their places with Democrats. I am not here to abuse him for it. He did it at the request, no doubt, of Democratic members of Congress.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. And he did right, and President Harrison did the same thing.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman says he did right. I am not here to dispute that, from the standpoint of the gentleman from West Virginia, because all things that come his way are right. [Laughter.] Nor am I hear to defend President Harrison for turning out 40 per cent of these railway post-office clerks before these civil-service rules finally went into full force. He did not turn out half as many as Cleveland did. He turned out 40 per cent of them.

Mr. ALLEN. That is, he did not turn out as many in a month as Cleveland did in four years.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I was in harmony with the action of President Harrison then, and I see no reason to change my opinion now. I have no doubt that some of the men appointed by President Harrison were new men. But in the main they were tried, efficient men, who had been dropped during President Cleveland's Administration, and, in my judgment, the service was benefited by their reinstatement.

Now I want to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that to be a good railway post-office clerk requires peculiar qualities. A man must have great industry. He must have a peculiar mind. He must have what the phrenologists call location. When you take sixty or seventy thousand post-offices and put mail in great quantities into a moving post-office on a railway car, with the 175,000 miles of railway postal routes, there being nothing on the letters to indicate the routes which they are required to take, and the clerk is required to throw that mail and give it the proper direction, so that it will go in the least space of time, it requires peculiar qualities. There is not one man in a dozen who will make a good railway post-office clerk, although he might make a better something else than the man who would make a good railway clerk.

[The time of Mr. CANNON of Illinois having expired, Mr. BRODERICK yielded to him two minutes more.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, this service has been built up through the years when Mr. Cleveland first came in. He turned out nine out of ten of these trained clerks, and filled their places with new men. Some of those men were good men. Some of them made good clerks. Many of them are yet in the service; but in the main they were poor clerks. In my section of the country all men, of all parties, protested about the defective service, and the service was benefited when half of Cleveland's appointees were turned out, and these old and tried clerks were reinstated.

Now we have a good service. You gentlemen think the men now in the service ought to be turned out and the Democrats turned in. Very well; if you can pass this act and get Grover Cleveland to do it, well and good. From a political standpoint I have no objection, because it will only add another weight that you have to carry. From the humane standpoint I do object, because, God knows, you are carrying all now that you can stagger under and walk. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARNES. That does not make you sorry.

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, the report by the majority in connection with this proposed legislation is somewhat misleading as to dates as well as to other facts contained in the report. But as I proceed in my limited time I shall endeavor to invite your attention to several most marked. The condition of the Railway Mail Service to-day, in its subordinate force, the clerks, consists of about seven thousand men. These men have been under the rules of the civil service for upwards of five years, and at this time the railway mail clerks are well established as a part of the classified service of the General Government.

The proposition contained in the bill is that 2,800 or 2,900 men who were removed between the dates March 1, 1889, to the 30th day of May of the same year may, "whenever a vacancy may occur in a grade or class no higher than that in which he was formerly employed, be reinstated by the Postmaster-General without examination or certification by the Civil Service Commission." These men were in the service under the old rule of personal selection by the Postmaster-General and the probationary test of six months' work and examination for regular appointment—a system well tried and productive of good results.

This legislation proposes, after the Railway Mail Service has been established five years under the civil service rules, to allow a large number of men to be considered qualified for the service without any examination, simply because it is alleged they were removed because of partisanship at a time when personal or partisan selection was the rule. It is well for us to remember in that connection that the same Commissioner recommended to President Cleveland the rule governing the transfer of the service, to take place on the 15th of March, who, when he found that he could not effect the transfer in the service at that time, also recommended to President Harrison that it should not take place until the first day of May. Commissioner Lyman recommended March 15, 1889, as the date for the transfer; finding it impossible, he asks the then President to fix the date May 1st, and it is so fixed.

The same sincerity and desire for good administration that prompted Lyman to fix the one date governed him in fixing the second date. Throughout the entire transfer of the service there is not a single fact or particle of evidence to show that Commissioner Lyman in fixing the 1st day of May, in his official letter to the President, was governed by any other motive than that which governed in fixing the 15th of March. I believe that in the transfer of the service every effort as an official on his part was used to make the transfer in time, and in the making of the transfer of these thousands of men and the examinations which were required in the various States, it was physically impossible for him to carry out the law. Therefore, up to the 1st of May, the old rules ran.

The same rules that these men were appointed under; the same rules ran that had prevailed ever since that service was organized. These men now have no special claim for consideration, for the reason that they were appointed under the old rules and were dismissed under the same rules that existed when they were appointed. For five years your service has been established under the civil service laws. You have 7,000 well-equipped men, and I claim no adequate or good reason has been given why any rule should follow these old discharged employés other than the rule that would cover any men in the United States service appointed under the old rules discharged and clamorous for reinstatement.

There is no evidence that partisanship formed any part of the recommendations of the Commissioner. These men, duly discharged under the system and rules governing appointments and discharges for many years, assert and claim removal because they were Democrats. This bill, if enacted into law, directs their reappointment because they were appointed as Democrats; therefore, having been removed, as is claimed, five years ago, they should under an entirely new system and construction of rules be reinstated because they are now Democrats. The service is to-day operating most satisfactorily to the people—let it continue under the civil service, and let these men comply with existing law.

Mr. BYNUM. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. PENDLETON].

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that there is a good deal of hypocrisy on this subject. When Mr. Cleveland came to the White House in 1885, he found that for nearly thirty years the members of only one party had filled the positions known as railway mail clerks. During the course of his Administration he changed in all probability about one-half of the clerks holding positions in that service. At the end of his Administration, after he had been defeated at the polls, he tried to place the Railway Mail Service under the civil service. I do not know what his motive was. I do not know what actuated him; but it is my opinion that Mr. Cleveland was anxious to save 3,000 or 4,000 Democrats from the remorseless hands of the Republican party. I have no doubt upon that subject whatever.

Mr. Arthur had in his preceding Administration pursued the same policy in order to retain Republicans in as many places as possible. Mr. Cleveland, however, was not successful, because Mr. Harrison came along after him and suspended this order; suspended it for no other purpose—and there is no use in talking hypocritically upon the subject—than to turn out 3,000 Democrats and substitute 3,000 Republicans in their places.

This talk about these Democrats being incompetent is all humbug, the sheerest humbug, united with a great deal of impudence. Their places were wanted for Republicans, and of course excuses had to be trumped up for such an open and shameful violation of the civil-service principle to which the Administration of President Harrison professed to be devoted. Our Republican friends simply favor the civil-service theory as at present carried out, because it is so administered as to retain Republicans in office. In all the Departments of the Government where the clerical service comes under the civil-service law, nine-tenths of the employés are Republicans, who, under its working, expect to hold their positions for life. Hence this present love on the part of Republicans for civil service as it is administered.

Mr. Harrison, following Mr. Cleveland's example, on the 15th of January, 1893, after he had been defeated for reëlection, issued his civil-service order with regard to the employés in the post-offices of the country, fourteen or fifteen thousand strong——

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no. Does not the gentleman know that in the entire service there are only a little less than twelve thousand letter-carriers, and that that order applies only to second-class offices in towns of less than fifty thousand population?

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. My understanding is that there are from twelve to fifteen thousand of these employés.

Mr. BINGHAM. According to the last annual report there were 11,711.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Clerks and letter-carriers both?

Mr. BINGHAM. Letter-carriers. The clerks have always been under the civil service.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. The clerks have not been under the civil service in the post-offices affected by this order. What was the object of this order? Mr. Harrison had been defeated at the polls, and the object of the order was not to manifest any love for civil-service reform, but to retain Republican employés in office. Why not be honest about it, and say that that was the object? I do not blame President Cleveland for trying to keep Democrats in office. I do not blame President Harrison for trying to keep his own political friends in office; but I do blame the hypocrisy which undertakes to defend the course of President Harrison on the ground of professed enthusiasm for the purity, the glory, and the grandeur of civil-service reform.

The whole talk is hypocritical. Gentlemen talk about turning these men out for the good of the service, and about dividing the offices with the Democrats. Take the State of West Virginia. In Mr. Harrison's Administration there was only one Democrat left in the service in the entire State, and he had obtained his position through the influence of Gen. Goff, the Republican leader in that State; and when Mr. Cleveland came in I found that every position of this kind was filled by a Republican, and so far as I know, down to the present moment not two Democrats in the entire State of West Virginia have been appointed to positions in the Railway Mail Service.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not an unjust bill. It is a righteous bill. It does not undertake to turn out anybody. It does not undertake to turn out a single Republican. It simply provides that when vacancies occur these men who formerly filled the places shall have a right to a preference without going through a civil service examination. I think it is a very just and generous bill to our Republican brethren; and, as to its administration, if there be in all this land a man who is thoroughly devoted to civil service reform, that man is Postmaster-General Bissell, and if this bill becomes a law, I do not think there is a Democrat or a Republican here who believes for a moment that Mr. Bissell will permit any pressure of any character to induce him to violate it, either in letter or in spirit.

Mr. MARSH. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. EVERETT] does not think so.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I do not agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts. He has not run against Mr. Bissell's backbone as often as I have. I have found that it is very nearly as strong as Grover Cleveland's, and he is thoroughly devoted to this absurd system of civil service reform, so called. Mr. Speaker, I would be in favor of civil service reform if it was administered with proper regard to the great parties that divide our people, but when I see it so administered that four-fifths of the employés are members of the party that is driven from power, I think that is an injustice to the party voted into power by the people.

Mr. Cleveland has not in any way interfered with the order made by Mr. Harrison, and the 15,000 clerks and letter-carriers protected by it still enjoy their positions, though the Democrats, as the result of the elections, expected to get them all. One-half of the Government employés under the civil service rules are Republican politicians who never were compelled to submit to any examination whatever. Whether the Democrats be in power or no, for many years to come the civil service of the country is to be administered by the party hostile to them.

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, the brass of the gentleman from West Virginia is of that bright and shining quality which commands my admiration. He appeals to the generosity of the Republicans in this House and asks us to assist in the passage of this bill.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Oh, no. I do not expect you to vote for it.

Mr. RAY. I beg pardon if I misunderstood the gentleman. I thought he appealed to our generosity to aid in the passage of this bill as a matter of justice to the Democrats, and it struck me as strange that he should do that at a time in our history when the Democratic guillotine is rising and falling with a destructive rapidity that defies computation.

The gentleman claims, as I now understand him, that this is a generous bill. Yes, sir, it is a very generous bill! It is one of the many partisan measures that a Democratic House of Representatives has determined to force to a passage and to put upon the statute book under the whip and the spur of a special rule which limits and cuts off debate, forbids a fair presentation of the merits of the case, orders the previous question at a specified hour, and forces the measure to a final vote to the exclusion of all other business.

And, Mr. Speaker, all this is done at a time when there is no necessity whatever for it; because the House, under the lead of the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has declared that we shall never, no never, adjourn until we can have free sugar, free coal, and free iron, and free wool, while the Senate at the other end of the Capitol, in an equally defiant attitude, has declared that there shall be a tax on sugar, coal, and iron, and that the sugar trust must and shall be protected.

So, Mr. Speaker, I ask you and gentlemen of this House what occasion there is for any particular haste in legislation at this time?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. "The eternal years of God" are theirs.

Mr. RAY. Yes, under the declarations that have been made in both branches of Congress as to the tariff bill, the eternal years of God are yours, gentlemen, since the Senate and the House will have to compromise on these questions or we shall remain in session until our terms of office expire; and compromise they never will, so they say!

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is simply an attempt by a Democratic Congress to legislate into office in defiance of the civil-service rules a lot of discharged Democrats, amounting to several hundred, or it may be several thousand, all of whom were discharged between March 5 and May 1, 1889, for cause. These men have been out of office since that time—about five years; and if they are good for anything in any department of life they have found business long since in some remunerative field which they will be loth to leave. If they have not found other business they are not deserving of positions under this Government.

It is not very strange that our Democratic friends are seeking to legislate hundreds of clerks into office under the whip and spur of a special rule—not so very strange; for their hatred of civil-service rules and of the law pertaining to civil service is so great that they are willing to strike down and trample under foot everything that looks to reform in the civil service of this Government.

Again, this is about the only way that the Democratic party can get men into office. It has tried at the polls at the last two elections, and has met with a most miserable, humiliating, and dismal defeat. The elections for months and months past have proven a succession of Waterloos to our Democratic friends. Again they find it impossible to get Democratic aspirants into office through the regular channels of Presidential appointment; for the Senate assumes an independent attitude and refuses or neglects to confirm the appointments made by the President of the United States.

The Democratic party is so thoroughly at war with itself that the sky is fairly lurid with the glare of Democratic internecine strife. These Democratic combatants are now engaged in factional war, with their daggers drawn and their flashing scimitars gleaming in the bright sunlight of these July days; and these instruments of Democratic warfare are drinking deep of Democratic blood.

Mr. Speaker, I rejoice at this situation and congratulate the country. Under existing conditions I can not say that I really blame our Democratic friends for seeking to legislate men into office in defiance of the President, in defiance of civil service laws and rules, through a special act of Congress. It is their only hope. But it strikes me, gentlemen, that you may find the same opposition to this measure at the other end of the Capitol that you find to your free trade and sugar trust bill now pending there for action.

The Railway Mail Service is of great importance to every citizen, and especially to every business man. This Railway Mail Service ought not to be lightly interfered with. What justification do you find for the enactment of a law which will set aside and put at defiance the civil service laws and rules adopted after years of consideration, which have been improved and amended from time to time in the interest of this service, in the interest of the business men of this great country, and in the interest of good government? No excuse has been offered, no excuse can be offered by any Democrat for the passage of this bill, except simply that it will place in office somewhere between 3,000 and 8,000 hungry Democrats longing for places, and who can find occupation nowhere else.

A MEMBER. You mean famished Democrats.

Mr. RAY. Yes; famished Democrats.

There is no principle on which the measure can rest. It would be just as wise to legislate out every clerk put in office under the Administration of President Harrison, and legislate into office every Democrat removed during the same period. I trust the good sense of the Democratic party, if it has any, will assume control of your actions and defeat a measure so opposed to common sense, justice, good government, and which is without precedent in our history.

Mr. BYNUM. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. Speaker, I should not be willing to support any measure which would in any way impair the efficiency of the postal service. I do not think that this bill, if carried out as designed, will endanger in any way the efficiency of that service; and it is hardly fair to impugn the firmness and official integrity of the Postmaster-General by supposing that he will yield to the importunities of his Democratic friends and put into this service men not competent to discharge properly their duties.

The object of this bill, as I understand, is to put back into the service men who were dismissed for purely political reasons and whose efficiency was unquestioned.

In answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], who said that none but inefficient clerks were dismissed, I wish to say that I am personally acquainted with eleven gentlemen in my district who were dismissed as postal clerks at the beginning of the Harrison Administration, and before the application of the civil-service law; and the dismissals in some cases were dated April 29, although the men were retained in the service until the latter part of May.

Not one of those men in my district who were dismissed from their positions of clerks was a Republican; every man dismissed was a Democrat. There was one, a Mr. Caldwell, of Monroe, whose standing was nearly 98 per cent. Not a single charge was made against him except that he was a Democrat. That was the response he got from the Department; that he had spoken disrespectfully of his political opponents.

This bill, as I understand, is designed to give to men of this class that just treatment which they are entitled to receive at the hands of this or any other Administration. It is not the design to put into the service inefficient clerks, but to restore men who have been dismissed for political reasons—not because of any inefficiency as clerks. That Republican Administration dismissed every Democrat that had been appointed from my district except four; and two of those four have since been dismissed; so that to-day there are only two Democrats in that service from my district.

I want to show you and the House, Mr. Speaker, a statement giving the number of divisions of the routes, and the number of clerks employed in each; and in figuring up the total on the Detroit division there are 110 persons employed, of which number 15 only are Democrats. In the Grand Rapids division 32 persons are employed, 5 only are Democrats, and the total number in the State employed in this ninth division of the Railway Mail Service is 660 persons, of which number 534 are Republicans and 126 Democrats.

I want to say one thing more before taking my seat. Since this Administration has come into power there has not been a single Democrat appointed from my district, although many and many of them have taken the civil service examination.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the table which I have quoted in part, showing the number of clerks on each one of these routes in the ninth division and their political affiliations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. BRODERICK. I ask that all gentlemen who have spoken on this question be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit that request afterward. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan.

The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that all members who have spoken on this question may be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to ask whose statement it is that the gentleman from Michigan proposes to put into the RECORD? The Chair has not put that question, and I desire to know, before consent is given, what the statement is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had put the question and understood that no objection was made.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I beg the Chair's pardon. Before the question was submitted the gentleman from Kansas submitted another request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asked if there was objection and heard none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman had not specified whose statement it was.

Mr. GORMAN. It is a statement prepared by five Democratic clerks in the Railway Mail Service, and vouched for to be absolutely correct. In any case where there was doubt as to the political affiliation of a party, the doubt was given to the other side; and it is manifest that the statement is most likely to give a larger percentage to the Democrats than they are entitled to, for the reason that any man in the service if asked what his political convictions are would be inclined to say that he was a Democrat under the present circumstances.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan how he can ascertain the political affiliations of any person employed as a clerk in the Railway Mail Service?

Mr. GORMAN. In this case the information was obtained by personal inquiry and contact.

Mr. LOUD. I imagine that there is a great deal of guesswork about it.

Mr. GORMAN. Well, these men are in the service and have been since Mr. Cleveland's first Administration.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to find a man who had any political proclivities at all in the service—especially a Republican.

Mr. GORMAN. If you will go with me into the district I represent I will find you men in the service attending meetings, carrying torchlights in processions, hurrahing for members of Congress or for political candidates, and talking politics plainly and openly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do they do that while they are on the run?

Mr. GORMAN. They are not all the time on the train.

Mr. MILLIKEN. How do they manage?

Mr. GORMAN. They have plenty of time when they are not on the trains to attend political meetings; and there is no doubt of their political affiliations, as I could easily demonstrate to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that there is no objection to the gentleman publishing the table to which he has referred.

There was no objection.

The table referred to by Mr. GORMAN is as follows:

This, the ninth division of the Railway Mail Service, has 660 employés; 534 are Republicans and 126 are Democrats, or about 76.4 per cent are Republicans and 23.6 per cent are Democrats. They are divided as follows: The New York and Chicago, which is the main route of the division, has 419 postal clerks; 326 are Republicans and 93 are Democrats. Of the 93 Democrats, 63 are assigned to night runs. There are 36 clerks in charge, of which 26 are Republicans and 10 are Democrats. The 10 Democrats are all on assigned night runs. The remaining routes of the division have 195 postal clerks; 164 are Republicans and 31 are Democrats. The number of official positions in the division are 21, all of which are held by Republicans. The number of clerks detailed for transfer duty at the large junctions in the division are 25, of which 23 are Republicans and 2 are Democrats.

Mr. BRODERICK. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MARSH.

Mr. MARSH. I shall not require that much time. This bill I understand to be a bill providing for the restoration to office of a lot of Democrats who were formerly in the postal service at the time Mr. Harrison became President of the United States. At the proper time I will offer an amendment to the bill providing for a restoration of the post-offices to the Republicans who have been turned out by Grover Cleveland. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BYNUM. How long a time does the gentleman from Kansas desire to occupy?

Mr. BRODERICK. Not more than ten minutes, perhaps.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask unanimous consent, at the close of the gentleman's remarks, that we take a vote on the amendment and on the bill instead of waiting until 4 o'clock.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will you adjourn then?

Mr. BYNUM. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent, at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas (the gentleman is entitled to fourteen minutes) that the vote shall then be taken under the special order, instead of waiting until 4 o'clock. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, it being late Saturday evening and the mercury at nearly 100° in the shade, I appreciate the anxiety of members for an early vote on this question and an adjournment. Having recently taken part in a discussion of this question, and having stated my position fully upon the civil service law, I do not care to restate what was then said. The law speaks for itself. It is a wise and just provision, and there is no demand from any source for its repeal or modification. Its provisions should be strengthened rather than weakened, and an honest execution should be demanded to the end that merit shall be the true test of ability to secure position under this law.

In the consideration of this question the fact should not be overlooked that every political party in this country has unqualifiedly indorsed the principle of the civil service law and there has been no dissent from this position until this bill was presented. I want the country to know that this proposition comes from the Democratic side of the House, and that it is in opposition to every public declaration of that party for the last ten years. The measure was conceived and is urged here to-day in the hope of securing a partisan advantage. This is not the worst feature of the bill. It is an attempt to do indirectly what no party would offer to do directly. It is a blow at the principle of civil service.

I ask to have read from the Clerk's desk as a part of my argument the minority report on this bill. It clearly states the views of the Republican members of the committee, and if we can place any reliance upon what political parties say through their national conventions it states the views of the American people.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BRODERICK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following as the views of Republican members:

The undersigned, members of the Committee on the Judiciary, object to the passage of House bill No. 4017, and state the following reasons therefor:

After the Presidential election held in 1888, and before the expiration of President Cleveland's term, he issued an order placing the Railway Mail service under the regulations of the civil service, the rule to take effect on the 15th day of March, 1889. About the 11th of March, 1889, the Civil Service Commission, which is charged with the duty of classifying, having advised President Harrison that it was impossible to complete the classification by the 15th, and recommended an extension of time, President Harrison accordingly issued an order extending the time to the 1st day of May, 1889, at which time the rule went into full force.

This bill and report recommending its passage are based upon the assumption that the order of President Harrison, issued for the extension of the time, as above stated, "was to enable the new administration to make changes and appointments for political reasons alone."

That this is an erroneous assumption is clearly evidenced by the order of the President and by the statement of the Civil Service Commission made in an official letter dated February 8, 1894. The statement is as follows:

"The classification of the Railway Mail Service was originally ordered by President Cleveland to take effect on March 15, 1889. It was absolutely impossible for the Civil Service Commission to complete the classification by that date, and in consequence the classification was deferred until May 1, 1889, at which date it actually took effect."

That there were dismissals between the 15th day of March and the 1st day of May, 1889, we do not dispute, but this was before the order took effect and while the old system was in force, and it will be remembered that during the Democratic Administration of 1885–1889 nearly 90 per cent of the Republican railway mail clerks were turned out and supplanted by Democrats.

The Democratic party should not complain because removals were made in 1889. It was precisely what was done in 1893 under the first six months of Mr. Cleveland's Administration. Again we quote from the letter of the Civil Service Commission of February 8:

"In 1893 the Democratic postmasters at Plattsburg, N. Y., at Topeka and Kansas City, Kans., at Galesburg, Bloomington, and Quincy, Ill., at Athens, Ga., and in several other places took advantage of the necessary delay in the classification of the free-delivery post-offices to make sweeping removals among the Republican clerks and carriers in their offices and to replace them by Democrats, just before the classification went into effect. The cases are precisely parallel and it is rank dishonesty to try to cure one and not cure the other."

If the majority here is seeking to do justice to any class of Government employés who have been dismissed from the service, then they should amend the bill and include this latter class (the carriers), and restore them to the service. It is not likely that the really meritorious clerks who were dismissed as long ago as 1889 are now out of employment, and why should we weaken a system which is sanctioned by the better judgment of all classes for the few who have been idly waiting five years for reappointment? Will the public interest be subserved by this effort of the Democratic party to return to the obsolete and disreputable spoils system?

The way to uphold this law is to sustain it now. It should be strengthened and extended in its scope and effect rather than modified. It is our conviction that the proposition to take this backward step in civil service reform is unwise, and should the bill be passed without including the carriers and others dismissed under the present Administration, it will be an extreme partisan measure, which will meet with condemnation, and its effect will be most demoralizing and vicious.

ROBERT A. CHILDS.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, when the bill now under consideration was before the Committee on the Judiciary, I addressed a letter to the Civil Service Commission, asking information upon this subject, and received in reply a letter, a copy of which I hold in my hand and which I desire to have read as a part of my remarks. It is a full and complete answer to the attack made on the Commission by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM]. It clearly shows that this bill ought not to pass.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 8, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I was much surprised at the receipt of your letter containing the account of the favorable report of Mr. HOUK's bill, H. R. 4017, from the Committee on the Judiciary. I thank you for your courtesy in calling the matter to my attention. This bill is precisely similar to one presented by Mr. BYNUM of Indiana and referred to the Civil Service Committee, by which it has not been reported. I appeared before the Civil Service Committee in opposition to it, and I should certainly have appeared before the Judiciary Committee in opposition to this had I known there was any intention of acting on such a measure. I should like to be heard before the committee about it, but as this may now be impossible I will take advantage of your courtesy and give the following reasons why the bill should not be made into a law:

The classification of the Railway Mail Service was originally ordered by President Cleveland to take effect on March 15, 1889. It was absolutely impossible for the Civil Service Commission to complete the classification by that date, and in consequence the classification was deferred until May 1, 1889, at which date it actually took effect (nine days before I myself was appointed Civil Service Commissioner). Advantage was taken of the delay in the classification to turn out 2,300 Democratic clerks, replacing them without examination with Republicans. This was undoubtedly an outrage. But in the first place it is all wrong to try to cure it by committing another wrong now, and in the next place it was an outrage precisely similar in character to what has occurred in a number of the newly classified post-offices within the last eight months.

In 1889 the Republican administration of the Post-Office Department took advantage of the necessary delay in classifying the Railway Mail Service to make sweeping removals of Democratic clerks and replace them by Republicans just before the law went into effect. In 1893 the Democratic postmasters at Plattsburg, N. Y., at Topeka and Kansas City, Kans., at Galesburg, Bloomington, and Quincy, Ill., at Athens, Ga., and in several other places took advantage of the necessary delay in the classification of the free delivery post-offices to make sweeping removals among the Republican clerks and carriers in their offices and to replace them by Democrats just before the classification went into effect. The cases are precisely parallel, and it is rank dishonesty to try to cure one and not cure the other. If the Democratic employés dismissed before the classification of the Railway Mail Service in 1889 are to be restored then the Republican employés dismissed before the classification in the offices above mentioned in 1893 ought to be restored.

The truth is that neither one set nor the other should be restored. The only safe rule to follow in dealing with the civil service law is to deal with office and branch of the Government from the moment it becames classified, and not take into account what went on before. If we do endeavor to take into account what went on before, we are entangled in an absolutely hopeless mesh of wrongs suffered and committed by both sides during the preceding years, and it is quite impossible to remedy any of these wrongs without committing fresh wrongs in turn. The proposed bill of Mr. Houk does not, it is true, provide that the Postmaster-General must reinstate the old clerks, but only that he may reinstate them, but immediately upon its enactment into law the greatest pressure would be brought to bear to create vacancies in order that reinstatements might be made. Of the 2,300 clerks appointed to fill the places of the Democrats but 900 now remain in the service (a strong proof of the inferiority of the men obtained under the spoils system), so that the bulk of the places are not filled by people who came in through the civil service examinations, very many of whom were themselves Democrats.

In most cases, therefore, the reinstatement would result in turning out not the original beneficiary of the wrong but some innocent and honest outrider. Moreover, the persons who would be reinstated would be the very persons who ought not to be reinstated. The discharged railway mail clerks who were honest, capable men have now, five years after their discharge, undoubtedly gotten places where they are at work at good salaries. It is precisely those who are incapable and who originally got their places merely through political favoritism, but who have now banded themselves together in political associations for selfish purposes, who would get reinstated under the proposed law. It must be remembered that all of the 2,300 clerks turned out in 1889 simply suffered under the same spoils system through which they had received their appointments. During the Democratic Administration of 1885-'89 nearly 90 per cent of the Republican railway mail clerks were turned out and were supplanted by Democrats. During the two months before the classification of the service under the succeeding Republican Administration 46 per cent of the entire force or about half the Democrats in it were turned out by the Republicans. Then the office was classified. No appointments or dismissals for partisan reasons have been since made, and it would be mischievous in the extreme now to go back to the old system and allow the reinstatement of the men thus originally appointed for spoils reasons.

The Commission has found by actual experience that it is a detriment to the public service to allow the reinstatement of a man who has been out of that service for more than a year. With every change of Administration partisans of the party which has returned to power endeavor to secure the reinstatement of their party friends who have been turned out. When President Harrison's Administration came into power the Commission found that during the Democratic administration of the Baltimore post-office no less than 96 per cent of the Republicans had been turned out and their places supplied by Democrats, and great efforts were made to induce the Commission to allow the reinstatement of all the Republicans who had thus been dismissed for party reasons. The Commission steadily opposed the proposed proceeding on the ground that while injustice might sometimes be remedied the general result would be absolutely bad and the effect would be to introduce a system of sweeping removals and sweeping reinstatements with each change of Administration for political reasons.

The proposed action to be taken with reference to Democratic railway mail clerks is precisely the action that was proposed to be taken in reference to the Baltimore post-office clerks and carriers four years ago. But there is in this instance an additional reason for opposing the bill because during the present Administration in a number of post-offices precisely the same course has been followed as was followed four years ago in the Railway Mail Service; and it is pitiable injustice to try to remedy one set of cases and not remedy the other. The bill is simply a bill for the partial reintroduction of the spoils system and for the demoralization of the railway mail service; it is thoroughly mischievous, and I sincerely hope it will fail. If there is any further information which you wish I shall be most happy to furnish it. I write this officially, by the direction and with the approval of the Commission.

Very cordially, yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. CASE BRODERICK,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, after the reading of that letter I do not think anything further need be said in opposition to this bill. The bill is wrong in proposing to reinstate in the Railway Mail Service clerks who never passed an examination and who were relieved in order to secure a more efficient service. The bill is unjust and wrong in proposing to reinstate those who were dismissed in 1889 and in not proposing to restore the carriers who were dismissed under the present Administration in 1893. If the former should be restored, so should the latter. A great number of purely partisan measures have been introduced during this Congress, but in my judgment none are more objectionable than this, because it strikes at a system with which the whole people have expressed approval. It is unsafe to disturb questions so well settled, and for the good of the public service I hope the proposition may never become law.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, we think that if this bill should pass there should be an amendment to it, and I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment which I offer as a separate section.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"SEC. —. That all letter-carriers who have been discharged since the 4th day of March, 1893 (except those who were removed by the Postmaster-General upon written charges and investigation, or when arrested for crime), shall be reinstated as fast as vacancies may occur."

Mr. BRODERICK. I wish that to come in at the end of the bill as a separate section. Mr. Speaker, I believe we are now ready for a vote.

The SPEAKER. Debate is now closed. The previous question is operating on the bill and the amendment. The question is upon agreeing to this amendment.

The amendment of Mr. BRODERICK was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 22.

Mr. BRODERICK made the point of no quorum, but subsequently withdrew it.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRODERICK. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 87, noes 24.

Mr. BRODERICK. No quorum.

Mr. BYNUM. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYNUM. If we should adjourn now, will this bill come up on Monday?

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered, and it will come up on Monday.

Mr. BYNUM. Then I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BURROWS. Under the special order is that in order?

The SPEAKER. No quorum being present, it is in order. If there was a quorum present it would not be in order, but when there is no quorum the House must adjourn or order a call of the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the vote on the motion to adjourn, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. UPDEGRAFF, for ten days, on account of ill health.

To Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania, for four days, on account of sickness in his family.

The motion of Mr. BYNUM was then agreed to.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. ALLEN submitted the following resolution; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what percentage, if any, of the enlisted men, noncommissioned and commissioned officers of the regular Army of the United States are aliens, and what percentage are citizens of the United States by birth or naturalization, properly classifying the same respectively.

AMERICAN PRISONERS IN CUBA.

Mr. CALL. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to institute negotiations for the release of citizens of the United States now held in confinement by the Government of Spain in the Island of Cuba upon charges of complicity with or aid to the rebellion in the Island of Cuba or resistance to the authorities in all cases where such persons are held upon suspicion merely; and in cases where there is evidence against them, that they be brought to a speedy trial, and also that the President be requested to instruct the consul-general of the United States to make arrangements for the defense of such citizens where they are unable to procure the means to employ counsel and procure witnesses.

Mr. CALL. Before asking the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, I desire it to be accompanied by the following statement from a respectable citizen of the United States, made to me in a letter which I have just received. He states:

It is necessary that you introduce a resolution in the Senate in favor of the American citizens imprisoned here. One Mr. Williams, a native American, is in jail in Santa Clara without any cause. The poor man was imprisoned for some offense connected with his profession as a lawyer. Mayolini and Mendez are not yet tried, and, if the Department does not ask it, they will be held in jail for many years. If they were Spaniards they would have been released before this time; but being Americans, they are confined in jail upon suspicion, and will be held until the Government interferes for their relief.

It seems from this letter that the subjects of foreign governments receive protection and prompt interference in their behalf from their governments when arrested or charges of offenses are made against them and they are placed in confinement. These citizens of the United States have been long held in close and harsh imprisonment, and prompt action should be taken in their behalf.

I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the committee will take prompt action in securing the release of these citizens of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, in the absence of objection.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 23d instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1390) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit.

An act (S. 2208) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River at the foot of Main street, in the borough of Bellevernon, in the State of Pennsylvania.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 4312) to provide for the revival of suits, by mandamus, against officers of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 5863) to increase the penalty for embezzlement by directors, officers, or agents of national banks;

A bill (H. R. 6284) to prevent interference in the collection of State, county, and municipal taxes assessed against corporations and corporate property, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 6754) to amend section 15 of an act approving, with amendments, the funding act of Arizona, approved June 25, 1894;

A bill (H. R. 7384) to provide for the appointment of United States commissioners, and to define their jurisdiction, power, and duties.

The bill (H. R. 5246) providing for the inspection of immigrants by United States consuls was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there other resolutions, concurrent or otherwise? If not, the morning business is concluded, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask, as a matter of privilege, to call up the subject of the conference between the two Houses on House bill 4864.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears none, and the Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 19, 1894.

Resolved, That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 4864, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. MCMILLIN, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. REED, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. PAYNE be managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I hope that I fully realize the seriousness of the conditions under which we are about to act. The question which now confronts us would ordinarily be determined without discussion. Whenever there is a disagreement between the two Houses of Congress upon any measure of legislation, the orderly and ordinary mode of proceeding is to agree to a conference and attempt to adjust the differences. Thus only can legislation be perfected.

The country, Mr. President, is anxiously waiting for a speedy determination of this question. The National Treasury is depleted. There is not sufficient money to pay the current expenses of the Government. Factories are idle, workshops are closed, and honest mechanics and laborers are tramping through the country begging that they may be employed. Further suspense is destructive to the best interests of our common country. Further delay, further agitation, will be laid at the door of the Democratic party, which now controls every branch of this Government that deals with legislation. That responsibility, Mr.

President, is greater than has ever devolved upon us in the history of our country since 1860. I hope, I trust, I believe, that we shall meet this situation as becomes American Senators and as becomes patriotic American citizens.

The conditions in this Chamber were so well described by my distinguished friend from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] on Friday last that it would be idle and futile for me to attempt to add anything to what he has said. In meeting this situation he truly said that in a coördinate branch of the Government we have an overwhelming majority of Democrats able to pass any measure under their rules that they see proper, no matter how radical or how conservative; but that here we have only 44 Senators who were elected as Democrats, including the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], who has openly and manfully opposed this measure from the day it came before us for consideration until now.

We have only 43 votes, a bare majority of the Senate, every one of which is necessary to pass any bill; 43 votes to be cast by ambassadors from the great States of the Union, who have been honored by their constituents with seats in the highest legislative body in the world, and every one of whom had his distinct views and was compelled to represent fairly the interests of the great State which he represents. To harmonize them, to bring them together upon some common ground upon a bill which was in direct line and thought with the promise of their party, to make sacrifices of individual opinions, sacrifices of great interests, sacrifices almost of principle, was so great a task that possibly but once in the history of this body were the conditions such as we had to confront.

Behind those Senators were intelligent people urging them to extreme action in more than two-thirds of the States represented on the Democratic side. On the other were the great State of New York, the great State of New Jersey, the States of Ohio, Maryland, which said "We are in favor of the Democratic platform and in favor of a bill carrying out to the letter every promise of the Democratic party; but the bill which came to us from another place is so radical and so destructive, as we believe, of the interests of these great industries, that we can not support it with this income tax attached to it."

When we went into conference, as is usual in both parties, the only method known by which parties can be brought together—not a secret conclave to trade this interest or that, but a free and manly conference—a fair and straightforward statement of these differences was made; and, sir, I am glad to say that, while the Committee on Finance of this body had a majority of Southern Democrats on it, there has been the greatest desire to do justice to every section of the Union, and an intimation, coupled with the statement of the fact to any Southern man on that committee, that an industry was to be destroyed or impaired made the Southerner more anxious than our Northern friends to prevent a wrong and preserve the great industries of the Northern States.

It is not necessary for me, and it would not be proper for me, to enter into the details of these long hours of conference or to give the views of those who participated in it, but I will indorse every word the Senator from New Jersey has said to the effect that but for the patience, but for the wisdom, but for the earnest devotion to principle of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], the venerable Senator from Tennessee in front of me [Mr. HARRIS], my distinguished friend from Missouri on my right [Mr. VEST], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], these differences would not have been adjusted and we should have passed through the session with divisions as wide upon this side as it is possible to conceive of within a party. But they accomplished the feat which the timid thought was impossible. It required earnest and self-sacrificing work to bring it about, but it was done.

Right here, Mr. President, I think, in view of all the occurrences which have taken place, of all that has been said in the public press, of all the misrepresentations of this body, and of all the calumny which has been uttered and published and sent forth against members of this body, I have the right, or at least I feel it to be my duty to myself and to those who have coöperated with me, to give to the Senate and to the country a plain statement of these events.

I shall speak plainly, Mr. President, not in temper, with malice toward none, with the hope, however, that, as these matters have been brought to the public attention by others, by looking my fellow party men here and elsewhere straight in the eye, by telling the truth, and by putting the responsibility wherever it belongs, we may yet come together as honorable and patriotic men desiring to serve our common country should.

I want to say again, as I have said here often to every member of this body on this side of the Chamber in private, that no small matter, no personal wish, no desire to serve my State in opposition to other States, no pride of opinion, will prevent me from meeting any Democrat and saying to him that the paramount duty of us all is to serve our country and keep our party in power.

Mr. President, the declarations of the chairman of the conference committee on the part of a coördinate branch, which I have a right to allude to as a matter which concerns both Houses, accompanied, as it was, by the most extraordinary, the most uncalled for, and the most unwise communication that was ever penned by a President of the United States, place this body in a position where its members must see to it that the dignity and honor of this Chamber shall be maintained. It places me, Mr. President, in a position where I must tell the story of events exactly as they occurred. Never in the course of my life, and I have had connection with party management almost all my life, have I thought the provocation was sufficient, the abuse and misrepresentation violent enough, or the aspersion of character sufficient to induce me to talk of private matters in public: but the limit of endurance has been reached. It is not my honor, it is the honor of many of my fellows which impels me to make the statement which I now make.

Mr. President, you know [Mr. FAULKNER in the chair], and all the 43 Democrats here know that when we ascertained the fact that the Wilson bill as such could not pass, when we ascertained the fact that the first amended bill as reported by my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] could not pass this body; that it could not receive 43 votes, we counseled again. The subcommittee in charge of the bill was composed of the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. Every Democratic Senator was seen and consulted. His views and suggestions were ascertained, and a memorandum was made of every amendment proposed.

Then those of us, and I am one, responsible to a greater extent because of official connection with the party organization, said to them "With the slim majority in the Senate, with the diversity of views, with the excitement in the public mind, growing out of the great industrial revolution, it will be impossible to obtain 43 votes in the Senate to pass the bill unless we have the coöperation of the executive branch of the Government, its hearty good will, and its earnest support of what we shall do." These two gentlemen not only conferred with the executive branch, as they had a right to do, but they conferred with their fellows in the other House who were responsible and active in framing the original measure which came to this body.

So, when we were informed, and there can be no mistake as to the information, that this thorough coöperation, this hearty support which we knew to be necessary to the passage of the measure and the unification of our party was had, as we were assured, we went on to secure the passage of the bill. On the 23d of May, when we had reached that consummation, I stated to the Senate in the remarks which I then made that the bill with the Jones amendments—

> Is a Democratic measure of tariff reform, which merits and I believe will receive every Democratic vote in this body, the indorsement of a Democratic House, and the signature of a Democratic President.

Mr. President, I believed then, and I believe now, that I had the right to make that statement.

While those amendments were being considered, before they were offered to this body by the Senator from Arkansas, there was intense anxiety, there was great feeling among I may say a majority of the Democrats in both Houses of Congress that the amendments were too radical, that the bill, if amended as proposed, would not be agreeable to them, to say the least, and they hesitated about accepting the amendments because they were not radical enough in the direction of free trade. It became necessary to assure the hesitating, to soften the blow, if it was a blow, to the free trader, or the radical tariff reformer, to let them know and to let the country know that this compromise not only had the approval of the 43 votes on this side of the Chamber, but that it had the indorsement of the Executive branch.

Mr. GRAY. It was no compromise in principle.

Mr. GORMAN. And that it was no compromise in principle. I wish to emphasize that fact. It was directly in the line of the Democratic promise. There was no principle compromised from the beginning to the end. It was purely a revenue bill with no duties levied higher than the revenue standard, and no favoritism to any interest.

Then, as was understood and will not now be denied, the great Secretary of the Treasury, himself a tariff reformer of the foremost, regarded by his party fellows in that particular line as without a peer within his party, who had seen every amendment which was to be and was afterward proposed, who scanned every amendment, who made suggestions, if he had any to make, as he did, looking it all over, knowing the condition which confronted the party, wanting to let the country know that the Administration was in favor of it, and that it was a measure which the Democratic party could with honor stand upon, published in the Washington Post on April 30, 1894, the statement which I will ask to have read. His statement is not an interview given casually to a reporter, but as I am informed, and believe, was sent directly from the Treasury Department to the two associated press organizations that it might be published and be considered official. I ask my friend from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to read it.

Mr. COCKRELL read as follows:

MR. CARLISLE ON THE TARIFF BILL—HE THINKS THE SUPPORT OF THE SENATE WILL BE SECURED WITHOUT RADICAL CHANGES.

Secretary Carlisle, before his departure for a brief holiday trip to Fort Monroe, was asked whether the report was true that he had been taking part in conferences in regard to amendments to the tariff bill. He replied:

"I have had no conference upon this subject with anybody, except the Democratic members of the Senate Committee on Finance. It is true that an effort is being made to agree upon such changes in the pending bill as will secure for it the united and active support of all the Democrats in the Senate. The indications now are that this support can and will be secured without making radical changes in the rates of duty or material alterations in the form or structure of the tariff schedules as they were passed by the House of Representatives. In fact, I regard most of the changes now under consideration as quite unimportant, while the remainder are not of such a character as substantially to affect the merits of the bill as a measure for the reformation of the worst features of existing legislation upon this subject.

"I do not think we ought to permit differences of opinion upon mere matters of detail, or in regard to small increases or reductions of rates in the bill as it now stands, to prevent the redemption of our pledges to the people, and therefore I am in favor of securing, if possible, without any surrender of principle and without abandoning any part of the Democratic policy of tariff reform, such mutual concessions upon these points as will consolidate our strength and pass the measure at the earliest possible date. So far as the proposed amendments relate to duties on important articles of consumption now subject to duty, the rates suggested as a basis for adjustment are all much lower than in the present law, while there are only a few instances in which they are higher than in the bill reported by the Senate committee.

"By far the most important single article upon which a change of duty is now proposed is sugar, raw and refined, and it is strenuously contended by persons interested in the production of this article that the specific rates already in the bill as reported by the Senate committee are higher than the ad valorem rates which it is now proposed to insert. Whether this is correct or not depends upon the price of sugar in the foreign markets from time to time, and therefore it is not possible to make an exactly accurate statement upon the subject; but I am satisfied that the difference, if any, between the specific rates heretofore proposed and the ad valorem rate now under consideration is so small as to be of no material consequence either way. At any rate, I think that differences of opinion upon this question, which has always been troublesome and vexatious, should not be allowed to defeat the passage of the tariff bill, and I believe this is the opinion of all intelligent and sincere advocates of revenue reform.

"The repeal of the McKinley act and the substitution of a more just and equitable measure in its place are of vital importance to the prosperity of the country, and the people have a right to expect that all really in favor of a reduction of the tariff taxation will make such reasonable concessions in each other's views as will certainly accomplish these results. If the country is to wait for tariff reform until a measure is devised which is entirely acceptable in all its parts to every Senator and Representative whose vote is necessary to pass it our promises will never be kept."

Replying to a question as to whether any changes were proposed in that part of the bill which relates to the income tax, Mr. Carlisle said:

"It is well known that there has been from the beginning considerable opposition to the proposed income tax, even among those who have voted for and supported the bill with that feature in it. Much of this opposition has been based upon the provisions of the bill which prescribe the methods of ascertaining and collecting the tax, some of which are alleged to be arbitrary and inquisitorial. In my opinion, many of those objectionable provisions ought to be and can be safely omitted from the bill, and other changes can be made, which the advocates of an income tax can consistently accept, and which will at the same time remove the principal objections of its opponents and secure their support for the bill. This method of securing revenue has never before been resorted to by the Government of the United States except in time of war when it was absolutely necessary to utilize every means within its reach, and there are many patriotic citizens who are not satisfied that its adoption as a permanent part of our system is justifiable in time of peace when no great emergency exists.

"This view of the subject could be fairly met, I think, by limiting the operation of the law to a reasonable period—say five years—so that its effect upon the country could be thoroughly tested, leaving the people to decide hereafter, in the light of the experience thus acquired, whether it shall continue or expire by its own terms. The power to repeal always exists, and the power to reenact can be promptly exercised if the majority of the people approve the measure."

Mr. GORMAN. Such was the declaration of the Secretary of the Treasury. That statement from him had the desired effect. It softened the hard places when we came to confer and to act. It was accepted as the utterance of the Administration. It did much to enable us to bring together forty-three Senators in this body. But for it I do not believe we ever should have succeeded in getting together. But this was not all. It did not rest solely with the Secretary of the Treasury to speak as he does necessarily for the President in matters concerning his Department.

The President was not ignorant of what we proposed to do. Nothing was concealed from him. The papers announced on the day following the interview with Mr. Carlisle that the President himself concurred with his great Secretary. So we understood, and, if it was not true, then forty-three Senators on this side of the Chamber were misled. Every prominent amendment to the bill was as well known to him as to me.

While neither the President nor his Secretary was in love with all the provisions of these amendments—I may say in fairness that there were many of them to which they were opposed, as the Senator from Missouri on my right, and the Senator from Arkansas, and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance were opposed to many of them, and as it was a compromise measure it was not satisfactory to a single solitary human being on this side of the Chamber in all its details—yet I assert that as a whole the structure as presented, as scanned by these gentlemen whom I have named, as looked into by us, was satisfactory, and was recognized as the best that was possible to pass through this body, and that from no quarter, high or low, from the President, through his Cabinet, or by any member of this body, was it ever suggested or intimated that there was any violation of Democratic principle in anything we did.

Now, Mr. President, this is a very broad statement. I call upon the two gentlemen who had the immediate control of the bill, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], and I ask them if I have made a statement which varies a hair's breadth from the truth; and it is due to the Senate, it is due to themselves, it is due to me, it is due to the country that the truth shall be known. Let the people have the truth. I pause for a reply from my friend from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, when I addressed the Senate on Friday last I studiously avoided going into details which might add to the irritated feeling that was known to exist. As the Senator from Maryland has addressed himself to me particularly as one of the two Senators who did most of the work in preparing the bill on the Democratic side, I wish to say that I have never spoken to the President upon this subject, nor have I seen him since he did me the honor to send for me during the pendency of what was known as the bill repealing the purchasing clause of the Sherman act.

The Secretary of the Treasury, while we were working upon the tariff bill, was frequently in our committee room, and distinctly gave us to understand that the greatest possible calamity which could come to the Democratic party and to the country would be the failure to pass a bill to take the place of the McKinley act upon the statute book. He often consulted with us in regard to the details and distinctly impressed upon me and the other members of the committee his opinion that no difference of opinion in regard to rates or duties should prevent the great consummation of passing a tariff bill during the present session of Congress.

The Senator from Rhode Island, as the RECORD shows and as my brother Senators will remember, fairly and legitimately, as a matter of debate, asked me repeatedly while we were discussing the bill originally reported from the Finance Committee to the Senate if a large number of amendments, amounting to more than three hundred, had not been prepared to the bill and if they would not be offered in a very few days. I told him then honestly that I knew of no such amendments, and I stated the truth. It is true that my colleague, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who had been working with me upon the bill had told me that he intended to consummate a compromise bill if possible, and that he would see the dissatisfied Senators upon this side of the Chamber and ascertain what amendments would be necessary to secure their votes.

I encouraged him in that direction, and told him, as I have told everybody else, and as the Secretary of the Treasury had stated to us, that the greatest calamity which could come to the Democratic party and to the country, in my judgment, would be the failure to pass a tariff bill at the present session of Congress.

When I answered the Senator from Rhode Island as I did, I answered truthfully, because I knew then of no such amendments. Two or three days afterwards my colleague on the committee, the Senator from Arkansas, came to me with a number of amendments which were afterwards adopted and sent to the conference committee.

I found many of them such that I was compelled to resist their adoption; conspicuously, as I now remember, the duties upon cotton yarns and cutlery, and the metal schedule generally. He appealed to me to withdraw my objection, and in argument upon the question stated that the Secretary of the Treasury had passed upon every one of the amendments and agreed to them; that he had also seen the President of the United States, who had told him that the bill as proposed to be amended would be acceptable to him, and had concluded his conversation with him in these words, as far as I remember: "I am willing to do or say anything that will pass this bill through Congress." Then I said: "This is to receive the support of the Administration? Let us distinctly understand each other. If we go into this fight, it will be a close one, and we must have the President and his Administration with us."

The Senator from Arkansas assured me that this would be the fact. I gave up my personal opinions; I went into the contest, and have done my duty; and for the first time when his letter was read in the House of Representatives I ascertained that the President of the United States is against the bill as passed by the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. And now I ask the same question of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is proper that I should make some statement to the Senate of the facts connected with the amendments in the bill. It is well known to every member of the Senate on this side of the Chamber that after the Finance Committee of the Senate had reported an amended bill to the Senate we were convinced that it would be impossible to pass the bill. We were assured by a number of Democrats on this side of the Chamber that the proposed changes bearing upon industries located in their States were so radical and so sweeping that they would feel themselves compelled to vote against the bill. We knew that to pass the bill in its form at that time was impossible.

With that fact staring us in the face and appreciating the necessity of passing some sort of tariff bill while we had power, the Senator from Tennessee, the Senator from Missouri, and I and other members of the committee and Senators not on the committee, discussed the situation frequently. I suggested to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] that there was but one way out of the difficulties that surrounded us, and that was for us to ascertain what the difficulties were in the minds of Senators who would vote against the bill unless it was modified. Without telling any member of the Senate except him of my intention, I began conversations with individual Senators, one after another. I carefully noted down the objections and criticisms of each and each particular paragraph through the bill to which objection was made and the objection made to it.

I went from the beginning to the end through the bill with man after man, on this side of the Chamber, spending days and days in the work.

While thus engaged I scarcely ever saw the Senator from Missouri, my colleague on the committee. I would not have hesitated for a moment to have explained the whole thing to him if it had been clear that there would have been any outcome except failure from my efforts. I was apprehensive that I would strike something which would be insurmountable, that could not be gotten over, and in that event it was of no use to annoy him or anybody else with the details of a futile effort at a settlement.

After I had talked with each man who was opposing the bill and had noted on the margin of the bill I had every objection presented by each of them, and after I had gone over the marginal notes and made up my mind about exactly what were the smallest modifications which would at all meet the difficulties which were in the way—the first step I took after reaching that point was to go to the Secretary of the Treasury. Before beginning this attempt at a compromise bill, I had previously talked with him and the President about the idea I had of the possibility of some sort of a compromise being accomplished. Both thought it was wise to undertake exactly the course that I pursued.

After finding out what these gentlemen on our side of the Chamber said and their objections, I went to the Secretary of the Treasury with my bill in my hand. I went clear through the bill from one end to the other. I gave him every solitary proposed amendment. He and I together went over the data; we went over the reports of the Treasury Department; we considered the bearing and effect of each proposed change, what the law was under the McKinley act, what it was to be under the Wilson bill, and what changes the proposed Senate amendments would produce. After we had gone over each one of these items one by one, I asked him the question as to what he thought ought to be done; whether if we could bring forty-three Democrats to support the bill thus modified we could afford to make the concessions, which neither he nor I nor a large majority on this side of the Chamber wanted to make, but if it was better under the circumstances for us to do it. He said there was no doubt about it in his mind for a single moment.

Then, as the President would not perhaps have the time necessary to go through each of the items and to figure out its bearing and result, I asked the Secretary of the Treasury, as the head of the Treasury Department, the representative of that branch of the Government to let the President know just what these proposed amendments meant, telling him at the same time that I had not proposed the amendments to the Finance Committee; that they had not been shown to a single member of the Finance Committee and nobody know of their exact existence; that not one of the Senators who were insisting on changes knew what the others had proposed; that I alone had all the facts and all the information as to the position of these different men bearing on the subject.

In a day or two I called on the President, and asked him if the Secretary had made the statement to him and explained to him the proposed changes of the bill. He said he had. I then said, "Mr. President, I will not take one step further in this matter unless this proposed compromise meets the approval of the Administration. It must be indorsed by you and the Secretary of the Treasury or I will go no further." He then said to me (almost in the language the Senator from Missouri has just quoted, and which I reported to him) that he would do and say anything he could to effect a compromise; that it was a wise thing and a proper thing to do.

Now, remember, this proposed compromise did not embrace just what the Senator from Missouri has stated. There was nothing said in it about cotton yarns and nothing about woolen yarns. There was nothing said about the cotton schedule or the woolen schedule. The gentlemen who objected to the bill as reported said they would be willing for the Finance Committee to make such changes in these schedules as they thought were necessary and proper. They had suggested that there should be changes, though they were not sufficiently familiar with these schedules to do it.

But in the bill we had reported and which was then pending in the Senate and which had been practically rejected by a number of Democrats on this side, there was a proposition for a tax on coal and iron ore.

It was then in the bill; it was a part of the bill, and it was the modification of that bill which I undertook to make with the approval of the Secretary and the President, and which I supposed and believed until I heard the President's letter had been read in the House of Representatives the other day had met his cordial approval. Both the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury in all the conversations I had with them expressed my own feelings and expressed the feelings of a majority of the Democrats on this side, that we preferred not to make any of these changes; that we would rather not make any of these concessions; but when we found it was impossible to pass the bill as reported by the Finance Committee, the question was whether we had better pass a modified bill or have no bill at all; and upon that point I understood the President to express himself as positively as I ever heard any man express himself on any question that he was in favor of such action, and the Secretary of the Treasury expressed himself the same way.

This is a plain statement of the facts about the matter, and it is due to me and to the Senate that I should state it.

Mr. VILAS. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas (he has alluded to it, but I want the point specifically understood) if there was anything in the amendments which he proposed, and which were the subject of conference with the Secretary of the Treasury, or anything which the President said, that related to the subject of the duty on coal or iron ore?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In every conversation I had with the President, coal and iron ore were mentioned—in every single one. In each one of those conversations the President said he earnestly desired and hoped that in the progress of the compromise free coal and free iron ore could be brought out of it; but he nowhere ever uttered one solitary word against going forward with the amendments with coal and iron ore in the bill as we had proposed it. [Laughter and applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Chair will announce to the occupants of the galleries that under the rules of the Senate demonstrations of applause or dissent are not permitted, and that if repeated the Chair will be under the necessity of ordering the galleries cleared.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President——

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me to proceed.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to ask just one question at this point, and it is in order to ascertain the fact.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well.

Mr. VILAS. Was there a single conversation which the Senator from Arkansas had with the President in which the President did not express his hope that the outcome of the arrangement and legislation would be free coal and free iron ore?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. He said on every occasion that he hoped such would be the result, but there was no suggestion, I think I may be allowed to say, at any time, that there was in the mind of the President any abandonment of principle in an agreement to impose a tax on those articles.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I notice in this morning's Post, published in this city, a statement purporting to come from the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], a Senator whom we have delighted to honor by giving him a place upon the great Finance Committee and making him President pro tempore of this body. I ask that Senator if that interview is substantially correct, or rather, will he, in justice to us all, state to the Senate and to the country whether the statements that I and the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Arkansas have made are substantially correct, for it will not do to do injustice to any high officer of the Government. I ask that Senator now if he will state to the Senate and the country exactly what he knows of this case?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I have had very little to do in the makeup of the details of the Senate amendments to the tariff bill. As a member of the Finance Committee I was continuously in conference with the Democratic members of the committee when those amendments were being shaped and considered. The amendments in the form of concessions to Senators who were not willing to accept the bill as originally reported by the Finance Committee were considered by each and every Democratic member of the committee, and my distinct recollection is that however distasteful many of them, or I may say all of them, were to the Democratic members of the committee, each and every one of us agreed to concede them as a compromise of conflicting opinions in respect to the questions involved.

After the Democratic members of the committee had agreed to them and the Democratic members of the Senate in conference agreed that we should make these concessions and incorporate those amendments in the bill, and after the consideration of the bill had commenced in this body, I had as many as two conversations with the President upon the subject of the bill and its general management and the prospect of its passage. I will not undertake to reproduce the language of the President in any one of those interviews. I will, however, state that my distinct understanding as the result of each of those interviews was that the President was deeply and earnestly interested in passing the bill with the concessions that the committee of the Senate had consented to make as a compromise measure—not that it was satisfactory to him, any more than it was satisfactory to me, but because it was a great improvement upon the existing law imposing tariff taxation, and a compromise that he, as I, deemed it important to make rather than perpetuate the McKinley act.

After the passage of the bill and after the Democratic members of the conference of the two Houses were consulting as to what we would favor in respect to the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and myself had an interview with the President, in which he was distinctly informed by both of us as to existing conditions and as to the probable impossibility of our being able to induce the House to agree to some of the concessions we had been compelled to make in the Senate.

My distinct understanding in that interview was that the President desired that we should pass the bill as it had passed the Senate if we could make no better terms. He was decidedly in favor of its passage in that form if the Senate could not recede from its amendments. He expressed to the Senator from Arkansas and myself the hope that we could in some way arrange to put coal and iron ore upon the free list, but I told him I feared it would be utterly impossible to do so. My understanding as the result of that interview is that the President was decidedly in favor of passing the bill as it had passed the Senate if no better terms could be made with those Senators to whom the concessions had been made.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the venerable Senator from Tennessee whether in any of these interviews or discussions, and particularly the one after the passage of the bill through the Senate and the appointment of the conferees, the suggestion was made to him from that or any other quarter that the tax placed upon coal and upon iron ore was a violation of Democratic principles, and that Senators would be guilty of perfidy if they insisted upon it?

Mr. HARRIS. No such suggestion, Mr. President, has ever been made to me by the President or by any member of the Cabinet or by any human being.

Mr. GORMAN. Now, Mr. President, my distinguished friend, the chairman of this committee, the Senator from Indiana, has had intimate connection, of course, with this measure throughout. I happen to know that he is not feeling very well to-day, and expects himself to make his own statement before the close of this discussion. Therefore I shall not ask him to-day to give the country the benefit of his statement, so that all the truth in connection with this matter may go to the people.

As I have said, sir, this is a most extraordinary proceeding, for a Democrat, elected to the highest place in the Government, and fellow-Democrats in another high place, where they have the right to speak and legislate generally, to join with the commune in traducing the Senate of the United States, to blacken the characters of Senators who are as honorable as they are, who are as patriotic as they ever can be, who have done as much to serve their party as the men who are now the beneficiaries of your labor and mine, to taunt and jeer at us before the country as the advocates of trusts and as guilty of dishonor and perfidy.

Mr. President, it is time to speak. The limit of endurance has been reached. The Senate owes it to itself. Every Senator here who is a part of this Democratic majority owes it to himself. There is no power, no matter how great, in this country, even the President with his patronage, that would keep me silent longer under the charges, under the imputations so freely made from such distinguished quarters. I hurl back the accusation and say that this treatment of their fellows is discreditable. It is destructive to the Government that men in high position should attempt to lower this body, a conservative body, consisting, when full, of 88 worthy representatives of States.

No man can reach here by devious ways and remain long. The Senate is composed of men who represent the best thought of the country, men who have stood and battled for tariff reform when those in higher places dared not show their heads; men who, when another place was overrun and those in it had not the courage to stand and fight a tyrant, stood here at the risk of health, at the risk of fortune, of all that is dear, and saved the liberties of the country. Then these traducers of the Senate could not be seen. We will not be traduced longer, Mr. President; the facts must come.

We have seen how this bill passed the Senate; how only it could pass the Senate. No man, whether in this or in another place, no matter what his position may be, who styles himself a Democrat, who believes in his party, can change materially this measure without defeating it. Who dare take that responsibility?

One hundred and seventy-four million dollars, as shown by the figures presented from the Treasury Department by the Senator from New Jersey, would be saved to the people of the country in five years by the passage of this bill. It is not all my friend from Missouri wants, or my friend from Indiana, or my friend from Arkansas, or my friend from Tennessee; it is not all that any of us want; it is not what I want; but it is all we can get. All the power we have will not drive it beyond that. He who takes the responsibility of keeping the McKinley law upon the statute books, instead of accepting this bill, has a terrible responsibility before his country.

I can imagine no man who would do it unless he was consumed with vanity and desired to set his judgment above that of his fellows, or desired to keep an issue before the people upon which he might ride into power, rather than give content and peace and labor and prosperity to his fellow-countrymen.

The Senator from New York has fought this bill openly and manfully, and fought it from the moment he could not get what he wanted—the elimination of the income tax. In every move he has made during the consideration of this bill we looked upon that distinguished Democrat as the most active and most dangerous opponent we had upon the floor. He said he was fighting for a principle, but he submitted to the vote being taken, and the bill was passed by only the requisite number of Democrats. What a godsend the letter of President Cleveland has been to that distinguished Senator! [Laughter.] It is the only comfort he has had out of this Administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. The Senator is entirely right in that last proposition. [Laughter.]

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator rejoices in it, because he tells the Senate, and he tells the country frankly, that he wants to defeat the bill if the income tax is contained in it. I hope I do not misrepresent the Senator if I do not use his exact language.

Mr. President, the bass in the Potomac never went more swiftly to the hook than the Senator from New York did to this letter of the President of the United States. He was almost prepared at first to swallow it all, until he reached sugar and the income tax. But immediately he offered a motion that the Senate recede from the amendments on coal and iron ore. Why did he do it? He did it because he knew, or he thought he knew, that if he was successful in changing a line of the bill before it went back to the conference, he would demoralize his Democratic friends on this side, and the bill would be defeated.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. The Senator will do me the justice, I think, to state that I made both those motions weeks before the letter of President Cleveland appeared.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I do. I said a moment ago that the Senator from New York had been consistent from the day the bill came up for consideration in his efforts to defeat the bill. He has made every motion which it was possible for him to make to defeat it. He would defeat it now. I do not say that he does not believe in free coal and free iron, but the main purpose of the Senator from New York has been from the beginning to thwart his party and to prevent the passage of the bill. He, with his present attitude, thinks he has discovered a great principle in the income tax. Another distinguished citizen of New York thinks he has discovered a great principle in the tax on coal and iron, and between the two, differing in everything else, if they adhere to their principle, the bill will be defeated, and the Senator knows it. He is playing his hand well. He is stirring up passions here. It is the rôle of Iago, played by a man who is not suited to the part. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, such an interference comes for the first time in the history of our country. Never since the Declaration of Independence was such action taken by a President of the United States. It is well right here at the beginning, to read a single clause of the Farewell Address of the Father of his Country, and I ask my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] if he will favor me by reading the clause which I have marked from that immortal address.

Mr. BLACKBURN read as follows:

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres; avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position.

The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the other, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern—some of them in our country, and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way in which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, this is an appropriate time to recall to our countrymen these declarations of that great man. The one encroachment has occurred. Let every self-respecting member of either branch of Congress, who believes in our form of Government, put his condemnation upon the first step, which would, if followed, lead to the control of your Government by one man. Remember, fellow-countrymen, that in a time of great political excitement we on this side of the Chamber and Democrats throughout the United States looked with dread to the concentration of the Army in Washington, when at one time it looked as if the great captain, who then was the head of the nation, would hold the power of Government himself. His superb patriotism and the compromise which was made, by which Hayes was counted in, saved us by the forms of law.

Do not open the door for any man who controls three hundred thousand appointments to dictate to either House of Congress what they shall do. Keep your committees of conference free from any outside influence; let us say that that is a matter which belongs to us, and that the liberty of the Senate shall not be invaded, though a thousand hirelings write the Senate down and traduce its members.

Mr. President, it is said in this communication, and indorsed very thoroughly and completely by the distinguished senior Senator from New York, that there is a Democratic principle involved in taxing raw materials, and that if we tax coal and iron ore we violate that principle. The Senator from New York asserted that every platform we have had for twelve years declared for that principle. The President says that it would be dishonorable to tax raw materials. Men who set up a high standard must themselves come to you with clean hands. The House of Representatives, if they demanded free raw material as a principle, ought to have applied that rule throughout the bill. Did they do it? No; they did not do it. There are innumerable instances in this bill as it came here where the crudest sort of raw material is taxed.

Statement of raw materials made dutiable by the bill H. R. 4864, as reported from the Committee on Ways and Means December 19, 1893: Alumina, etc.; chalk, etc.; extracts of logwood, etc.; glycerine, crude; whiting and Paris white, dry; sponges; sumac; china clay, or kaolin; marble, rough or squared; lead ore and lead dross; barley; hops; castor beans; flaxseed; waste; zinc spelter.

Now you ask us to strike coal and iron from a bill which according to your statement has no principle in it. [Laughter.] The whole criticism is on what the Senate has done.

Mr. President, many great and good men have been elected to the Presidency of the United States; we have had a great many Democratic Houses of Representatives, and the Senate was controlled prior to 1860 by some of the greatest men of the nation. It has, however, been left to the year 1894, on the 7th day of June, for the discovery to be made by any Democratic statesman that it was a violation of principle to tax either coal or iron.

The Senator from New York says that the Democratic platform has said so. I deny it. The evidence which he produces in regard to the last platform was evidence which refutes the statement he made, as I shall try to show.

In the first tariff bill which was ever passed, when we had statesmen who were near to the time of the formation of the Constitution, who understood a principle when they saw it better than some of us do, who are a hundred years distant from that period, levied a tax on coal of 56 cents a ton of 2,240 pounds; from 1792 to 1794 the tax was 84 cents a ton; from 1794 to 1812 it was $1.40 a ton; from 1812 to 1816 it was $2.80 a ton; from 1824 to 1842, the great Democratic period, when the giants of the party controlled the Government and when we had undisputed control in every branch, what do you suppose was the tax levied on coal? One dollar and sixty-eight cents a ton. In 1842 it was increased to $1.75 a ton. I insert the table:

The changes from time to time in the duty on bituminous coal is shown in the following compilation of the tariff laws, to-wit:

Year.	Rate.	Duty per ton.
1789	2 cents per bushel, equals	$0.56
1790-1792	3 cents per bushel, equals	.84
1792-1794	4½ cents per bushel, equals	1.26
1794-1812	5 cents per bushel, equals	1.40
1812-1816	10 cents per bushel, equals	2.80
1816-1824	5 cents per bushel, equals	1.40
1824-1842	6 cents per bushel, equals	1.68
1842-1846		1.75
1846-1857	30 per cent ad valorem, equals	$0.65 to .75
1857-1861	24 per cent ad valorem, equals	.55 to .65
1861-1862		1.00
1862-1864		1.10
1864-1872		1.25

From 1856 to 1866, by a treaty, made it is true by Democrats, we had an arrangement with Canada that we would stop charging any duty upon her coal provided she would let ours into Canada free of duty. That ran ten years, until 1866, and then by the common consent of every patriotic Democrat in the country, without dissent on either side of the Chamber, we abrogated that treaty and put coal back upon the taxable list, and the duty remains now at 75 cents a ton.

What did the Senate propose to do? To put a tax of 40 cents a ton on coal, only one-half of what Robert J. Walker placed upon coal in his great Democratic tariff, and less than was put upon it in the great tariff act of 1857, when R. M. T. Hunter, of Virginia, managed that bill in the Senate as you [Mr. VOORHEES] manage this now. We have fixed the duty 10 per cent lower than he fixed it.

There, Mr. President, is the uniform action of Democrats from the foundation of the Government, taxing coal, and the same is true of iron ore, the duty on which we have reduced lower than the Democrats ever did prior to the war; and yet you turn around and tell us it is a violation of a Democratic principle.

Mr. PUGH. And that is "perfidy."

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, "perfidy." That will become a common word now, I suppose, Mr. President.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. HILL. The same tariffs to which the Senator has referred, and which he asserts were Democratic tariffs, imposed a duty upon wool and lumber, did they not?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes, Mr. President, they did. Therefore such duties were not imposed altogether as a matter of principle. It was done in the adjustment of the details of the schedules.

The Senator from New York, and his distinguished fellow-citizen of New York, want to have iron and coal free. They think they have discovered a new principle, and that it is in a Democratic platform. I deny it. It never has been in a Democratic platform. The Senator from New York cited the action of the House of Representatives at the session preceding the Chicago convention of 1892, as an evidence that that convention indorsed free raw material. I deny it.

Let us go back, however, Mr. President, to 1884, when President Cleveland was first nominated, and then elected by the grace of God and a great deal of hard work by people whom it is not necessary to describe. [Laughter.] That platform declared not for free raw materials, but for a fair revenue duty.

Mr Cleveland came into power on that platform. He sent his celebrated message of December, 1887, to Congress recommending a revision of the tariff. He talked of free wool; but show me a single sentence in that message in regard to coal or iron, or any general declaration as to free raw material all around. It was not in the message, and it was not even in the report of the head of the Treasury Department; and the distinguished Senator from Texas on my left [Mr. MILLS], who is known to be as thorough and radical a tariff reformer as exists, who is manly and outspoken about it, who framed the bill in response to the President's message, put a tax on coal at 75 cents a ton, a tax on iron ore, and a tax on sugar.

Mr. MILLS. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. MILLS. I was in just precisely the same situation I am to-day, and in which the majority on this side of the Chamber are to-day; I was in the hands of half a dozen gentlemen who controlled that measure. It was not my choice to put iron ore or coal on the free list, though the Senator charges me with making that bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas and I have not been very intimately associated upon these matters, but I think he knows me well enough to know that I do not intend to do him an injustice. I would not do him, nor would I do anybody, an injustice if I knew it. I am only giving the history of this case, and the Senator is a prominent figure in that history. [Laughter.] I want to give his bill more credit than he has given the bill which he has called the Gorman-Brice bill. I should have preferred his bill; I did from the beginning; I so told the Senator, and I am glad he has stated the facts.

That bill was framed with a view of passing the House of Representatives, not representing the views in half of its items of the now Senator from Texas and the then great leader of the other House, but he was framing a bill for his party. His effort was to frame a bill which could be passed, just as we have been endeavoring here to frame a bill which could be passed. Before the passage of that bill, the convention at St. Louis was about to assemble and the President of the United States, Mr. Cleveland, was about to be renominated by acclamation. No Democrat from one end of the land to the other opposed his nomination. He wanted a platform upon which he could stand and be elected, for his tariff message had created a great deal of excitement and feeling throughout the country.

That platform was drawn and drawn with his approval, not saying a word about the Mills bill, but simply reaffirming the declaration made at Chicago in 1884. That was his own wish, wanting to stand, as he ought to have stood, indorsing the platform upon which he was elected, and his recommendations in the message of 1887 were of necessity in strict compliance with the platform upon which he was nominated, not one word of which referred to free raw materials.

Mr. President, as it has been published by a very distinguished author, Mr. Henry Watterson, and as the facts are no longer private, I can afford to repeat what Mr. Watterson said after the convention, because every word of it was true. When I went to the convention at the express request of the man who was to be nominated, to present his conservative platform, the radicals at the convention—I mean the free traders and the more advanced tariff reformers—were not content to stop with the simple reaffirming of the platform of 1884. They framed a resolution indorsing the Mills bill as a whole, and there the Senator from New York will find the resolution indorsing a bill which taxed coal 75 cents a ton and iron ore 75 cents a ton. On that platform Mr. Cleveland ran and made his campaign. Where was the principle of the Senator from New York and his friends who think as he does when this specific declaration was substituted for the one proposed?

Take the convention of 1892. It met after the House of Representatives—for we did not control this body or the executive branch—had passed numerous bills to put this and that article on the free list. They knew it was not possible to pass a tariff bill. So they came not with a great constructive measure, but for the purpose of stirring up the other side and doing something in the direction of tariff reform, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means used the homeopathic remedy instead of the allopathic. The other House sent over bills, not to put coal on the free list, but to put a number of other articles on the free list. The convention met, and the wise heads of the Democratic party, and I assume the closest friends of the President, with my distinguished friend from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], if I mistake not, and the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], on the committee, prepared resolutions indorsing the other House. Oh, no; we were too astute to do that. We commended the House of Representatives for going in the direction of free raw materials. Then came the nomination of Mr. Cleveland, amid that scene which has never been equaled in any convention, with the thunder rolling and the lightning flashing, and every man in the convention feeling unsafe for his life in that temporary structure. The men who were opposed to Mr. Cleveland's nomination, who in all probability wanted to strike a blow at his election, brought in an extreme resolution, going beyond what the conservatives, who were Mr. Cleveland's friends, wanted put in the platform. They put in the addition which I will read:

> We denounce Republican protection as a fraud, a robbery of the great majority of the American people for the benefit of the few. We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties, except for the purposes of revenue only, and we demand that the collection of such taxes shall be limited to the necessities of the Government when honestly and economically administered.

The President scanned the platform as an able, conscientious, earnest man would. He had no reservations. He was ready to present to the country his best thought, and to tell frankly what he would do if he became President. He felt, as all his friends around him felt, that the extreme action at Chicago would put his election in jeopardy. He knew, just as the great captain on the other side, Mr. Blaine, had expressed it in 1884, that the declarations of a great national convention, consisting of hundreds of delegates, had no longer any weight with the American people.

It was the declaration of the candidate himself to which the people looked. Platforms were obsolete. It was the letter of the candidate accepting the nomination, and saying what he would do if elected, that the people accepted. Hence his careful consideration of that letter. After conference with his friends, he deliberately and wisely said, in the line of all precedents, of all the declarations he had made, of all the declarations that his party had ever made, in the exact line of all legislation from Jefferson down to Grover Cleveland in 1887, we will not destroy any industry; we will remodel the tariff; we will give lower duties; we will even the burdens on the people and we will give freer raw materials—not free raw materials. There it stood. As I have once before said in the Senate, but for that declaration I do not believe Mr. Cleveland could have carried the country and been elected President of the United States.

Mr. President, is the proposed duty of 40 cents a ton on coal a revenue duty? It is lower than any Democrat ever claimed to put upon coal when we had the power heretofore. But is it a revenue duty pure and simple? There were imported—

Year.	Tons coal.	Value.	Duty.	Average value per ton.	Average ad valorem duty, per cent.
1891	1,031,500	$3,558,932	$773,670	$3.45	21.73
1892	1,309,974	4,352,180	982,480	3.32	22.57
1893	1,102,231	3,614,202	826,673	3.27	22.93

Now you have reduced the duty one-half, and if the importations do not double, then every man who is familiar with the subject is mistaken. It will give to one company, a foreign syndicate, in five years all the trade from Boston and the East. Being a revenue duty, we have a right to stand by it. Who wants free coal? This coal is not used except for manufacturing purposes. It is not used for domestic purposes. It is used for manufacturing purposes and by the railroads. There is not a human being, man, woman or child, from the Ohio River to California who would be benefited one iota by free coal. You have coal in nearly every State west of the Ohio River. The cost of transportation prevents coal coming to you from any foreign shore. There is not a man, woman, child, or beast from the Potomac River to the Gulf of Mexico that would be benefited by it. Who would be benefited? New England with cheaper fuel would be benefited, if it amounted to anything to them. But they do not want it. They do not vote for it. Not a New Englander asks for it.

None of the New England Senators will vote for it. One other State has an interest—California. California imported and paid the duty on most of the coal to which I have referred. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], the Democrat who presided over the St. Louis convention in 1888, and his colleague, a Republican, both stand here and tell you that California does not demand free coal. They do not want it. They prefer to see the American interest fairly protected under a revenue duty. Then who does want it? Who demands it? Does it benefit anybody here? The professional, the theoretical reformer says it will reduce the cost of manufacturing.

The cost of what manufacturing? Massachusetts people and those of Rhode Island, as I have the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] in my eye, are as astute as any people on the face of the earth. If there is a penny anywhere to be found or made they can find it or make it quicker than any other people in the world. They go into detail in all their expenses. What do you suppose free coal would give them in the manufacture of woolen goods or cotton goods or anything else in the way of raiment for the people? It would give them about three-fourths of 1 per cent on the cost. It would be so small that you could not deduct it from a yard of calico or a ton of iron. It would be of no benefit. It might increase the profits of the manufacturers, but it is so small that they do not want it to the exclusion of the American interest

Whom would free coal benefit? There is but one concern in the world to which it would give any special benefit. As we have gone on with the revolution in commerce, the methods of transportation, the modes of operating lines, and the facility with which we dig from the bowels of the earth not only ores, but coal and the precious metals have changed all the conditions which existed twenty years ago. In Nova Scotia there is a deposit of coal as great as there is in any other one spot on the face of the earth.

The Canadian Government own every ounce of it, and until five years ago no man could dig it without paying a royalty to that Government. The policy of the Canadian Government until five years ago was the same as that of Maryland a hundred years ago. They thought the coal so valuable that they would not lease the land except in small lots of 30 or 40 acres, so small that no great plant could be put upon it. The coal could not be dug, although it is right at the sea and under the sea. Mined in this way it could not be worked successfully to compete with American coal.

Five years ago, I think it was, or four years ago the Canadian government were induced to change their policy. They wiped out or permitted to be wiped out all the small leases. They contracted with persons prominently connected with that great, mammoth corporation, the Canadian Pacific Railroad, which was built by the English Government as a great war measure, the most threatening piece of work that has ever been constructed against American interests, and they permitted them, with certain gentlemen within our own country associated with them, to lease as a whole all this vast coal field, with an agreement that for ninety-nine years they should pay to the Canadian government 12 cents a ton as royalty on all the coal which they removed. This company, with that privilege, constructed for the first time a road right around the border of the sea, only 27 miles in length, to Lewiston, where there is a great harbor, open all the year round, where ships can enter. They there for the first time got American machinery, so that they can dig the coal and carry it only 27 miles to the water.

Now, the Canadian government want revenue. The men who have the mines want to make profits. Here are Boston and Providence and New England, which consume the soft coal of the two Virginias, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. "We are nearer to it," the Canadians said; "we can deliver the coal there and drive the Americans out of their own territory. Give us free coal and we will sweep this American industry from New England." If you do you will place in the Canadian treasury money which ought to go into the American Treasury. You were thus asked to permit the greatest combination of its kind to enter the United States. Mr. President, we have trusts enough to deal with now. I shall never agree that a foreign trust shall enter our territory and take the substance from our own people.

If when the bill came here there had been coupled with free coal a fair provision for reciprocity, you could have said, "We will give you free coal. Your coal shall come in; we will give you the New England market, provided you in Canada will admit free of duty our coal from Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Western Pennsylvania, and the Virginias west of the mountains." It would be possible to understand how a man who is in favor of free trade could advocate such a proposition. It was stated elsewhere by a responsible man that we would have this privilege from Canada, but it is not true.

The very last act of the Canadian Parliament on this subject, which I have, although I have it not at hand, imposes, as Canada has done heretofore, on all coal which we send over the border of Canada from these great Western States, 67 cents a ton of 2,240 pounds, or 60 cents as they levy it on a ton of 2,000 pounds. Why should we give up the American interest? Who can find in it a principle? I know the Canadian interest is a great one, but, as I have said before, I prefer to take care of American interests.

So with iron ore. I shall not weary the Senate with the details in regard to it.

Mr. President, I understand there is only one other serious proposition involved in this controversy, and that is the everlasting subject of sugar. Our Republican friends on the other side with great generalship saw from the beginning the weak point in our line. In the construction of the McKinley bill they made free sugar the pivot, so that they might increase the duties on their own wares and the output of their own factories. They attempted to secure free sugar by fighting us when we attempted to reverse their McKinley act and twitting us with going back and putting upon the dutiable list an article which they put upon the free list. They managed it well. They knew how to stir up the animosities and the feelings which are natural with us against increased duties on anything that has ever been on the free list.

They used the press of their party to charge, as they did, all sorts of bad motives against the men who were in favor of putting sugar on the dutiable list. They twitted us upon the floor. You had scarcely gotten into the consideration of the bill before they wanted to investigate us and see whether we were not selling out to a trust. The men who made the trust became suddenly virtuous for the purpose of killing our bill. They managed it so astutely as to really trouble a great many honest men inside and outside of this Chamber.

I give you credit for your generalship. This is a war, a battle between the two sides. You have conducted it, if not upon the highest plane, as well as a Modoc Indian ever conducted a campaign. [Laughter.] That you demoralized some of our forces and made them run to the bombproof for fear they might be shot is true. I have seen honorable men correcting in the papers the horrible statements which have been put forth to demoralize them, and it is not unnatural that they should have done so. But the majority of us, who are accustomed to shot and shell, have never yet flinched, because we knew that no matter how distasteful our action was to us personally the votes of the Louisiana Senaters were necessary.

We knew further that a fair duty on sugar was the first consideration to the Treasury. Your legislation has left us bankrupt until we have been compelled to sell bonds. As the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance said, it was our purpose in framing the bill to give to the Treasury a surplus and to remove from the people any fear of the Government not carrying out its obligations. We do not intend, when we get our bill through, to increase the bonded debt. If we do not get our bill through, that may and probably will happen.

Mr. President, I speak of the President of the United States with none but the kindest feelings. I have never in my life had anything but the kindest feelings for him. I believe he is one of the most remarkable men in public life in the last fifty years in any civilized country on the face of the globe. I gave my constant, unremitting labor to elect him the first time he was a candidate. I stood by him when we had but few who had the moral courage to uphold him. I supported his nomination for the second time, though not agreeing with the policy of his declaration in the message of 1887, and from the beginning of the campaign to the end I stood by my friend, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], who gave to the candidacy of Mr. Cleveland his substance and his time and everything that a man can give to serve a great cause.

I was not in favor of Mr. Cleveland's nomination again in 1892 as a matter of policy, but I, with the distinguished Senator from Ohio and the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], who carried the battle flag in that State, and the Senator from North Carolina, never permitted anything to stop our efforts until we placed him in this high station. We did it with an admiration for the man, with a belief that he would serve his country well, but I did my part above all in order that we might have Democratic control in this Government.

I have given the President fair and honest support, never subservient, never swayed by the want of patronage or by patronage, but ever ready to stand with him on whatever was right. He has no cause of complaint against me. I am not his debtor. Let him answer for himself. But in the campaign of 1892, when men's cheeks were blanched with fear, my friend, the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], active as was the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], and I and the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], who I regret now opposes the bill, went to the front to lead in that campaign and made a Democratic victory possible, starting the first great cheer which gave hope and comfort to the country.

Louisiana through its two Senators, then the late distinguished man who occupied a seat in this body, Randall Lee Gibson, and Edward D. White, wanted to know before we entered upon the campaign, with no threat, with no inquiry except that which an honorable man has a right to make, what the policy of the party was to be under the apparently free-trade resolutions adopted at Chicago. After a great deal of talk, after the most careful consideration, the candidate of our party told them, as he told the public through his letter, that the Democratic party was not to destroy industries; that it should place a fair duty upon dutiable articles, a revenue duty; that the bill which had met approval was the Mills bill, and on the line of the Mills bill the Democratic party would act.

The junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], and myself were then giving our time and our money, and everything that men can give for the success of the party. We conferred with all those distinguished gentlemen. We were not at the conference with the candidate, but had from both sides what had occurred. They wanted to know if the Democratic organization, of which we were a part, put the same construction upon it, and would be in favor of that line of procedure thereafter. They said to us frankly, we want to tell our people the truth. We do not want to press you to give a single fraction of a cent to Louisiana, but we only want to know the truth. At that solemn conclave we all said yes, it is a dutiable article; it is to be and must be the corner stone by which we will overthrow McKinleyism; you shall have it.

Mr. President, I would have given anything in reason for the interest of my own people whom I represent if I could have had free sugar all along the line. I could not have it without violating the rule that I have made for myself, not to-day, but from the beginning of my career, for a fair revenue duty on all dutiable articles.

But above all, sir, in all my public career, no man, no living being, has ever charged me with perfidy. No soul can say that I ever made a promise about public or private matters that I did not carry out if I had the power to do it. These two Senators and myself, carrying out our pledge, have stood here and been gibbeted as three men who were in a sugar trust. It is unnecessary to say no Senator on this floor with whom I am associated would believe such a thing, but it is due to the man who writes the history that he shall have the truth of the transaction.

Now, Mr. President, for us on this side of the Chamber this is indeed a most serious matter. There is nothing that I have said, there is nothing in my breast now, or ever has been, that in the same open and straightforward way that I have conferred with my colleagues, will prevent me from going with them one and all, no matter how wide we may differ as to the details, in the hope that we shall come together, come together for the benefit of our common country, come together that Democratic thought may prevail, come together that a measure which will not be repealed for twenty years may be placed upon the statute book and hope and prosperity may go with our people.

Mr. President, the conferees in this matter on the part of the Senate have a great duty to perform. There are almost, as it appears, irreconcilable differences. But, Mr. President, I want them to say to the conferees on the other side, "Now, above all other times, gentlemen, the law must be observed. Harmony can only be had by standing by the letter of the law. You, who make laws with us, must not violate them. There is in this case the written and the unwritten law, to which there is no exception, and that is that when one House proposes to change an existing statute and the other refuses to go as far, the House making the most radical demand shall give way. That is the law. That is the custom. Whenever it is insisted upon, there is no escape from it, if you intend to have legislation."

You can say, Mr. Chairman [to Mr. VOORHEES], that while there has been unpleasant talk about people not coming out in the open, Senator after Senator upon this floor has announced what he is bound to do as a matter of conscience if radical change is demanded. I do not mean that you shall not have a free and fair conference. I would have this time a free and fair conference. I would exclude everything except your own opinions.

You can say that in this body now, where we have only 1 majority among the Democrats, the great State of Ohio, the State of New Jersey, the State of New York, the States of Louisiana and of Maryland step out to the front and tell frankly the public what ought to have been told only in private, and say that within the borders of the States I have named, while they represented only five or six Democratic Senators, there is more manufacturing industry than in all the States which demand this radical change.

Say to them that at this time, when the whole world is ablaze with revolution in industrial affairs and want and distress are felt, these Senators, out of abundant caution, out of a superabundant caution, if you please, have said to you they can not go further; they prefer to make a mistake for too high rates rather than to have them too low; that it is wise statesmanship, true patriotism, to make the mistake and make the tax too high and let the laboring people go to work, rather than to make it too low and then try to keep them in order with deputy marshals and soldiers.

Mr. President, with our rules, this bill stands as I think in the best shape in which it is possible to get it to represent our views. I appeal to my colleagues on this side to stand as we stood during all this long struggle in the Senate, to stand together with the perfect knowledge that if we do not the bill is defeated. If the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] or the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] succeed (and any Democrat may succeed by uniting now with any other) in amending the bill, you have heard the declaration of enough Senators to know that you defeat it.

Mr. President, the defeat of this bill would be a fearful responsibility. As it passed the Senate it is a great reform measure, and upon examination it will be found that sixty-three paragraphs are placed on the free list upon which duties were collected for the fiscal year 1893, amounting to $11,436,264.48.

On the following paragraphs the rates of duty were reduced more than 75 per cent: Bar iron, all other, and slabs, blooms, or loops; spikes of wrought iron or steel; mules; yarns, woolens, etc., valued at not more than 30 cents per pound; cloths, woolens, etc., valued at not more than 30 cents per pound; shawls, woolens, etc., valued at more than 30 cents per pound and not more than 40 cents per pound; common pipes of clay.

On eighty-three paragraphs the duties were reduced between 50 and 75 per cent.

On two hundred and eighty paragraphs the duties were reduced between 25 and 50 per cent.

On one hundred and twenty paragraphs the rates were reduced not exceeding 25 per cent.

The total saving to the people through the reduction of customs duties made by the Senate bill would be $63,083,636.70.

And the average ad valorem rates of duty under the bill as compared with the act of 1883, the Mills bill, and the McKinley bill, are:

	Per cent.
Tariff of 1883 (imports, 1887)	47.10
Mills bill (imports, 1887)	42.38
McKinley bill (imports, 1893)	49.58
House bill (1894: imports, 1893)	35.51
Senate bill (1894: imports, 1893)	38.68

Reduction of average ad valorem rates of duty by the Senate bill, 1894:

	Per cent.
From the Mills bill	8.72
From the McKinley law	22.90

Mr. President, what is our duty? What did we agree to do? We placed in your hands, Mr. Chairman, and you Democrats the power to say what we ought to do, after careful and unfettered conference. No such confidence on the part of all our party has ever been given to men as we gave to you. Let this degree of confidence continue. Let the bill go back to a conference on the part of the two Houses? These thunder clouds will roll by; these flashes of lightning, these ebullitions of temper, must clear the atmosphere and enable the conferees to give new hope and new life to the American people. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire at this exceedingly critical juncture to offer a few suggestions which seem to me pertinent to the occasion. I know that it is difficult for one who considers that he has been unjustly attacked to abstain from retaliation, and it is not surprising that emphatic language has been used in this debate. But I can truthfully assert, I trust, that I entertain no feeling which can interfere with the discharge of my duty. I appreciate the nature of the circumstances under which Senators labor here—men of long experience in this Chamber—who have given the best years of their lives to the cause of their country and to the advantage of their party.

My remarks shall be directed to what I shall call the intrinsic merits of the situation. I do not deem it of essential importance whether the President of the United States has or has not sent a message in an indirect way to Congress, or to a portion of Congress, or to certain members of Congress. There may be a question of policy involved; and we have heard enough to know that there is a question of taste possible of consideration; but as members of a party charged with the performance of a public duty, it seems to me that we must look beyond the statements of Senators and Presidents, and solve this issue in the light of duty.

The elements and influences resulting in the amendments made by the Senate to the tariff bill have been dwelt upon long and thoroughly. Not only did we find differences of view among Democrats, but we discovered upon the other side a unanimous Republican membership capable of resorting and ready to resort to every legitimate parliamentary practice to defeat us. Senators no doubt said they would not filibuster, but in the early hours of the morning, upon entering the Chamber, we would sometimes note our distinguished friend the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], rising methodically and producing something which we afterwards learned was a history of sugar from the day of Adam's original apple to the sugar beet. [Laughter.] Then, upon another day, the same able Senator would bring forth a treatise upon iron or lead or wool, etc., elaborate, instructive, thoroughly prepared, but most essentially time consuming.

While thus listening to these elaborate and of course interesting remarks to some, we would occasionally be reminded by our friend from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that we were not saying anything in defense of our measure. We felt as the days rolled by and as the people demanded action that the best thing to do was to remain quietly in our seats, waiting until something developed adequate to solve the issue. We were confronted by a situation from which we could not easily extricate ourselves—rules that may have been desirable at some time or at some period, but which do not now win or deserve admiration or applause.

But whatever the situation, we were compelled to and did meet it. This long drawn out contest, coupled with the solemn assurances that there were many volumes of unuttered speeches left, forced certain concessions to Republican Senators to the detriment of our purpose. Superadded, therefore, to the difficulties which might be called domestic were these essentially antagonistic demonstrations of our adversaries interfering no little with the proper framing of our measure.

Mr. President, it is not fair, it is not right, it appears to me, to charge those whose views differ perhaps from the majority of their associates with a want of sincerity or honor. As Senators elected by constituencies whose views they understand, these gentlemen have sought to impress their sentiments upon us. Under these conditions we finally reached a point where we were satisfied that there had been evolved the best proposition that could be passed by the Senate.

Speaking for myself alone, uttering my individual sentiments as well as the sentiments of my State, I can truly say that free coal and free iron would be a great boon. Every prominent iron worker and manufacturer in California, whether Republican or Democrat, has asked for free iron. All have solicited free coal, and, as stated by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], the State of California pays almost the entire coal tax. When the Government collected $1,100,000 of revenue duty upon coal California paid $800,000. Manifestly, therefore, we are deeply interested.

Yet, Mr. President, notwithstanding these facts, I representing in part the people of California and knowing their sentiments, have said that the bill presented here being the best that can be had will be cheerfully accepted. It affords us a reduction of 46⅔ per cent upon the duty as now existing. This is worth having.

I refer to this incidentally for the purpose of showing that in the respects referred to in the letter of the President of the United States personally I can find no ground for objection, and that nevertheless I take the position that there is nothing for the Senate to do now except to vote for the motion offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and remit the matter wholly to the committee from whence it has just come to us.

Mr. President, who are these committeemen? Who are the Senators whom we have intrusted with this measure? They are gentlemen known all over this Republic. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is a man without whose voice no Democratic national campaign would be deemed effectually organized. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] has labored and labored honestly, faithfully, and continuously to accomplish a most radical reform measure. The same may be said of their associates. They are the friends of tariff reform, not its enemies. We have instructed them to confer with the managers on the part of the House. We appointed them to take charge of our bill.

The House of Representatives, in pursuance of its constitutional power, refused to accept our amendments and insisted upon the original measure. The bill comes to us in that condition. There is nothing left for us to do but to insist upon our amendments and intrust the controversy to our conference committee, to the men who have done so much towards the solution of this difficult question, who have successfully labored to produce a measure for which every one can conscientiously vote, and which will be an effective and a Democratic bill.

In one of our great newspapers, the New York Herald, of Saturday morning, I find the following:

> The Herald demonstrated fully yesterday from the official statistics of the United States that the McKinley law now costs the American people about $2,000,000,000 a year, though the Treasury does not get one-tenth of this sum in revenues. The Senate's tariff is certainly an improvement upon McKinley's, but it will nevertheless force the people to pay in bounties and tribute to the "protected" monopolies at least $1,250,000,000 every year, and possibly much more.

Here is an admission that the bill as passed by the Senate, bad as we are told it is, will relieve the American people from $750,000,000 of taxation. And yet we are informed that this is immaterial. If we must accept the McKinley act or accept a measure which will relieve us from $750,000,000 of taxation, I shall unhesitatingly vote for the relief and not against it; nor can I conceive how any man who admits that taxation is a burden imposed upon the people, who inveighs against and denounces it, can refuse to vote for a reduction of this magnitude, even if it be true that the public expected a much more radical act.

Mr. President, I am in sympathy with much that has been uttered with reference to the sugar trust. I believe that that institution has grown to be so powerful that it is a menace to the public interest. But I have confidence enough in the committee of conference to believe that whatever ambiguity there may be, if there is any, in the sugar schedules passed by this body will be ultimately cleared up, and that in this, as in other respects, the committee will make a report that will meet Democratic approval.

I do not think that the floor of the Senate is the place to discuss amendments now. I do not believe that it will forward the interests of the Democratic party or render less improbable the rejection of the bill if we debate important subjects upon the floor of the Senate. Agreements in a large body are difficult of realization. One imprudent word leads to another. An expression, ill-advised, provokes another more so, and the Senate will stand still further removed from adjustment and settlement.

This is a time calling for the highest patriotic effort. This is a time when however much an individual may have been personally attacked, however much one's feelings may be involved, all, as I have already stated, should sink before the manifest public duty which confronts this side of the Chamber. Our friends upon the other side are solicitous to defeat the bill. They are anxious to see McKinleyism perpetuated. They are honest in the faith that such an outcome will be to the advantage of the people of this country. But, Mr. President, we Democrats have come here obligated to do a specific thing. The people of the United States declared the system of taxation called McKinleyism to be wrong, and have ordained that the act shall be stricken from the statute book. It is idle talk to say to me that that verdict has been set aside or reversed. If disaster in local elections has overtaken the Democratic party in certain portions of the country, it is not because the people have feared the repeal of the McKinley act, but for the reason that they have become restive because we have not already repealed it.

Now, Mr. President, it has been said that the Senate has been unjustly attacked, not only by individuals but by newspapers and by officials of our own party. But, sir, let me say that all this is irrelevant matter. We have not the time to enter into the merits of our individual disputations. We must perform our duty to our country here, and while stating the reasons governing us we must trust to history, to the candid opinion of our fellow-citizens, for our future and final vindication. By our acts we shall be judged; and if after having come to this Capitol with the solemn obligation upon us to repeal the McKinley act we suffer it to go unrepealed, then we must return to our constituents with the admission that we have not kept faith.

But if we accomplish the repeal, even though we do not reach the point of full relief demanded by many of our fellow-citizens, we shall be able to truthfully assert that we have done the best possible, and they will appreciate our surroundings and situation and accord us our full due. Even if I can not procure the enactment of a bill giving California free coal and free iron ore, yet when I can return to those who sent me here and show that I have saved them $400,000 of annual taxation through the 46⅔ per cent reduction in the coal tariff I know that my course will be approved.

The people outside of this Capitol are, as we all know, intelligent and discerning. For the moment they may be misled, for the instant they may do that which they should not do, and sometimes their words are harsh and their acts seemingly unjust; but time tempers their judgments, so that the representative who does the best he can upon this floor will receive that same commendation from his constituents that he who acts justly and to the full measure of his powers is entitled to receive here and hereafter.

Mr. President, it will, I think, subserve no useful purpose to give any instructions whatever to this committee. If we concede our parliamentary right to do so, and if we vote for the motion of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], we open the door to amendments upon every conceivable subject; we will then have the entire bill before the Senate, every phase of it, every feature of it, open to dispute and contention.

Nor will it be of the slightest avail to use words of criticism towards the House of Representatives. Our rules forbid it, and, even if the proprieties of the situation are omitted, it is the manifest policy for every Democrat in Congress, to whichever branch he may belong, to speak and think of his fellows as associates, endeavoring to accomplish something for the betterment of their country. In this spirit alone can we hope to prevail. Conciliation is not only important, but absolutely essential.

Remember that there are around us gentlemen who are solicitous for our destruction; gentlemen who, whenever they can invade our ranks, and woo with tender song some too fragile brother; gentlemen who, by argument and influence of every sort—proper, I mean, of course—are seeking to allure Senators upon this side and with promises of coöperation are endeavoring to persuade them to vote for some special amendment, which will render the passage of the bill less likely. Who doubts that upon this very question of sugar, our friends upon the other side will rush frantically to the front, and denouncing the sugar trust, will vote in the most positive manner for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin; yet who questions that in doing that, in so voting, it will be the hope of each Senator upon the other side that his action, ostensibly against the sugar trust, will result in the defeat of this measure and the perpetuation of the McKinley schedule, which was admittedly dictated by the trust.

Mr. President, our friends have not denied that the McKinley act contains undue protection to the sugar trust. No man has been found to produce anything that will show that the McKinley act is not far more favorable to the trust than the pending measure; and yet gentlemen who are loud in their denunciation of this trust, who declare it to be the most outrageous of all American combinations, as I believe it to be, those very gentlemen, sir, are striving to keep alive and perpetuate the blessings, as the trust beneficiaries would call them, of the McKinley act. Are we to aid in this work?

We are not laboring for tariff reform when we coöperate with its enemies, nor do I think, if my friend from New York [Mr. HILL] shall succeed in his amendment, it can result, as matters now stand, in the improvement of the situation. Let us assume his success, and that free coal and free iron ore—more beneficial, as I have said, to my constituents—are voted on the free list, does the Senator from New York not know—I will change the form of the expression—the Senator from New York does know that by so voting he will imperil the whole measure. True, he will not shed any tears because of that circumstance.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BATE in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator explain how the carrying of my amendment will imperil the passage of this bill? Does he know of a single Senator so devoted to the cause of a tariff upon coal and iron ore that he will feel as though he must vote against this bill? I have heard no such expression from anyone.

Mr. WHITE. Is the Senator through?

Mr. HILL. For the present.

Mr. WHITE. It has been otherwise stated to me, Mr. President, by gentlemen who claim to know something of their own opinions. I do not think that my friend from New York would vote for anything that would insure or assist in the passage of a bill which would contain the income-tax provision, because he is solemnly pledged to do everything that he can to defeat such a provision. Not without a purpose has he thrust aside for the time being the affiliations of a lifetime, not for an idle end has he sought by a combination with the distinguished leader of the Republican party to dictate tariff legislation.

My friend from New York honestly believes that this bill should be defeated because of the income-tax provision, and, skillful soldier that he is, he places all his men, all his forces, upon a vantage ground from which he hopes they may be able to compass the rout of their foes.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Do I understand the Senator that he thinks it unwise now for the Senate either to recede from any of its amendments or to instruct the conferees?

Mr. WHITE. Is that all of the Senator's question?

Mr. HILL. It is for the present.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator retained the floor, and I did not know whether he had concluded or not.

Mr. HILL. I have.

Mr. WHITE. I will say yes; my answer is in the affirmative. I stated, in my opinion—I may be wrong, most assuredly; but the Senator has asked for my opinion—that the friend of legislation, the man who wishes the enactment of a tariff bill, who desires the reduction of the McKinley rates, and even of the rates fixed in this measure, that man will vote to send this bill to the committee; but the man who desires the defeat of this bill, who wishes the McKinley law to stay upon the statute book, that man, if he has good judgment and possesses skill, will vote to amend this bill now in all possible respects. Understand me, Mr. President, I do not charge that every Senator who offers an amendment has that end in view.

I know that my friend from Wisconsin, who sits near me [Mr. VILAS], is as solicitous as any man can be for the passage of this bill, and I know that my friend, the Senator from New York, is as solicitous as any man can be that this bill shall be defeated unless the income tax shall be exscinded, and then I suppose he would vote for it with coal free or taxed.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator please explain how he expects an agreement to be reached if the Senate does not recede at all?

Mr. WHITE. My understanding is that the Senate, having confided to these conferees this delicate and onerous duty, will listen to their recommendations. For one, I shall. Of course, if I had no confidence in any Senator upon my side, if I set up my little individual judgment against the solid phalanx of my party, I should vote against recommittal, and then I would do as some other people do—pair myself. [Laughter.]

I have said these words, Mr. President, because I am anxious to persuade the friends of this bill; because I am anxious to impress upon those who think that a vote should be taken upon the sugar matter now that there is great danger in such procedure. I know that these gentlemen are anxious that a tariff measure shall be enacted. I know they hope with me that we will not leave this Capitol with our pledges unredeemed. My argument to them is an appeal to their judgment. I solicit their candid, careful, patient, and time-taking consideration of the suggestion that I make, whether it will not be better that this affair shall be considered in the small council of conference than that it shall be a subject of general controversy in this Chamber.

But, Mr. President, anxious as I am for the accomplishment of the purposes specified, solicitous as I am personally to see the views of the Senator from New York on coal and iron impressed upon this bill, desirous as I am to have it framed so that the sugar trust shall realize only a reasonable profit; still I believe that it is my obligation to vote for the motion submitted by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and that to do otherwise would be to ally myself with those who oppose all tariff reform.

As I said in the beginning, in doing this I have but one objective point, the discharge of that solemn obligation which was imposed upon me when I accepted the burdens and honors of a Democratic Senator, an obligation alike imposed upon all of us, and which I understand every one here is ready to discharge.

My appeal does not involve the sincerity of anyone; but it is to some extent a criticism of that judgment which precipitates a bitter controversy upon this Chamber at this heated time; a controversy that necessarily arrays not only the two Houses of Congress, to some extent, against each other, but challenges the Executive, and brings us all into general and mutual hostility, from which concerted action, I fear, will never be evolved.

On the other hand, if this matter be relegated to the tried and trusted Democrats of the conference, to those whose party fealty has never been doubted, and whose ability passes without comment, I believe that a means of extrication from this attitude will be suggested.

I wish to state before I resume my seat that, being tolerably familiar with the general facts concerning the framing of this bill, I am justified in saying that each and every Democratic Senator commenced this struggle with the desire to pass a good tariff bill. I do not sympathize with the attacks which have been made upon Senators. Many of these onslaughts are inspired by people who are not friends of Democracy. Some of the accusations are fathered by newspapers and individuals representing the Republican party, and whose prayers are for the continuation of McKinleyism. Our ranks can not be thus broken up.

We can not afford, whatever may be the present trend of popular sentiment, to ignore the good which those who are attacked have done. We can not charge the Senator from New York with a lack of sincerity because he has not agreed with us, for he has heretofore shown his fealty to his party and his ability as a Democratic leader, and the Democratic organization of the United States knows his record and appreciates his many services.

Nor should anything but kindly criticism be directed at the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. Long before I saw this Chamber, when I had but little idea indeed of entering it, almost in my boyhood, I knew of his worth and ability. But lately, when from one end of the United States to the other the entire Democratic organization was fearful of the disaster threatened by the force bill, when the question of a free ballot and the right of men to govern themselves was challenged, Senator GORMAN was the leader of Democracy, and in this Chamber his eloquent and able championship won for us and for his country safety from unwise legislation and subsequent party victory. In times when the skies are clouded, when criticism is on every lip, when motives are hourly questioned, let us not forget to do that justice which every man owes to his fellows; and, if criticise we must, let us do so in considerate phrase, but let us not forget the past, whether it be because of great services or because of great offenses.

This is a contest between Democracy and Republicanism, as the latter is exemplified in the McKinley law; this is a contest in which the Democratic party in this Chamber is entitled to a majority vote. That majority it must obtain, or I fear the people will not forgive it. They abandoned their allegiance to the Republican organization after it had been tried for many years. A change was deemed necessary that disaster might be averted and they accepted other leadership that they might be led from the house of bondage. Having been given this power, having accepted this trust, let us exercise it for the popular benefit, and let us meet the situation even though we may be compelled to do that which is personally distasteful, but which we can do without dishonor. We must not expect to be able to succeed without effort, consideration, or concession.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], that the Senate recede from its amendments as to coal and iron ore.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CALL, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 236) to amend section 4837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as to soldiers' homes; when the Speaker signed the same.

CHANGE OF LINES BETWEEN EASTERN AND WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. WOODWARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6542) to change the lines between the eastern and western judicial districts of North Carolina and fixing time for holding courts in said eastern district.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Person, Durham, Chatham, Moore, and Richmond, now constituting a part of the western judicial district of North Carolina, shall be, and are hereby, transferred to and made part of the eastern judicial district of North Carolina; but all crimes and offenses heretofore committed in said western district, in which the defendants have been bound over, shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 2. That the sessions of the district courts of the United States for the eastern district of North Carolina shall begin and be held at the city of Raleigh on the fourth Monday of May and first Monday of December of each year; at the city of Wilmington on the first Monday after the fourth Monday in April and October of each year; at the city of Newbern on the fourth Monday in April and October of each year; at the city of Elizabeth City on the third Monday in April and October of each year.

SEC. 3. That the regular terms of the circuit court shall be held at Raleigh on the fourth Monday in May and first Monday in December of each year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. REED. Let us hear the amendments.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out "Richmond," in the fourth line of the first section.

Add at the end of the first section the following:

"Provided also, That all actions or proceedings now pending against parties residing in the counties of Chatham, Moore, Person, and Durham, in the courts of said western district, may, upon the application of either party, be transferred to the court for the eastern district at Raleigh; and in case of such transfer, all papers and files therein, with copies of all record entries, shall be transferred to the office of the clerk of such court, and proceed in all respects as though originally commenced in said court at Raleigh."

Strike out all that part of the second section after the word "year," in the fourth line.

Add at the end of the third section the following:

"And at Wilmington on the first Monday after the fourth Monday in April and October of each year."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Does the bill create any new offices? Who is in charge of that bill?

Mr. WOODARD. It does not. It is purely a local bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It is simply a rearrangement of the districts?

Mr. WOODARD. Is it simply a rearrangement of the districts. It has the approval of the two judges and the district attorneys, and it is reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. REED. One moment. If the amendments are adopted, what is the effect of the whole bill?

Mr. WOODARD. I will state the effect of the bill. The bill as originally reported included the county of Richmond, and the committee, at my request, struck out the county of Richmond, as at that time there was a suggestion there might be some opposition to transferring Richmond to the eastern district. Since then, however, the members of the bar of that county and the judges have stated that there would be no objection to putting Richmond in the eastern district. I desire to offer an amendment, that Richmond may be transferred from the western to the eastern district.

Mr. REED. How many districts does this bill make?

Mr. WOODARD. We have two districts in North Carolina, and by this bill we transfer some counties from the western to the eastern district. The counties are in the eastern part of the State.

Mr. REED. In how many different places does the court sit?

Mr. WOODARD. There are four places in the State where the court sits—at Elizabeth City, Newbern, Raleigh, and Wilmington. These four counties are very near to Raleigh, where the court meets in the eastern district. They are probably a hundred miles from the nearest point in the western part of the State where the court meets, and only about 30 miles from Raleigh where the circuit and district courts of the eastern district meet.

Mr. REED. So that the places of meeting are geographically well situated?

Mr. WOODARD. It is very largely for the benefit of the people of those counties.

Mr. REED. Is the bill unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. WOODARD. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the committee amendments.

The amendments of the committee were agreed to.

Mr. WOODARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "Moore," in line 3, the words "and Richmond;" and after the word "Durham," in line 13, insert the words "and Richmond."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WOODARD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

E. DOUGLASS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1319) for the relief of E. Douglass, late Indian agent at White Earth Indian Agency.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Ebenezer Douglass, late Indiana gent at White Earth Indian Agency, in the State of Minnesota, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $566.66 for money paid out and services performed by said Douglass, at the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in closing the accounts with said agency.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some explanation of that bill before unanimous consent is given.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill has been considered and passed by the Senate. It has been considered and favorably reported by the Committee on Claims. It has been unanimously recommended, and it is a very small amount.

Mr. SAYERS. But that is not a sufficient explanation, I would submit to the gentleman. I would like to have the report read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report can be read.

The report (by Mr. KIEFER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1319) for relief of E. Douglass, after fully investigating the same, report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, and adopt the report hereto attached made by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Senate report is very voluminous.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would say this bill has been——

Mr. SNODGRASS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

SURVEYS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HALL of Minnesota, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported the bill (H. R. 7803) to amend sections 2401 and 2403 of the Revised Statutes as a substitute for the bills (H. R. 6194 and H. R. 7559); which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed. The bills H. R. 6194 and H. R. 7559 were ordered to lie on the table.

INTERMENTS, GRACELAND CEMETERY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. POST, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported favorably the bill (H. R. 6915) to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REINSTATEMENT OF CERTAIN RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call. The regular order is taking the vote on the bill on which the previous question was ordered on Saturday. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4017) for the reinstatement of clerks dismissed from the Railway Mail Service between the 15th day of March and the 1st day of May, 1889.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall this bill pass?

Mr. REED. What is the proposition?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the title of the bill.

The title of the bill was again reported.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRODERICK. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 8.

Mr. BRODERICK. No quorum has voted.
Mr. BYNUM. I demand the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK] will please take their places as tellers.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 24, answered "present" 3, not voting 203; as follows:

To the honorable members of the United States Senate:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, a committee appointed by the several departments of labor in the Government Printing Office, petition to Congress for relief from the danger now so apparent by use of the H street wing of the office structure, respectfully submit:

First. That said H street wing is a menace to human life by reason of its structural weakness, its excessive overloading by material, machinery, and employés.

Second. That said H street wing is a menace to human life by reason of its tinder-like material, indicating that an accident by fire would cause destruction, a holocaust of life and property.

Third. That said H street wing is a menace to human life by reason of the constant jar and jolt of working machinery, the heavy pounding and vacillation caused by the necessary work, thus slowly but surely foreshadowing disaster.

Fourth. That said H street wing is a menace to human life, by reason of the age and decay of the structure, that it is permeated with dry rot in timber and crack and fissure in walls, as is manifested by braces, clamps, and other appliances intended to hold the building together.

Therefore, the undersigned committee, as enjoined by the employés of the Government Printing Office, supplemented by individual petition of said employés, pray for relief from this foreshadowed danger; that same may be immediately made possible by the appropriation of the necessary means to secure a location for and construction of a new Government Printing Office, and the construction of an annex or addition to the present structure to relieve possible danger to life and destruction of property. It is therefore prayed that provisions for the annex or addition to the present structure will be authorized in the present sundry civil bill, by amendment thereto, should it be deemed impossible to meet the full desire of your petitioners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and the Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 19, 1894.

Resolved, That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 4864, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. MCMILLIN, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. REED, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. PAYNE be managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I agree with the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] in the statement that we are now in the midst of a great crisis. It is a most peculiar and unusual situation of affairs. The Democratic party, after having been out of power for a long number of years, has been intrusted with the control of governmental affairs, and in the discharge of its duty to the country has framed a measure for the revision of the tariff. The bill, as we all know, first passed the House of Representatives. There were some objections to the measure, which were duly noted by Senators, by the press, and by the people.

Some of its features were especially approved by the American people. It met the public expectation in so far as it proceeded upon the lines laid down in the Chicago platform; in so far as it departed therefrom, it was not satisfactory to the Democracy; in so far as it attempted to adopt the platform of the Populist party, it was condemned by Democratic citizens in many parts of the country. That bill as a whole seemed to meet, aside from its income provision, with general appreciation. It came to the Senate, a body which is divided politically almost evenly, and was referred to the Committee on Finance, and given careful consideration by the members of that committee.

I do not propose to be betrayed into any recital of the efforts which were made by Democrats in their various conferences to agree upon a bill which should meet the approval of the Senate. It is sufficient to say that finally a bill was prepared; it was discussed for many long, weary months. Finally it passed this body. That bill, as I stated on the day of its passage, was not satisfactory either to the Democratic party or to the people of the country.

In my humble opinion it violated the position which the Democratic party has assumed in recent years, and did not fulfill the pledges which it was bound to perform. It was returned to the House of Representatives. A conference committee was appointed by both Houses. For ten days they struggled to get together, and finally were compelled to report to their respective Houses that they were unable to agree. Certainly this presented a great crisis in the history of our party and in the history of the country.

What were those differences which confronted our conferees? What great obstacles presented themselves which it seems could not be overcome? In the first place, they were met with the objection that the Senate had made the bill inconsistent; they were met with the objection that the Senate had placed a duty upon many raw materials which the people expected and believed would be placed upon the free list.

Mr. President, the motion which I have made, and which is now before the Senate, contemplates that the Senate shall recede from some of the amendments which it made, and to which the House of Representatives has refused to assent. My motion contemplates that we recede from our amendments which place a duty upon coal and iron. The committee of conference have tried to get together upon the basis of a duty upon those articles, and they have failed. There is no hope held out anywhere that the House of Representatives will yield upon this point, which they consider an essential and vital point. If the Senate still adheres to its amendments and still desires to keep these articles upon the dutiable list, what prospect of an agreement is held out to us and to the country? None whatever.

My motion is in the line of an agreement. My motion contemplates something which is practical. My motion is in the line of perfecting this bill on Democratic theories and upon Democratic conditions. You have tried the other course by adhering to the amendments, and you have failed. I suggest that you try the course proposed by my motion, namely, that of receding from these amendments, and you can at least be no worse off. It is worth a trial. It is worth a trial that you should accept my amendment.

What other course is suggested here? Simply that you shall recommit the bill to the conference without instructions, without suggestions, adhering blindly and obstinately, it seems to me, to the same position which you took in the final passage of the bill. You advance not one single step if you adopt the motion of the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] and omit to adopt the other motion. I, as a practical man, suggest to a practical Senate that we express our opinion upon some of these disputed points. It does no good blindly and obstinately to adhere to the former position, which was taken when the bill was passed.

What evidences are there that you will come to an agreement? Have you seen any weakening on the part of the House of Representatives? Do you think that the House, backed, as it is unquestionably, by the public press of the country, backed by the Democratic masses of the country, and backed by the President of the United States, expects to yield to us upon this vital point of free raw material? I can see no hope in that direction. The clouds are dark and forbidding. In my judgment, this Senate can afford to recede from these amendments.

Aside from any question of abstract principle involved, as a question of policy, as a question of good judgment, with an earnest and sincere desire to perfect this bill and make it as acceptable as possible, it strikes me that the right and the honorable course for the Senate to pursue is to adopt the motion upon those two articles to which I have called the attention of the Senate. I am not now speaking for the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]; I am not asking a recession upon any other differences involved in the bill.

I have simply picked out two articles, coal and iron, and I suggest to the good sense of my party friends upon this side of the Chamber, let us recede from those amendments and see whether it does not lead to an agreement. Merely appointing conferees in each House without instructions, without suggestions, to negotiate and dicker with each other day after day will be futile, and it will amount to nothing. Some expression of our real, honest sentiment should be given here by our votes. Adherence to the Senate amendments will produce no proper or good result.

After the bill had passed the Senate there was presented to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the other House a letter which has been commented upon in the House of Representatives and in the Senate. As I said the other day, it is not my province to defend the time of the sending of the letter. It is not my province to speak of its propriety. The President was the judge of what it was his duty to do, and I do not propose to criticise him. In the discharge of a high public duty to his party and to his country he deemed it wise that he should send that letter to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. With his judgment upon that question I am content. I am here to defend the sentiments expressed in the letter. Mr. President, you would judge from the criticisms which have been offered that the President has been guilty of a violation of the Constitution of his country by sending a letter criticising a tariff bill passed by one or both Houses. He violated no clause of the Constitution. He had a right—a constitutional, a legal, a moral right—to send the letter. It was not an official communication in the proper sense of the term.

It was at first intended as a private communication to a long-time personal friend and adherent, a gentleman whom not he but the Democrats in the other House have honored with the high and responsible position of chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. It was a communication which he had a right to send to that official. Whether it should be subsequently disclosed to his party associates in the other House was a matter of determination between the sender and the person who received the letter. It is a matter with which we, sir, have nothing whatever to do.

The sentiments contained in the letter are Democratic. They are sentiments which unquestionably are honestly entertained. No Senator around this circle has risen here to criticise the President so far as to challenge his motives in sending the communication. Senators have differed with him as to its propriety; they have differed with him as to the sentiments which he expressed, but they have not challenged the honesty or sincerity of his motives in the sending of what I concede to be an unusual communication.

What did the President discover? He discovered what has been so frequently said in the Senate, that we had made an inconsistent bill. He saw a duty placed upon the raw materials of coal and iron ore, and he saw at the same time a duty omitted from wool. He saw keenly that that would place the Democratic party in a false position. He knew that it would place us upon the defensive, and as a party man, desirous of the success of his party in the country and in Congress, he saw fit in his own way, in his own terms, and in his own language to call the attention of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to it and subsequently to allow it to be spread before Congress.

Mr. President, I assert that the bill as it came from the other House, so far as it placed iron ore and coal upon the free list, represented Democratic sentiment. Was there any protest anywhere in this country from Democratic sources against the bill as it came from the other House when that provision was inserted? I think not. Was there any club anywhere in this broad land which passed a resolution condemning the bill as it came from the other House in those respects? Was there a Democratic convention, and there have been a half a dozen held since the Wilson bill passed the other House, which has condemned those features of the bill? Not one. On the contrary, they have approved it. I differ with those conventions where, in some of them, they approve the income tax; but upon the point I am now discussing there has been a universal Democratic assent to these provisions of the Wilson bill.

Until the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] addressed the Senate there had been no one, except the Senator from West Virginia, who had ventured to defend the duty upon iron ore. The chairman and members of the Finance Committee had endeavored to apologize for the insertion in the bill of duties upon those articles. They had endeavored to mitigate the charge made that it was a violation of Democratic principles. I think I state correctly the position of the majority of the members of the Finance Committee when I say that in their places here nearly all of them said that personally and as Democrats they believed in free coal and free iron ore.

They so said, but they took the position that they had been induced to make these concessions for the purpose of passing the bill, not because it was Democratic, not because they favored duties upon those articles as Senators or as Democrats, but simply as a mere question of party expediency, and that was all. But, sir, yesterday the Senator from Maryland, frank and bold as is his nature, came forward and did not set up any such defense. He threw off any mask which might otherwise have been before him and came to the front, and placed himself boldly upon the ground that it was Democratic to put duties upon iron ore and coal.

Mr. GORMAN. A revenue duty.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Maryland says "a revenue duty," and I accept the correction. If I interpret his remarks correctly the Senator from Maryland would have placed a duty upon iron ore and coal whether a majority of the Senators here desired it or not. As a matter of judgment he thinks it is right, as a matter of judgment he defends it. He does not tell us, or he did not think it proper to tell us, as to the details of Democratic conferences. He says that it is Democratic to place a duty upon these articles, and therefore, because he thinks it is Democratic, and in addition because he thinks it is right, he favors a duty upon them. He does not set up the childish defense that he was "buncoed" into putting a duty upon those articles.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland alludes to President Cleveland's original tariff message of 1887, and if I correctly recollect his remarks, he intimated that there was no suggestion in that message in favor of free raw materials. Let me quote what the President said:

> The radical reduction of the duties imposed on raw material used in manufactures, or its free importation, is of course an important factor in any effort to reduce the price of these necessaries; it would not only relieve them from the increased cost caused by the tariff on such material, but the manufactured product being thus cheapened, that part of the tariff now laid upon such product, as a compensation to our manufacturers for the present price of raw material, could be accordingly modified. Such reduction, or free importation, would serve beside to largely reduce the revenue. It is not apparent how such a change can have any injurious effect upon our manufacturers.

That was in the early days of tariff reform. The President, at the very outset, when he gave to the country this grand message for industrial relief, placed himself upon the broad ground that there must be the radical reduction of the duties on or the free importation of raw materials. Do Senators think that tariff reform has made no progress from that day to this? It has. It has increased. Democrats who were unwilling then to take steps forward have advanced greatly from that day to this. Tariff reform has been growing. Men who years ago hesitated are bold now upon this subject.

The tariff message of 1887 placed the President in the advanced line wherein he demanded the radical reduction of the duties on, or the free importation of, raw materials. That was the platform upon which he started in 1887, and I am loath to believe that he has since taken any back track upon that particular point.

The Senator from Maryland yesterday seemed to want us to infer that the President had discovered some new Democratic principle in the doctrine of free raw materials, or that I had discovered it here within the last few weeks. I have before me the message of the President of the United States sent to Congress last December, before this controversy arose. What did he then say, when certainly his motives were pure and upright, and he was engaged in no controversy with Senators.

Not less closely related to our people's prosperity and well-being is the removal of restrictions upon the importation of the raw materials necessary to our manufacturers.

That was his message to us as the official head of the Democratic party last December, and now, forsooth, we are told that this is a new invention, made for the purpose of placing the Senate in an awkward and embarrassing position. Not so. The President placed himself then directly upon this platform.

Yesterday the Senator from Maryland sought to hold the President responsible for the unofficial utterances of his Secretary of the Treasury. That is certainly going a great way. The President might properly be held responsible to a large extent for the official utterances of the Secretary of the Treasury, but certainly it is a new doctrine, indeed, if the President is to be held responsible for every ipse dixit of any of his Cabinet officers. But what did the Secretary of the Treasury say last December in his report made to us for the purpose of enabling us to frame a proper tariff bill?

Raw and partially raw materials constitute the basis of all our manufacturing and mechanical industries. * * * With free raw materials as a permanent feature of our revenue legislation the demand for labor would steadily grow with the extension of trade, while enlarged opportunities for the profitable investment of capital would stimulate the spirit of enterprise among our people and greatly diminish the danger of periodical suspensions, etc.

He speaks expressly of a tax upon iron ore and wool. He speaks frequently in his report in favor of free raw materials, and I accept the doctrine that he represented the President of the United States in making those suggestions. If that be true, then the President, not only in his own message, but in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, has been consistent, at least until this question arose.

The President's letter asserts a doctrine and declares for a principle. He speaks of no Senator personally. He details no conferences or interviews with anybody. He declares that the bill fell short of Democratic expectations. Who doubts it? Who disputes it? He said all this in a communication which he had in his judgment a right to make to a friend and an official having large influence in the shaping of revenue legislation. He attacks the bill as a whole. It was a progressive bill. It progressed with steady steps toward the McKinley act from the time it was framed. He saw the schedules grow higher and higher. He saw the tariff rates advancing day after day when as votes were taken duties were added. What he might have been willing to accept when first approached upon the subject he undoubtedly saw it would be impossible to accept when the bill as a whole was presented to him.

As I said before, when his letter was penned he saw coal and iron ore owned, as expressed and understood, by the rich and the monopolists. He saw a duty placed upon those articles for the benefit of these great interests, and he saw the farmer's wool left entirely unprotected. If he thought that such inconsistent legislation would place the Democratic party in a false attitude before the people he would have been false to himself, false to his party, and false to his country if he had not called our attention to it.

Then when the bill as passed by the Senate was thus perfected in the Senate he wrote his letter, perhaps not wisely, but too candidly, too honestly, too earnestly. That is all the criticism that can properly be made against it. And now Senator after Senator has arisen to complain of what is freely termed the "dictation" of the President. Yet we are confronted with this fact. They approached him for his opinion; they begged his advice; they went to the White House to consult with him in regard to this subject. As has been stated here, they wanted him back of them in every single step they took. They badgered him with their suggestions, their compromises, and their concessions, and tried to get him, as it appears from their statements, to support them. They knew how weak and indefensible the bill as passed by the Senate would seem to the American people if it did not have the approval and sanction of the Democratic President.

The Senator from Maryland caused to be read a portion of Washington's Farewell Address upon the necessity of observing the distinctions and rights of the various departments of the Government. That is well enough in its way; but that address is quoted in vain when Senators here, instead of relying upon their own reserved rights and acting upon their own judgment and taking their own steps independent of anybody else, seek the White House and ask the interposition of the President of their party. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.] It comes with poor grace for Senators to ask suggestions, to ask aid, to ask help, and then read Washington's Farewell Address to show that the President ought not to make any suggestions on pending legislation in the form and manner that he did.

Mr. President, it was indeed a wonderful spectacle yesterday. Senator after Senator rose in his place and in the discharge of his duty, as he considered it, I presume, detailed conversations of a semiconfidential character at least with the President of their country for the avowed purpose of placing that President in a false position before the Senate and the country.

Mr. President, I am not the defender of the President ordinarily. I have received no favors at his hands, as you and the country well know. I have my political grievances. I differ with him upon interparty policy, especially on political matters in my own State. But I think, sir, in this particular it is my duty, and I am broad-minded and liberal enough, to defend him when he is unjustly attacked. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). There must be order in the galleries. Applause must not be repeated. It is contrary to the rules.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I beg leave to suggest that the doorkeepers be instructed to remove promptly any person in the galleries who violates good order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that anyone who violates the rules is removed from the galleries and that order is preserved. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. HILL. I repeat, Mr. President, that it was a wonderful and unusual spectacle that we witnessed yesterday. Great scenes have taken place in this Chamber during the last half a century and more; great speeches have been made; fierce personal denunciations have been had; encounters have taken place here; great debates have been heard in this Chamber. Yesterday with crowded floors and crowded galleries we witnessed the conceded leader upon the Democratic side, whom I personally respect and honor, calling witnesses one after another upon the question of what the President had said to them about the details of a tariff bill.

A stranger came into the Senate Chamber yesterday, and looking at the Presiding Officer and hearing these witnesses called, he asked a bystander whether that was the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court presiding, and whether this was a court of impeachment trying the President of the United States. It was a pertinent inquiry under the circumstances by reason of the accusation thundered against him here and the witnesses called to prove that accusation.

Mr. President, I know nothing personally, of course, in regard to what the distinguished Senators have said as to their interviews with the President. I simply know that the official utterances of the President and his Secretary of the Treasury have all been on one side. If it is possible that he has changed his sentiments in his communication to these Senators it is something, of course, new to me and extraordinary in its character. Was he bound to speak and express his sentiments upon every detail of the bill? When these party friends consulted him was he obliged to place himself in a position where he could not retreat? Was he bound to say yes or no to every suggestion made to him?

Sir, some of them are frank enough to state that he said in every conversation, "I do not like some of the terms of the bill as proposed in the Senate." The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] states distinctly that in every conversation the President said, "I want free raw materials." He is honest and frank enough to say so. Yet they say, or infer, or understood that the President told them to go ahead and do the best they could. Did that commit him to the terms of this bill? No. He was still a free moral agent. He still reserved the right to say, "You have carried these concessions too far." He still reserved the right to say, "This bill is not satisfactory to me now that I see it as it is to be perfected. I will write an honest and a manly letter to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee telling him of my doubts, telling him of my fears, telling him of my wishes." He did not intend to dictate to either branch of Congress. His letter can not be construed into a dictation. It was a suggestion; it was an expostulation; it was a warning to party friends not to persist in the bill as framed by the Senate.

Mr. President, when you carefully analyze the statements of the distinguished Senators who yesterday testified against the President, you will see that there is a failure on their part to say that he distinctly approved this measure. He wished them success. He bade them Godspeed in the good work of tariff reform. He wanted the bill made better, and of course he desired it to pass. But, sir, he, I am sure, could not have said anything to those Senators which could justify them in believing that he was irrevocably bound up to the provisions of this bill so that he could not thereafter consistently criticise it.

Mr. President, I have known the President of the United States for many long years. I have had my differences with him; but, sir, in this particular you must bear me out that he says but little in conversation. He is a good listener to other men. He forms his conclusions slowly, deliberately, honestly, and sincerely. He permitted these party friends to disclose their plans and purposes. He hoped they might frame a satisfactory bill, but it is as certain as anything could be that he did not bind himself to the provisions of this bill, nor did he approve them.

So much for the President's letter. I can not, as I said, speak of matters about which I know nothing. Whether the provocation, as it is called, was sufficient to justify honorable Senators in detailing the conversations with the President of their party is a matter, of course, which must be submitted to their judgment. I am not here to criticise them. I speak of the facts simply as they appear.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland alluded to me several times during his most able and interesting speech as an opponent of this bill. In the shape in which this bill is now presented I am willing to answer to that description. I am not an opponent of tariff reform. My views have been expressed upon that question over and over again ever since the memorable tariff message of 1887. I have said over and over again that I would go as far as any Senator here in the line of genuine tariff reform. I have said that I was opposed to a Populistic income-tax feature being placed in the bill. I want to eliminate that tax if I can. I shall resort to every honorable method by which it can be done. If I can place the bill in a situation where it can not pass with the income-tax feature in it and induce you to so frame it that the income-tax feature shall be stricken out, I shall be gratified. I do not know that that can be done, but I am here to make suggestions which will tend to that end.

The Senator from Maryland did me the justice to say that my opposition had been manly and honorable. I thank him for that statement. Mr. President, he did, however, seek to create the impression that upon the subject of free raw materials I had made a new departure; that I had discovered some new principle. Let me see whether that is so. He also alluded to the fact that I had done the State or the party some service, and that in 1892 I delivered a speech in the city of Brooklyn which was the formal opening of the campaign in the Empire State. Mr. President, permit me to quote what I said on that occasion. I laid down certain principles upon which I declared that all tariff legislation should be based. I read from the printed speech. They were as follows:

First. That the necessaries of life should be substantially free.
Second. That luxuries should bear the heaviest burdens.
Third. That there should be free raw materials for the benefit of our manufacturers.
Fourth. That the tariff upon manufactured articles should, as a general rule, be larger where similar articles are manufactured in this country than where they are not.
Fifth. That the tariff imposed upon all manufactured articles (other than those which for good reasons are placed on the free list) should equal the difference between the rate of wages paid in this and foreign countries, so far as labor enters into the cost of their production.

The Senator having referred to this speech, I will simply say that the national committee of which he was a member did me the honor of circulating throughout the country a quarter of a million copies of that speech. Yet the Senator desires to have it inferred that the doctrine of free raw material is a new and a recent one. I think if the Democrats anywhere in the country were asked to lay down Democratic principles in 1892 they would have placed themselves substantially upon that ground.

Last fall, in the campaign in my own State, while Congress was then in session and the Ways and Means Committee was engaged in preparing a tariff reform bill, I spoke as follows:

Foremost among the great questions passed upon at the last national election was the issue of the revision of the existing tariff. Twice has that tariff been condemned by the solemn verdict of the American people, first in the elections of 1890 and again last year. There was no mistaking the issue presented, which was whether there should be taxation for any other than public purposes. The Democratic party took the high ground that the Constitution does not authorize any species of tariff or other taxation except for the direct purpose of raising the necessary revenue for the support of the Government, and the people sustained us in that contention. In my opinion, they are not disposed to reverse that judgment now, when the country is just upon the eve of the realization of the enforcement of our policy.

The Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives now in session is engaged in the preparation of a bill embodying the sentiments of the Democratic platform, and in the very near future, probably by December 1st, the measure will be formulated and ready for the consideration of Congress. Our Republican friends manifest an impatience, and complain that we are tardy in pressing forward our measure of tariff relief, but I beg to suggest to them there is no custom or rule of propriety which demands the presentation of such a measure earlier than the first regular session of Congress after the national election.

The Ways and Means Committee should be complimented rather than criticised for its conservatism in dealing with so important a subject affecting the revenues and industries of the whole country. While disclaiming all authority to speak for that committee as to the details of their proposed measure, we may, nevertheless, safely anticipate some of its general features. First of all, it will be a revenue bill and not a scheme for the promotion of private interests at the public expense. Its purpose will be the raising of the needed funds for governmental purposes strictly in the mode and ways least burdensome to the masses. Raw materials needed in our manufactures will be placed upon the free list, for conclusive reasons fully explained in the debates of last year, and which every manufacturer and workingman entirely understand, and which they cordially approve. This relief will give an impetus to certain of our manufacturing industries, and afford work to tens of thousands of our idle laborers.

The necessaries of life will be substantially free. In fixing the necessary tariff upon manufactured articles due consideration will be given to the difference in wages between this and other countries, and such differences will be equalized in the rates imposed here, in the general interest of the labor of our country. There will be no unjust discrimination anywhere tolerated among its provisions. Bounties and subsidies will find little favor in its composition. The free list will be enlarged, and the complicated schedules will be greatly simplified. Every sort of favoritism heretofore permitted will be conspicuous by its omission, and in that respect it will stand out in bold contrast with the McKinley bill.

Mr. President, I speak of these two speeches, one made in 1892 and the other made last year, long before this bill had entered the Senate, to illustrate my own position upon this question. The Senator from Maryland says that I must be regarded as an opponent of the bill in its present shape. Let it be so. The Democratic masses are the opponents of this bill; your Democratic House of Representatives is against this bill; the President of the United States is against your bill; and I am in pretty good company, in my humble judgment.

I have endeavored to make the bill Democratic. The Senator says that I have endeavored to embarrass your bill. Embarrass it by offering amendments which perfect it? Embarrass it by offering amendments which are according to the platform of your party? Embarrass it by seeking to eliminate unjust taxes, not sanctioned in your Democratic platform? Embarrass it by relieving duties upon raw materials? Embarrass it by suggesting removal of duties from the necessaries of life? Embarrass it by seeking to take out those provisions wherein scandals have attached to them by reason of matters over which none of us have had any control? All these suggestions I have made, I have advocated, I have voted for; and if that constitutes embarrassing this bill, then I am guilty of the charge.

Mr. President, I have desired early action upon this tariff measure. It is well known, I think, that as early as March, 1893, I advised the calling of an extra session of Congress for the purpose of proceeding immediately with the work of tariff reform. I desired that we should frame a genuine tariff-reform bill. I had then no reason whatever to believe that it was contemplated by any Senator or by any member that an income tax should constitute a part and parcel of a tariff-reform measure. No suggestion of that kind had been made in 1892; no suggestion of it had been made last year; no suggestion of it had been made until last December.

Mr. President, the Senate has placed wool, and lumber, and hides, and other articles too numerous to mention upon the free list. Upon what ground? On what ground do you justify such action? They say, and repeat it, parrot-like, that this is a bill for revenue, and they say that therefore there must be no free list; that everything must be taxed. If the object of a tariff is simply and only for revenue, rejecting all other considerations of every kind and character, then all articles should be taxed.

But in this very bill you have placed on the free list wool, which last year brought into your deficient Treasury $8,000,000. Why is the duty taken off of wool when you say your Treasury needs money, and wool is a revenue article and last year brought $8,000,000? It is upon the broad ground, sir, that to the general rule that all things should be taxed we believe there are exceptions. The exceptions are that the necessaries of life should be substantially free.

Tell me, will you, please, why you do not put a duty upon tea and coffee? Would that not produce an immense revenue for the benefit of your Treasury? What ground is it, except upon the plausible, broad, and tangible ground that they are a portion of the necessaries of life, and therefore an exception to the general rule? So you place wool upon the free list because it is one of those things which constitute raw material necessary for the manufactures of the country. As you propose to reduce the duty upon manufactured goods, it was proper and right that these articles should be placed upon the free list.

Mr. President, it is idle to talk about a bill for revenue unless you make it consistent. I believe, just as I said before, in the first place, that all articles, as a general rule, should be taxed. The exceptions are the necessaries of life, which include, in my judgment, tea, coffee, and sugar—sugar, unless the absolute necessities of the Treasury require it to be taxed. I said before that you do not need both a sugar tax and an income tax. Second, you exclude raw materials, because they are necessary to build up the industries of the country, to aid and foster labor, and to give employment to your workingmen. Those are the reasons why those exceptions to the general rule are tolerated.

Have you forgotten the fact that away back in 1884, Hugh McCulloch, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, recommended that "the existing duties upon raw materials which are to be used in manufactures should be removed?" Have you forgotten the further fact that Democrats everywhere throughout the country applauded that recommendation of Hugh McCulloch, then Secretary of the Treasury? Is this doctrine of free raw materials a new doctrine with the Democratic party?

Away back on June 6, 1870, in the House of Representatives, a resolution was passed, for which three-fourths of the Democratic members of that House voted, to place coal upon the free list. Now we are told that this is a new doctrine upon the part of the President of the United States thus interpolated into this tariff debate.

Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], while criticising me as an opponent of this bill, playfully alluded to the fact that I could dance a waltz down the aisle in company with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I am not aware that I have been engaged in any such dance. I have cooperated with the Senators upon the other side in their opposition to an income tax. I have endeavored to so shape this bill as to compel, if I could, the elimination of that tax from this scheme. I have pursued the same course which early in the silver debate of last fall the Senator from Delaware pursued, when we saw him dancing a waltz down the aisle with the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who led the forces upon that side.

Together they stood shoulder to shoulder, arm in arm, and step by step, in advocacy of that repeal bill. All at once, if I recollect, there came a change over the spirit of the dreams of the Senator from Delaware. Just as victory was within our grasp for that repeal bill, we were then told by the same men who prophesy defeat now, that we could not pass that unconditional repeal bill here. We were told that your moss-grown rules would prevent it. We were told that every great question in the Senate of the United States must be compromised. You heard the predictions made then, substantially under the same auspices under which they are now made, that that repeal bill should not pass the Senate.

Mr. President, the President of the United States is believed to have occupied the same position then which he occupies today—the bold, unflinching champion of unconditional repeal. You said the bill could not pass the Senate. It did pass. The President announced in a formal interview had with the Associated Press that he stood where he had always stood, for unconditional repeal. These prophecies which were then made fell to the ground. The bill passed; the compromise failed. Mr. President, it is not unlikely that some tariff bill may pass here, but it is not likely that this compromise bill will pass. A bill should be framed based upon Democratic lines.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland not only saw fit to disclose the interviews which have been had with the President of the United States, but he went further to disclose party secrets. If I understood him correctly, he did not seek to defend a tax upon sugar solely upon the ground that it was a revenue article and that a tax was desired for the purposes of revenue. He said, of course, it was a revenue article. He said, of course, from his standpoint, it was Democratic to put a tax upon it. I do not wish to do him injustice, and I shall not; but the principal argument, the gravamen of his remarks, the gist of his point, was that we had bargained through him, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]—they had bargained that the Democratic party, if it came into power, should place a duty upon sugar.

Who authorized these gentlemen to make this bargain? Campaign committees are made for the purpose of conducting campaigns; they have no authority to change platforms; they have no authority to dictate legislation. They are functus officio the moment the campaign is over. They had no right, they had no authority, to make such a promise, and they exceeded their jurisdiction when they made such a promise to citizens of Louisiana. They said that a Democratic House, a Democratic Senate, and a Democratic press would ratify the bargain, the assurance, the compact that was made. That was a poor ground upon which to urge a tariff upon sugar.

It will make the people of the country desire that portion of the House bill which gives free sugar more than ever before. They believe that this tax, if defensible at all, should be defended upon principle, that it should be defended because it is required by the needs of the Government, that it should be defended upon broad grounds of public policy, and not upon the ground on which the Senator from Maryland gave his word of honor it should be done. That Senator never violates his word of honor, and I do him the credit to say that I have never known him to violate it. It does not follow simply because he gave his word of honor that we shall ratify it here. Much as I respect the Senator, much as I respect the national committee, much as I appreciate the great labor which they performed for the Democratic party, for Mr. Cleveland, and for the country, I am not here to be delivered in any such arrangement. I must speak and act for myself.

Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the question as to how far, if at all, the President of the United States was consulted in regard to that arrangement. It strikes me that the true ground for the Senate to take is that we will act independently of the President, we will act according to our own judgment, and that we should not be running to the White House to get suggestions as to how we shall vote upon this, that, or the other matter. I suggest to these friends of ours—these deceived Senators—that they do as I do—keep away from the White House. [Laughter.]

The idea that the President of the United States overreached these old, experienced, and foxy politicians [laughter], who have been through many a campaign, who talked with him but did not understand him, who now urge that he was too sharp for them, too bright for them, and they came away with a different sort of impression from what he had; and then, when the President wants to clear the atmosphere and tells the Democratic masses just what this bill is, with one accord they say, "We were overreached by this ambitious President!" [Laughter.]

It has been suggested that there are great interests somewhere which are demanding free coal. I do not know where they are. I do not know of any interests which are particularly demanding free iron ore. I hold in my hand a memorial from members of the Baltimore Cotton and Flour Exchange in regard to the advantages of free iron ore, signed by a long list of reputable citizens and business men of the city of Baltimore, and I ask that it may be attached to my remarks.

I do not know what interests are seeking for free coal. I have yet to hear any Senator suggest that the President of the United States in making this recommendation desired to subserve the interests of any monopoly or any individual or any interest. It matters not whether there is or is not any personal friend of the President engaged in this business. I have not heard a single suggestion of that kind made. The question has been asked who was interested? Certain interests, it is claimed. I believe that this suggestion of free coal has been recommended because it was believed to be for the best interests of the country. I believe that that gallant band of Democrats in the House of Representatives placed this article of coal upon the free list, not because somebody wanted it there, but because they believed they were thereby best discharging their duty to the country and fulfilling the pledges of the Democratic platform.

I shall not detain the Senate longer with further suggestions upon the propriety of my motion. I reiterate that it is as clear to me as can be that the Senate ought to recede from the amendments which it has made in the particulars I have mentioned. I repeat that that is a step in the right and practical direction. If you try another conference, if you recede from those amendments and submit the question again to the House of Representatives, and the House then fails to yield upon the other provisions of the bill, I shall own I am mistaken. You can not get together upon the present basis if you desire so to do.

Mr. President, I stand here ready to perfect this bill so far as it is possible to do so. I shall vote, as I have voted before, for free coal, free iron ore, free sugar, and free wool. If there are other articles of raw material which can be specified upon which the duty should be removed, I am willing to go to that extent. I desire, as I said before, to eliminate the income tax from this bill and I shall continue that struggle to the end.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator from New York permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. I want to ask the Senator from New York if the Senate recede from every amendment which it placed upon the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, and allows that bill to stand with free sugar, free coal, free iron ore, and free wool, will the Senator vote for the Wilson bill in that shape?

Mr. HILL. With the income tax remaining in?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I will cross that bridge when I get to it. [Laughter.] The Senator from Maryland has said that the Senate would not recede. He is perfectly safe, of course, in making the "bluff" which he makes now. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAY (to Mr. HILL). Do not let him "bluff" you.

Mr. HILL. I do not think he will.

Mr. GRAY. "Call" him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I would say that the Senator from Delaware is a good deal more used to those figures of speech than I am. [Laughter.]

I will suggest to the Senator from Maryland to try the effect upon me of removing the duty upon these articles, vote for free sugar, take off the one-eighth of a cent a pound, relieve this bill from the suspicions and scandals attached to it, and place all these articles on the free list, and then I will talk with you about how you vote and how I vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I have thus discharged my duty from my standpoint. The Senator from Maryland yesterday started to describe me as the Iago of Shakespeare, and then he withdrew the comparison. That reminds me of the senatorial conspiracy of years ago in the Roman senate, when a senatorial cabal conspired to assassinate the great Roman emperor. If I were disposed to make comparisons, I might speak of the distinguished Senator from Maryland as the "lean and hungry Cassius." [Laughter.] You recollect what Cæsar said of him. He said:

He thinks too much; such men are dangerous.

[Laughter.]

I might speak of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] as Marcus Brutus—"honest Brutus." Right here I want to say a word. During all the tariff debate, during all the preparation of this bill, that Senator has exhibited most wonderful patience and sagacity; he has treated every citizen and every Senator with the greatest respect. No matter how this debate may terminate, no matter whether this bill passes or not, I say the Senator from Arkansas—and in paying this compliment I do not discriminate against anyone else—has won the esteem and respect of his countrymen everywhere. I will call him "honest Brutus." Cassius I have already referred to. [Laughter.] Casca was the distinguished Senator who struck the first blow last Friday [Mr. VEST]. Trebonius, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]—testy, probably a little petulant—"good Trebonius." Metellus Cimber, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, when yesterday they stabbed at our President, and sought to strike him down, they made the same plea as did the conspirators of old, that they struck for Rome—for their country. They said they did it, not that they loved Cæsar less, but that they loved Rome more; not that they loved the President less, but they loved their party and this Senate bill more. [Laughter.] I can say with Mark Antony:

> What private griefs they have, alas, I know not,
> That made them do it; they are wise and honorable.

[Laughter and applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair admonishes the occupants of the galleries, and gentlemen accepting the courtesies of the floor of the Senate, that any demonstration of approval or disapproval is in violation of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I send up a motion, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion submitted by the Senator from Louisiana will be read.

The Secretary read the motion of Mr. CAFFERY, as follows:

I move that the conferees on the part of the Senate on House bill 4864 be instructed to insist upon the following amendment to the sugar schedule of said bill:

That the bounty provided in said act shall stand unrepealed to the extent that there shall be paid to the producer of sugar, from beets, sorghum, or sugar cane, grown in the United States in the year 1894, or from maple sap produced in the United States during the year 1894, under license for 1894, and subject to the limitations now imposed by law on all sugars testing not less than 90° by the polariscope, nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound, and upon such sugar testing less than 90° by the polariscope and not less than 80°, eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I do not desire that motion to be considered now. I desire it to lie upon the table subject to call.

During the course of the debate yesterday a great deal was said by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] about the President's action in writing the letter he did, especially in so far as that letter assailed, according to his construction of it, the honor and dignity of the Senate.

I can not hope to rival the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] in his eloquent vindication of the President of the United States. But, preliminary to certain remarks that I desire to make, I will say that there is nothing whatever in that letter which the President was not perfectly warranted and justified in saying, and there is nothing in that letter which assails in the slightest the honor of the Senate or any member of it. The passage of that letter which seems to have produced the ire of the Senator from Maryland reads as follows:

> Every true Democrat and every sincere tariff reformer knows that this bill in its present form and as it will be submitted to the conference, falls far short of the consummation for which we have long labored, for which we have suffered defeat without discouragement, which, in its anticipation, gave us a rallying cry in our day of triumph, and which in its promise of accomplishment is so interwoven with Democratic pledges and Democratic success that our abandonment of the cause or the principles upon which it rests means party perfidy and party dishonor.

Is that letter leveled at the Senate of the United States or is that letter addressed to the vast body of the constituents of the Democratic party. The President speaks of the whole party. He says that failure to perform the pledges made by the Democratic party in the conference committee will be a perfidy and a dishonor to that party, and I can not see why this assertion should be taken to apply entirely to the Senate.

Mr. President, I am not a champion of the President of the United States. I am entirely independent in any view I may take upon any question which is presented before this body. I act according to my own judgment and according to the best lights before me; and, according to that judgment, with the best lights before me, I say that the President of the United States is exonerated in this letter from any charge of imputing to the Senate of the United States either perfidy or dishonor. The very evidence that was elicited by the Senator from Maryland is proof conclusive that the President of the United States had a right to write that letter.

I stated that the very evidence elicited here, called forth in the dramatic style of the Senator from Maryland, justifies the President of the United States in writing the letter. If the President of the United States could be consulted and was consulted, his counsel sought, his indorsement as to the most important bill before the Senate asked by members of the committee in charge of the bill, with more power to assure its passage than any other component part of the Senate, why could not the President of the United States write a private letter and express his views upon the situation?

Why, if it was sought in the manner disclosed by the testimony, to influence legislation, to make legislation, could he not write a letter suggesting what his views were upon the subject? There is absolutely nothing in the charge that the President of the United States had no right to send, or that he violated the high functions of his office in sending, a private letter to the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

How does the substance of the letter impute dishonor to the Senate? There is hardly a member of the Finance Committee who has not risen in his place upon the floor of the Senate and disclaimed a great many features of the bill that they themselves have introduced. They have lifted their hands to high heaven and vowed that they would not have introduced such a bill had they not been coerced. Did they expect that coercion to go through conference? Did they look for their duress to run the whole length of the passage of the bill in its various stages? If they themselves have abjured the bill, if they have made declarations which are tantamount to saying that certain features of the bill involve perfidy and dishonor to party principles, how can they charge the President of the United States with almost a crime when they have virtually assailed the bill in nearly the same measure and degree.

Mr. President, in view of the revelations which were made here yesterday it is not forbidden to me to disclose the secrets of my little prison house. The Louisiana Senators have been made the common target for the taunts of Republicans and the shot of our own side. We have been pointed at as the bête noir of the bill. Our demand and our attitude have been the alleged stumbling block in the way of tariff legislation. Now I shall relate, feeling perfectly justified in doing so, the steps, so far as I know them, which led up to the formation of the sugar tariff schedule as finally presented to the Senate by the Finance Committee.

On one occasion I was present at a conference at which were present the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] who has just addressed the Senate, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]; my then colleague, now Mr. Justice White, and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. At that time we held a consultation, which was practically limited to the sugar schedule. I remember distinctly that the distinguished Senator from Maryland, if not the Senator from New Jersey, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], whose name I forgot to mention as being among those who were present, thought that a certain schedule upon sugar, which was 40 per cent ad valorem upon raw and 50 per cent ad valorem on refined, was a very excellent one. It was especially good for the refiner. It was fairly good for the producer.

I had not at that period looked into the calculation which under an ad valorem rate upon sugar would conceal a benefit in favor of the refiner, and immediately after the adjournment of that conference I, with those gentlemen, waited upon the Senate Finance Committee and offered to them as a fair sugar schedule 40 per cent ad valorem upon raw sugars and 50 per cent on refined. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who is a very able and industrious man, after I submitted that schedule, made a calculation which showed me that the schedule, while apparently giving only ten points to the trust, concealed quite as much as the trust derived under the McKinley act. Thereupon I withdrew the proposition. I need summon no witness to prove that fact. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] sits right before me. If that statement is not correct, he can correct it.

After this, various other conferences were had with the committee. Finally the committee adopted a specific rate of duty, based upon the polariscopic test, ranging from a cent for 80-test sugar to 1.26 for 93-test sugar, with 12½, or an eighth of a cent additional, for refined sugar. That schedule, in my opinion, was a good one. That schedule concealed nothing whatever in favor of the sugar trust more than what appeared on its face. It was with reluctance accepted by the people of my State. They thought that by economy, by better methods of extraction and evaporation, and even of agriculture, they could get along with that.

So the matter rested for some time, until finally one morning I met the distinguished Senator from Maryland at the northern door which enters into the corridor from this Chamber, and he told me that that schedule meant free sugar. I was admonished of the same fact by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE].

After some three or four weeks, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] of the subcommittee, came to me and my colleague [Mr. BLANCHARD]. He represented that that schedule was unacceptable to the refining interest, and that that interest would procure free sugar, which would involve the necessity of the Louisiana delegation in the Senate antagonizing the bill. He almost, I will not say entreated, but he earnestly besought us to accept a schedule of 40 per cent ad valorem on raw sugars, with one-eighth of a cent additional on refined, and with the bounty for 1894 assured to us.

That schedule was not acceptable to me, but I wish the Senate to know that the schedule of 40 per cent ad valorem and an eighth and a tenth is not the making, is not the concocting, of the Louisiana Senators. I wish the Senate to know that the specific rate, which is fair to the producer and reasonably fair to the refiner, was threatened with destruction. The whole of the Republican side would have voted for free sugar as a party measure; and then with a few votes on this side of the Chamber, sugar would have been put upon the free list. That would necessarily antagonize the sugar interests.

Therefore it was that the Senator from Arkansas in charge of the bill came to us and besought us to submit to this change. The Senator from Arkansas stands before me now. If I have said aught that is not correct in this matter, I desire him now to correct me. After some time we accepted that schedule. We accepted it in good faith. The stipulation was that the bounty for 1894 should be given to us; that 40 per cent ad valorem should be levied on all sugars, with an eighth and tenth additional, as reported by the committee.

The method adopted to secure the bounty for 1894 was by extending the time for the repeal of the McKinley act, so far as the sugar schedule was concerned, to the 1st of January, 1895. A tremendous clamor arose upon the Republican side; they beat their drums and tom-toms, and they affrighted the souls of the timid brethren on this side. They made it appear that the trust would rake in millions by having from the time the bill was under discussion until the 1st of January, 1895, to gather in all the sugars in the world. Yet the gentlemen who were making that tremendous clamor knew just as well as anybody else that the trust had already provided against an evil day; that it had bought every pound of sugar that was then made in the world which it could lay its hands on, and that therefore the trust was to be benefited by passing a bill which, as to the sugar schedule, would go into effect immediately, because the immediate rise would be felt on sugar then on hand which would otherwise have to be carried in stock until the 1st of January, 1895.

That scared our brethren over here, and then came the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], animated by the most patriotic purpose I ever saw. He is trying all sorts of expedients to better the bill in order to kill it. The ingenious methods of the Senator from New York are almost beside my understanding. With great skill and an overflowing patriotism which brings down the applause of the occupants of the galleries he waxes eloquent over the defects of the bill. He seeks to amend but to destroy, to repair but to kill.

Upon the motion of the Senator from New York to strike out that feature of the bill which continued the time for the repeal of the McKinley act, so far as the sugar schedule is concerned, until the 1st of January, 1895, our own brethren jumped the track and went over into the folds of the Republican party. That part of the agreement which was thus made was stricken out, and that was the first violation of faith toward the Louisiana representatives here.

I make this statement to show, first, that the schedule which has proved so objectionable was accepted by the sugar interest of Louisiana under protest. I make it to show that after as solemn an agreement as could be made between Democrats that agreement was wantonly and flagrantly violated upon the floor of the Senate. What occult power is it which has the force to change a fair schedule adopted after long deliberation? What subtle influence is it which is pervading the Senate that can strike down the agriculturist and uphold the interest of what is called a trust? The provision extending the bounty law was one not of politics, not of any particular theory of taxation, but one of absolute justice to the people of my State. That justice has been recognized throughout this body, and it will be recognized by anybody before whom the facts are laid.

The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], in reply to some remarks that I made upon sugar culture a few days ago, took occasion to say that a tariff of 40 per cent ad valorem was as high as any agricultural interest ought to have. It is a great deal higher than any agricultural interest that I know of except sugar ought to have. I do not place the tariff upon sugar in the line of protection, and I never did. I do place this modicum of bounty which was to have been given by our own side over here as an act of simple justice.

I had occasion a few days ago to refer back to the history of sugar culture. Sugar cane is not indigenous to the soil of this country. It is an exotic. It is foreign to our soil. The lower part of Louisiana, with its fertile soil and moist climate, comes nearer filling the conditions of the tropics as to sugar cane than any other place in the United States; and I say here that if we were upon equal conditions with Cuba or any of the tropics there is not a solitary man in Louisiana who would come before Congress and ask for a tariff. Before we were a State, while Louisiana was under the Spanish and French régimes, there was a high tariff on sugar.

When the French went into its cultivation under a tariff, and for a hundred years the people of Louisiana have been induced to cultivate that exotic by reason of the tariff. After the destruction of the industry by the war it was built up on a very high tariff. When the Republican party, following out their modern principle of not protecting articles that could not be produced or manufactured here to supply the domestic wants, put sugar upon the free list they thought our people ought not to be destroyed. Whether rightfully or wrongfully, they were engaged in that culture, and it was concluded that it would be a cruel thing to strike them down. It would have been a cruel thing, and it would be a cruel thing now.

I say, therefore, that it is not a question of politics at all as to a partial bounty for this year. It is a question of pure justice. In order to try to equalize themselves with the tropics, where cane grows indigenously, the people of my State have undertaken all sorts of improvements of a very costly nature, as all sugar improvements are. They have been trying to provide against the time when there would be no tariff. They are making an honest effort in that direction. Most of them have anticipated their crops and the tariff for years to come, and right at this moment it would be absolute destruction of those people to deny them this modicum of justice which was promised by the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. President, as I have said before, there is an influence here which I feel, but which I can not put my finger on, that has a vast deal more power in regard to sugar than the Louisiana Senators.

Here is an extract from the speech of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] yesterday, according to press reports, which I will read, making the Louisiana Senators the bête noire, placing upon them the responsibility of forcing this side of the Chamber into an unpleasant attitude, one which will violate Democratic principles and is distasteful personally to Democrats. I read:

I have seen honorable men correcting in the papers the horrible statements which have been put forth to demoralize them, and it is not unnatural that they should have done so. But the majority of us, who are accustomed to shot and shell, have never yet flinched, because we knew that no matter how distasteful it was to us personally, the vote of the Louisiana Senators was necessary to us.

Some have run to their casements, some of the timid have fled, but we veterans, scarred with the wounds of battle and accustomed to grape and cannister, stood our ground. We did not run away from attack because the wicked Louisiana Senators forced us to accept their sugar schedule. These horrid Louisiana Senators had two votes which we had to have; and while very distasteful to us, we had to swallow their terms.

The sugar schedule is not the making of the Louisiana Senators, nor did they coerce or threaten the Finance Committee into adopting it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Arkansas in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question. The Senator has told us what the attitude of everybody else is on free sugar. Will the Senator tell us what would be the attitude of the Louisiana Senators toward the bill if free sugar were put in the bill?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir; I will do so. I have distinctly announced on the floor of the Senate, and I will now repeat to the Senator from Colorado, that if free sugar is put in the bill I shall vote against it. I hope that is clear.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana one other question. Was that his attitude during the discussion some time back as to what should go into the bill?

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not care about being catechised in a categorical sort of style. I have answered the main question, and I think that is quite sufficient. Now, after the Senate Finance Committee had adopted the ad valorem schedule on sugar, the refining interest jump into the craft of tariff reform so far as sugar is concerned. They grasp the helm, they make the Louisiana Senators unwilling passengers with them; and if this tariff-reform bill is shipwrecked on that particular schedule, Senators need not shake their gory locks at us and say, "You did it."

Mr. President, I have sent up a motion to instruct the conferees on our side to do precisely what I understood the Senate Finance Committee promised to do, and the very amendment that they had printed and were to have offered and did not. I think that is in line with the ideas the Senate Finance Committee had upon this point, and it is a proper motion to make at this stage of the proceedings.

But, sir, I have stated, and will again state, that I have never placed the tariff on sugar per se on any other ground than that it is a fair, legitimate subject of revenue taxation. If I lived out of the State of Louisiana, like my friend from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who sits before me and who is as earnest a tariff reformer as there is in this body, I would vote for a tariff upon sugar irrespective of what protection it afforded.

The amount of money derived from the tariff upon sugar goes back to the people in paying the expenses of the Government which protects them. The tariff upon the protected manufactures goes nearly all of it into the pocket of the protected manufacturers and very little of it into the Federal Treasury. You may take any single article upon the dutiable list and make a comparison between the amount of money derived from the tariff upon the import of that article into this country and sugar and you will find that sugar pays at least six to one into the Federal Treasury above any other article on the dutiable list.

Mr. SQUIRE. May I ask the Senator from Louisiana a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana whether the people of Louisiana have any interest in a duty upon refined sugar in addition to the duty on raw sugar? I should like to have that point made clear, for it has been discussed over and over again, and it has been remarked that the State of Louisiana is interested in the refining of sugar. I should like to ascertain the Senator's view on that point.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am glad the Senator has asked me the question. The people of Louisiana have slowly emerged from a condition of absolute bankruptcy and ruin after the war into one of very considerable prosperity now. They have adopted, so far as their means permitted, all the modern appliances for the extraction of the juice from the cane and the evaporation of that juice when extracted. They have increased the output of sugar more than 50 per cent by the adoption of these methods. In adopting these methods they have necessarily turned from the old processes of the kettle and open steam train to the vacuum pan; to the centrifugal manufacture.

The centrifugals turn out sugar which is about equal to the German granulated. It is not equal to the first grades of sugar, the standard granulated made by the sugar trust, but it is about equal to the ordinary granulated sugar turned out by the Germans in their factories in Germany and the French in their factories.

Therefore, the Senator from Washington will see that the Louisiana sugar planters are directly interested in this differential duty of one-eighth of a cent. The trust has fastened itself upon our neck like the Old Man of the Sea around Sinbad's. We can not shake it off. It is a fellowship that we do not court. It is a forced alliance which is not of our making, and while this ad valorem tariff benefits the planter in the matter of the eighth, a tariff can be framed, and ought to have been proposed, a purely revenue tariff, which would have protected the producer and would have given at the same time the refiner all the adequate protection that he needs.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Louisiana a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Is it not a fact that under the bounty clause of the McKinley law those who receive the bounty, the producers of raw sugar, are forbidden to refine?

Mr. CAFFERY. In a measure. I will explain that to the Senator. The centrifugal sugar that is turned out by the Louisiana producer is a refined sugar, if you please to term it such, which the planter is permitted to make under the operations of the McKinley law. But a clause in that act virtually prohibits the planter from refining other sugar than his own. The centrifugal process is permitted on the premises; and the planter is allowed under the law to produce sugar according to the license.

Mr. GRAY. So that, if I may be permitted, the McKinley law gave to the sugar refiner and to the sugar trust the benefit of a protection of one-half a cent a pound on refined sugar and prevented any competition with the business of refining on the part of the sugar-producer.

Mr. CAFFERY. It did, in this way——

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope——

Mr. CAFFERY. If the Senator from Rhode Island will excuse me I will yield in a moment. The only way that you can successfully refine cane sugar is by the bone-black process. When you turn out from your centrifugals either yellow, clarified, or off-white sugar, there is a large residuum which the planters call second sugar, and the more they water, or the more they use hot steam to discolor the sugar in centrifugals and make a first-class article, the more they have of this second-class article, an inferior article called seconds. So, under the operations of the McKinley act the planters found it more profitable not even to make the first-class sugars under their centrifugal process, but simply to make the dark sugar with a high polariscope test, or a sufficient polariscope test coming up to 80 and 90 respectively, in order to get the bounty provided in the act.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me just a moment?

Mr. GRAY. One moment, if the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me. Then the practical effect is that the conditions produced by the McKinley law prevented the sugar planter from refining in competition with the American Sugar Refining Company?

Mr. CAFFERY. To a great extent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I can not allow a statement which is so far from the truth as that made by the Senator from Delaware to go unanswered.

Mr. GRAY. It is the statement of the Senator from Louisiana. I asked him the question.

Mr. ALDRICH. I refer to both statements.

Mr. GRAY. I asked the question for information.

Mr. ALDRICH. The act of 1890 allows a planter to refine his own sugars to any extent he pleases, and by any method he chooses; but in order to protect the revenue (as the Senator from Delaware must see if he stops to consider a moment) it prevented a sugar planter or producer from refining foreign sugars in the place where he was producing sugars upon which a bounty was to be paid, because if foreign sugars were taken into this place and mixed indiscriminately with the domestic product there would be no method of ascertaining the portion of domestic sugars upon which the bounty should be paid. The provision was inserted in the bill to prevent fraud. There is nothing in any sentence of the act which prevents a planter from refining his own sugars.

Mr. CAFFERY. I have read that clause of the act only once. The Senator from Rhode Island may possibly be correct.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am absolutely correct, because it was a matter, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will remember, of long discussion in committee, and of consultation with the Internal Revenue Bureau, as to what provisions should be adopted for the purpose of preventing fraud.

Mr. CAFFERY. Does the Senator mean by "all foreign sugars" any sugar the planter would buy from the neighborhood?

Mr. ALDRICH. Cane can be brought to central factories, and the entire product refined, but the producer can not bring sugars from Cuba or anywhere else and take them into his sugar house and mix them indiscriminately with his own, because on his product a bounty of 2 cents a pound was to be paid, and there would be no possible way by which enormous frauds could be detected.

Mr. CAFFERY. My recollection of the act is that there is a prohibition in it against the planter refining upon the same premises.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not his own sugar.

Mr. CAFFERY. He can not refine anybody's sugar but his own.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly not.

Mr. CAFFERY. That is precisely what I asserted; and for this reason——

Mr. ALDRICH. But the cane can be brought, as is customary in Louisiana, to a central factory. There is no provision against that.

Mr. CAFFERY. The factories that buy cane have as much as they can do to refine that sugar. In order to put up a refinery it is necessary to have a large building and to incur very heavy expenses, as the Senator from Rhode Island knows. A bone-black establishment of sufficient capacity to pay must be a large one. You can not run a small one with profit. An ordinary planter, therefore, would have to get his sugar in the neighborhood to refine, or the growers would have to send it there, and the act prohibits it. It is a practical prohibition.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The McKinley law, so called, has been in operation in Louisiana for three years. What proportion of the product of sugar in Louisiana is sent to central refineries to be refined under the bone-black process?

Mr. CAFFERY. Does the Senator ask what proportion of product of the sugar houses of Louisiana is sent to bone-black establishments to be refined?

Mr. ALLISON. I mean to the regular refineries such as the Senator from Delaware is trying to show were not to be accessible to the Louisiana planters.

Mr. CAFFERY. There is none sent to the refineries for the simple reason that there are no refineries there to send the product to.

Mr. ALLISON. Then that sugar is not refined, but sold in the form in which it is manufactured at or near the place of production? Is not that true?

Mr. CAFFERY. That is true generally.

Mr. ALLISON. I remember very well that the Senator's colleague stated on this floor within a brief space that 86 per cent of the sugar produced in Louisiana was above 16 Dutch standard and would receive the benefit of the one-eighth which is provided for in this bill.

Mr. CAFFERY. If the Senator will pardon me, I think I have made it clear that what we call centrifugal or off-white sugars do not come under the technical name of refined sugars.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not criticising——

Mr. CAFFERY. When you say that it was asserted upon this floor by me or by my colleague—I do not remember—that about 6 per cent——

Mr. ALLISON. Eighty-five or 86 per cent; I do not remember the exact figure.

Mr. CAFFERY. However, that is not correct. It is about 74 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. CAFFERY. All these sugars went into consumption directly and were not raw sugars, but centrifugally refined. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CAFFERY. But those sugars are not equal to the sugars run through a first class bone-black establishment.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CAFFERY. That is the case.

Mr. ALLISON. But what I desire to have made clear to the Senator from Louisiana is that this provision in the McKinley law was not inserted there for any purpose looking to the benefit of the refining of sugar to the detriment of the producers of sugar in Louisiana.

Mr. GRAY. I did not make any assertion about the purpose for which the provision was placed in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Or the effect of it.

Mr. GRAY. I do not know the purpose or the effect of it. I sked for information from the Senator from Louisiana, who knows a great deal more about those things than I do, as does the Senator from Iowa, whether the condition was not such as I have described.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Delaware will allow me, I will read the provision of the law, which is perfectly plain and explicit upon that subject.

Mr. GRAY. What section?

Mr. ALDRICH. Paragraph 236 of the act of 1890 reads as follows:

That any person who shall knowingly refine or aid in the refining of sugar imported into the United States——

Mr. GRAY. "Or."

Mr. ALDRICH—

or upon which the bounty herein provided for has already been paid or applied for——

Mr. GRAY. "Or applied for."

Mr. ALDRICH—

at the place described in the license.

In other words, it was intended to prevent frauds on the revenue, and the provision on its face shows that fact.

Mr. GRAY. Read section 234.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will do so when I have an opportunity. In paragraph 234 the same language is used.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, it is manifest that the McKinley act was framed with an ingenuity of an exquisite character, especially so far as the sugar trust is concerned. What I have stated in regard to the practical prohibition contained in the act against a planter refining is true. In order to refine sugar you have to put up a large establishment; you have to import sugar to keep your works going; and the act practically prevents anybody in that part of the country from refining sugar according to the best processes unless he shall erect a new building. A sugar planter with his building already completed sufficiently to put in a bone-black apparatus under that act can not in order to supplement his own crop import sugar enough to continue operations during the year so as to make it pay.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator certainly would not make that statement if he were aware of the facts. The prohibition applies only to the refining of foreign or bounty-paid sugar at the "place" where the sugar is produced for the purpose of securing a bounty. The prohibition only applies to these sugars when brought to that "place" and mingled with sugars upon which a bounty is to be paid. There is no way in which the revenue can be collected and the laws of the United States enforced unless this prohibition is imposed. A refinery can be erected across the street from the planter's sugar house, and he can refine sugars brought from all over the world. The same principle applies to this as to distilleries. Does the Senator from Louisiana suppose that it would be possible for the United States to allow a distiller who is required to pay a tax on his product to take his distilled spirits from the distillery to a rectifying establishment and mingle them with other spirits, foreign or domestic, without the payment of the tax? The planters of Louisiana can refine their own sugar, and are doing it every day of the year, as the Senator from Louisiana ought to know much better than I do.

Mr. CAFFERY. I read this clause in the McKinley act:

That any person who shall knowingly refine or aid in the refining of sugar imported into the United States, or upon which the bounty herein provided for has already been paid or applied for at the place described in the license——

Mr. ALDRICH. That place is the place where the sugar is produced.

Mr. CAFFERY. Exactly; I understand it.

Mr. ALDRICH. And it applies only to that place, and no other.

Mr. CAFFERY. Exactly; and that is the only place it can apply to in order to prevent the Louisiana sugar planter from refining.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the Senator from Louisiana explain to me what is to prevent the Louisiana sugar planter from building a refinery across the street or in any other part of his plantation for refining the sugar. The act merely provides that he shall not do it at the place where the sugar is produced for the purpose of paying the bounty, and the inhibition applies to no other place.

Mr. CAFFERY. Simply because when the Louisiana sugar planter has already a building suited for the purpose, which costs a great deal of money, he is not able to build another building twenty-five or thirty feet from it in order to be a refiner, and when you exact that of him you practically destroy his ability and capacity to refine.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the gentleman allow me a little further?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Louisiana must know—I take it that he is familiar with this subject—that sugar produced in Germany and usually called the German granulated is now produced by a continuous process without the use of bone-black at all. The Senator is also aware that a considerable portion of the sugars produced in the world go into consumption without going through the bone black.

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator from Rhode Island is an expert on sugar, and I am not. The Senator from Rhode Island knows just as well as I do that all the sugars made by the Louisiana sugar planter are centrifugal that go into consumption, and there is a much larger proportion of sugar made in Louisiana that does not go into consumption, which is in the form of seconds sugars, and which the planter has to sell to the refiners. Now, this provision of the McKinley law practically prohibits the refining of sugar in his own sugar house by the bone-black process, because he can not afford to put up a bone-black process for his own crop. The Senator from Rhode Island knows that if he puts up a bone-black process he has to keep that apparatus running during the year, and in order to do that he will have to import sugar, and he can not do it under the McKinley act.

Mr. ALDRICH. Now, if the Senator will permit me right there, let me ask what is the character of this prohibition? It only applies, as I have already twice stated, to the place where the sugar is originally produced, and if the planter has the machinery or can obtain the machinery for refining there is nothing in the law to prevent his doing it. No Senator will undertake to say that there is any practical prohibition against the refining of sugars in Louisiana or elsewhere.

Mr. LINDSAY. Can he do that?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly he can.

Mr. LINDSAY. Under the act?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly he can. He can refine it at any place in the country except the place where the sugar is produced for a bounty. There is nothing in the act or any other act which prohibits it.

Mr. GRAY. What is the object?

Mr. ALDRICH. The object is very plain. The object is to prevent the importation of sugar and taking it into an establishment where sugar is produced for the payment of the bounty, and mingling it with sugar upon which a bounty is to be paid, when it is perfectly clear that there can be no way of distinguishing between the two.

The provision was inserted to prevent the payment of 2 cents a pound bounty upon imported sugar or upon sugar upon which a bounty had already been paid; and I know of no other way by which frauds of this nature can be prevented. This action was taken after consultation with the officers of the Internal Revenue Bureau, who have had great experience with matters of this kind.

Mr. CAFFERY. That is practically an admission that the bill is a prohibition. First, if they have not got a house that is suitable for refining, the Senator from Rhode Island says they can go across the street and build another house. It is very easy to say that to the Louisiana sugar planter, but how can he do it when it would compel him to expend three or four hundred thousand dollars? He can not do it, and he is not going to do it.

Mr. ALDRICH. What could the sugar planter of Louisiana do if this prohibition did not exist, that he can not do now?

Mr. CAFFERY. He could put up a bone-black establishment inside of his present sugar house and refine sugar.

Mr. ALDRICH. He could not, if he did not have the money. The Senator from Louisiana says it requires an enormous expenditure and very expensive machinery. The enactment of this bill, or the want of this bill, would not give him the money to build a bone-black establishment, or to increase the size of his building.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not intend to go into this discussion further than to say that it is absolutely absurd for the Senator from Rhode Island to say that because the Louisiana sugar planter would have to buy the apparatus he necessarily would have to build a new house, if he has got one already in which to put the apparatus.

This bill prohibits him from doing that. He would have to go off the premises somewhere, to build a new house, which Col. Cunningham was compelled to do. He was told by the Treasury officials that he could not refine sugar in his sugar house. He got a bone-black establishment. He had to put up a new house at an enormous expense, when his old structure would have answered the purpose. You impose upon the sugar planter the double expense of building a new house for which he has no use and purchasing machinery which he must have in order to go into his own house. He might be able to purchase the machinery and not put up the house. If you entail the two expenses upon him, it is manifest that he can not refine sugar. So the statement made by the Senator from Delaware to me is substantially correct.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me to make a motion?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 25, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 24, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. BYNUM. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the vote on the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR THE WEEK.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I submit the following privileged resolution, Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this day, after the second morning hour, be assigned to the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the Public Lands.

That Wednesday, the 25th instant, after the second morning hour, be assigned to the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

That Thursday, the 26th instant, after the second morning hour, be assigned to the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

That Saturday, the 28th instant, after the second morning hour, be assigned to the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Patents.

This order not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or conference reports.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted for ten days to Mr. PENCE, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BELL of Colorado, for ten days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BARWIG, for this day, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave to withdraw papers from the files of the House was granted to Mr. HAINER of Nebraska, without leaving copies, in the case of Guy W. Gibson, Fifty-third Congress, there being no adverse report.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill No. 901, for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry R. Tilton, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and reported back to the House by that committee. The point of order being made against it, the Chair held that the committee had no jurisdiction of the matter, it being a claim. The Chair now directs the reference of this bill to the Committee on Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask to present a resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. Is it privileged? The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is not privileged, but I would like unanimous consent to present it, as it provides for printing the papers connected with the arbitration between Great Britain and the United States with reference to the fur seals. It is a very important matter, and as we have reached a late stage of the session, it ought to be attended to. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded, and unless the demand be withdrawn, the Chair can not entertain the gentleman's request.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. BARTLETT, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 7572) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at De Witt, Carroll County, Mo., and to establish it as a post-road; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAMER OCEANO.

Mr. COOPER of Florida, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7504) to provide an American register for the steamer Oceano, of New York, N. Y.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENTRY OF LAND FOR RESERVOIR PURPOSES.

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 2129) to authorize the entry of land for reservoir purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 7451) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I should be glad now to have unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution I have already indicated.

Mr. CULBERSON. I rise to a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] rises, as the Chair understands, to present a report from a conference committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, that he may submit his request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask if there be any objection——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope there will be none.

Mr. BURROWS. I suppose there is no objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee; but to call the regular order and then waive the call for a particular member is hardly regular.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BURROWS. I have no objection at all to the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not like to submit a request for unanimous consent after the regular order has been demanded.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Very well; I will not press my request.

COURT OF APPEALS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I submit the conference report which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] submits a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5860) to amend sections 4, 6, and 10 of the act of February 9, 1893, entitled "An act to establish a court of appeals for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from its disagreement to each and all of the Senate amendments and agree to the same.

D. B. CULBERSON,
G. W. RAY,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

JOHN H. MITCHELL,
WM. F. VILAS,
RICHARD COKE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The Senate amendments from which the conference committee recommends the House to recede simply make the salaries of the clerk and his deputy payable monthly instead of quarterly, and the other amendment limits the special expenditures of the clerk's office to $500 in lieu of $2,000 provided in the original bill.

The conference report was agreed to.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty-two minutes before 1 o'clock. The Clerk will report the joint resolution which was called up by the Committee on the Judiciary and pending at the conclusion of the last morning hour.

DIRECT TAX, WEST VIRGINIA.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 119) to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the governor of the State of West Virginia the sum appropriated by the act of Congress entitled, "An act to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861."

The SPEAKER. This resolution is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] asks unanimous consent for the consideration of this resolution in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS. I object.

Mr. TERRY. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BURROWS. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 3.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, there is no quorum, and yet I have no desire to delay the matter at all. It is a matter of such importance that I want to get a quorum here.

Mr. TERRY. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. TERRY and Mr. BURROWS.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Speaker kindly appoint the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK] in my place.

The SPEAKER. Very well; the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BRODERICK] will act as one of the tellers instead of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 138, nays 30, answered "present" 2, not voting 181: as follows:

Mr. TERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the second morning hour may be considered as having expired.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That this day, after the second morning hour, be assigned to the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

ANDREW GRAY.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4806) for the relief of Andrew Gray.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the commission duly appointed under the act of Congress approved October 1, 1890, recommended the reinstatement and approval for patents of the homestead entry of the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 22, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, and the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 23, in township numbered 23 north of range numbered 12 west, of Mount Diablo meridian, in the State of California, made by Andrew Gray on October 9, 1872, upon which he has continuously resided ever since, and has made improvements thereon worth more than $4,000; and

Whereas said entry was erroneously canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on September 14, 1880, for conflict with the boundaries of the Round Valley Indian Reservation as defined by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1873, subsequent to said entry; and

Whereas said Indian reservation has been reduced under said act of 1890, so that the land covered by said entry is not within its limits; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior declined to approve said recommendation on the ground that he had no authority to reinstate said entry, because the third section of said act of 1890 provided for the sale of said tract: Now, therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause said entry to be reinstated and allow the entryman to make due proof of his compliance with the requirements of the homestead law, upon which patent may issue as in other cases.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH AT ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 1076) to release a certain limitation existing in an act of Congress touching the Episcopal Church at St. Augustine, Fla.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas in the provisions of section 3 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the confirmation and settlement of private land claims in East Florida, and for other purposes," approved February 8, A. D. 1827, it was declared that the lands in St. Augustine, Fla., relinquished and confirmed to the incorporated Episcopal Church of St. Augustine should forever inure to the purposes for which they were confirmed, and should not be alienated without the consent of Congress; and

Whereas the growth of the city of St. Augustine, and other physical and social conditions, have rendered the land so relinquished as aforesaid unsuitable for the purposes of the church aforesaid: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the said church at St. Augustine, and to the corporation of The Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Florida, and to all other officers and authorities having charge over, or interest in, the said land, to sell and convey the same to the purchaser thereof free and discharged from the condition stated in the provisions of the statute referred to in the preamble of this act. And the proper authorities of the said The Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Florida may use the proceeds of said sale in purchasing another lot in the city of St. Augustine and erecting a church edifice thereon for the use and benefit of the church organization to which the old Episcopal Church lot was relinquished and confirmed by the act of Congress hereinbefore mentioned.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WHEELOCK SIMMONS AND WIFE.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 79) to authorize a corrected patent to be issued for the donation land claim of Wheelock Simmons and wife.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas in the patent issued to Wheelock Simmons and Lucinda Simmons, his wife, dated April 20, 1866, for their donation land claim, in the county of Washington, in the State of Oregon, a mistake was made in the description of the lands intended to be confirmed to them thereby, and the boundary lines thereof, as given in said patent, do not connect; and

Whereas it has been held by the Secretary of the Interior that such mistake can not now be corrected without authority from Congress: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be issued to said Wheelock Simmons and wife a corrected patent, to show upon its face that it is issued in lieu of the patent heretofore issued to them, for the lands described in a special plat of a survey of their donation land claim approved November 8, 1862, and certified by the surveyor-general of Oregon to the local land office August 8, 1867, described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point 5.05 chains west and 15.65 chains north from the northeast corner of section 1, township 1 south, range 3 west; thence west 40 chains; thence south 59°, west 24 chains; thence south 25°, west 29.13 chains; thence south 30°; 30' east 48.25 chains; thence east 26.15 chains; thence south 1.75 chains; thence east 58.85 chains; thence north 57.75 chains; thence west 39.93 chains; thence north 15.65 chains to the place of beginning; to be divided between husband and wife, as in the original patent, and that said patent shall have the same force and effect as to the title of all purchasers and grantees of any portion of said land claim from said patentees, or either of them, as if the same had been executed and delivered at the date of the execution of said patent, dated April 20, 1866.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PRESBYTERIAN BOARD OF HOME MISSIONS.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5623) authorizing the issue of a patent to the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions for certain lands on the Omaha Indian Reservation for school purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States of America is hereby authorized and directed to issue to the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions a patent for the following-described land, to wit: The southwest quarter of northeast quarter and west half of southeast quarter and northeast quarter of southeast quarter of fractional section numbered 29, township 25, range 8 east of the sixth principal meridian, on the Omaha Indian Reservation, in Thurston County, Nebr., containing 160 acres, more or less.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, was laid on the table.

COLD WATER RESERVOIRS AT HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7488) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant leases for sites on the Hot Springs Reservation, Arkansas, for cold water reservoirs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to lease unto the Hot Springs Water Company, of Hot Springs, Ark., its successors and assigns, or to any other person or corporation authorized to supply the city of Hot Springs with cold water for drinking and domestic purposes, a site upon the West Mountain of the Hot Springs Reservation, to be selected by him, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining thereon a reservoir for cold water and the pipes necessary to connect the same with the system of water supply of the city of Hot Springs, the term of such lease to be not to exceed twenty years, and the consideration therefor an annual rental of $300, to be collected and accounted for as now provided by law in relation to the collection and accounting for of revenue derived from leases of bath-house sites upon the Hot Springs Reservation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to hear the gentleman for a few words on this bill. I desire to revert to a matter that was before the House a few days ago on House bill 4952, a bill for the disposition of disconnected tracts of the public domain. In the debate upon that bill the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], made the declaration:

Now, we have in the State of South Dakota, in the State of Washington, in the State of Montana, and all over the West isolated and disconnected tracts of land, without the limitation of less than 160 acres we propose, which are subject to sale at the minimum rate of $1.25 an acre.

I controverted the proposition of the chairman of the committee that there were lands in the State of South Dakota that could be purchased at $1.25 an acre, and I have since taken the trouble to inquire into the matter and I find the state of the case to be about this: It is not as the gentleman stated in his broad declaration here. As I said before, there is not an acre of land in South Dakota that any man can go to the Land Office and purchase, as a matter of course, at $1.25 an acre; but I find it has been the practice, under the statute, for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to make no general proclamation in regard to the sale of these lands. There is a possibility of securing land, as the gentleman from Arkansas asserted, but it is only a possibility, and that does not apply to my State in general, in my opinion, and the Land Office seems not to have so construed it. In the language of the section that the gentleman from Arkansas has referred to in his report—

It may be lawful for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to order into the market after due notice, without the formality and expense of a proclamation of the President, all lands of the second class, though heretofore unproclaimed and unoffered, and such other isolated and disconnected tracts or parcels of unoffered land which, in his judgment, it would be proper to expose for sale, in like manner, after public notice of at least thirty days, which shall be given by the land officers of the district in which such land shall be situated, pursuant to the direction of the Commissioner.

It will be seen that even in the States named by the gentleman from Arkansas, and in which he said that any citizen could go and buy these disconnected tracts at $1.25 an acre, there is only a possibility of obtaining such lands in that way. The petitioner, if he finds a disconnected tract, may petition the Commissioner of the General Land Office as to that single tract to have it offered; but there is no assurance that he will get the land. I understood the gentleman from Arkansas to assert there was; my understanding of his statement was that any citizen could go to the Land Office and buy any of these disconnected tracts at $1.25 an acre.

Mr. McRAE. I made no such statement as that. If the gentleman so understood me, he misunderstood me.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, that was the whole subject of controversy between us. The gentleman said this:

Now we have in the State of South Dakota, in the State of Washington, in the State of Montana, and all over the West, isolated tracts of land without the limitation of less than 160 acres we propose, which are subject to sale at the minimum rate of $1.25 an acre.

That proposition is the one which I denied and which I now deny.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman must have understood that we were then trying to amend a law which provided for the public sale of isolated tracts of land. I had no thought of conveying the impression that anyone could go and buy such lands without advertisement, and in the debate distinctly stated that the act of March 2, 1889, prevented private sales.

The very bill that we had before us provided for advertising. The object of the bill was to put the offered and the unoffered lands upon the same footing. I understood the gentleman [Mr. PICKLER] to say that that law did not apply to South Dakota, and that isolated tracts would not be sold there, and I said it did, and I think he will concede that upon that point he was in error.

Mr. PICKLER. I did not assert that it did not apply to South Dakota.

Mr. McRAE. Well, then, I misunderstood you, and if you did not there should be no question between us, and let us not take up the time of the House about a matter not under consideration and about which neither appear to have understood the other. I accept your statement as to what you intended.

Mr. PICKLER. I was very positive as to what I said, as was the gentleman from Arkansas about what he said. I stated that lands could not be procured in South Dakota at $1.25 an acre, as the gentleman had said they could. At that time I did not believe that the Land Office was applying the law at all to any portion of my State, but I find that in one of the old land districts, before the homestead law went into operation, there were a few tracts of land disposed of in that way. The gentleman from Arkansas, however, certainly did make his statement too broad when he said that a citizen could purchase these lands at $1.25 an acre. As I have already stated, there is only a possibility of some getting the lands at that price.

The man petitions the commissioner, and the commissioner advertises, and the man who wants the land has no assurance that he will get it, for it is put up at public auction and is sold to the highest bidder. So, when the gentleman from Arkansas made the assertion I have quoted, I denied that broad proposition, and I was right. I say again there is not an acre of land in my State that can be procured, as a matter of course, at $1.25 an acre.

Mr. HERMANN. But in many of the States of the Union large bodies of land can be purchased at $1.25 an acre as the minimum price without regard to advertising. That condition of things arose under the act of October 20, 1862, which permitted the President of the United States to issue his proclamation and offer those lands.

Mr. PICKLER. But those were not the disconnected tracts that we have been talking about.

Mr. HERMANN. That applied to disconnected tracts as well as to large bodies of land. There was no distinction made between disconnected tracts and large bodies.

Mr. PICKLER. But those were offered lands.

Mr. HERMANN. That is, they were unoffered lands previously, but were made offered lands by the proclamation.

Mr. PICKLER. That is true; but I contend to-day that there are no offered or unoffered lands left; that that distinction has ceased altogether.

Mr. HERMANN. By special act of Congress.

Mr. PICKLER. The reason for the law has ceased altogether. In earlier times, before the homestead act went into operation, the President of the United States by proclamation offered certain lands for sale, and they were known as offered lands, while those that were not included in the proclamation were known as unoffered lands. Then the homestead law came into operation and those proclamations ceased, and the general law provided that all public lands should be disposed of under the homestead, preemption, and other land acts.

Mr. HERMANN. No; the gentleman is mistaken in that statement. The homestead law did not withdraw from market the lands offered by the President's proclamation; they were still offered lands.

Mr. PICKLER. Does the gentleman say it has been the policy to offer lands for sale since the homestead law was enacted?

Mr. HERMANN. Regardless of the policy, we have the law.

Mr. PICKLER. The lands which were offered were offered before the homestead law was enacted. I do not contend that any lands which were offered were ever withdrawn; I am not contending that the effect of the homestead law was to withdraw offered lands; but I say that when the homestead law came into operation the reason for keeping up this distinction as to offered and unoffered lands ceased; and there are now in my opinion no lands that can be classed as offered or unoffered lands. Hence I do not believe that these disconnected tracts can be sold in any of our States in the way referred to.

Mr. HERMANN. They can by being offered under proclamation.

Mr. PICKLER. It can not be assumed that because the discretion existed when the President was by proclamation offering lands for sale therefore all lands never offered in that way and subject to the homestead law are unoffered lands. I do not believe they can be so construed. They are not in my State.

I desired to say this much in vindication of the position which I took the other day, and which I think was absolutely correct.

Mr. HERMANN. The proclamation never extended to the gentleman's State, which was then in a Territorial condition.

Mr. PICKLER. The Commissioner of the General Land Office makes these sales regardless of the President's proclamation. Instead of a man being able to go and take one of these tracts, the fact is that in my State any man desiring such a tract must file a petition with the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the specific tract. The Commissioner considers the application; he may conclude that the land can not be sold at all. If he concludes it ought to be sold, it is put up at public auction; and there is no assurance that the applicant can get the land at any moderate price.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT WITH ARKANSAS.

Mr. McRAE. I call up the bill (H.R. 4903) to authorize a compromise and settlement with the State of Arkansas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior, or any three persons they may jointly select or cause to be selected on behalf of the United States, are hereby fully authorized and empowered to compromise, adjust, and finally settle with the governor of the State of Arkansas, or with such person or persons as may be authorized by the laws of that State to act in its behalf, upon such terms and conditions as to them may seem just and equitable, subject to approval by Congress, as hereinafter provided, all or any of the differences between the Government and the said State growing out of and arising from the issue of certain bonds by the said State which are now owned in their own right or held in trust by the United States; the 5 per cent fund which accrued to the said State under the act approved June 23, 1836; the unpaid portion of the distribution fund which accrued to the said State under the act approved September 4, 1841; the swamp and overflowed lands in place granted by the act approved September 28, 1850, and not heretofore approved to the State; the land and money indemnity due the said State under the acts approved March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, and all other claims and demands of whatever kind or nature; and any compromise or settlement they may make with the said State shall be fully reported back to Congress, giving the basis thereof, for its further action, said compromise not to be effectual and final until approved by Congress.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENTRY OF LAND FOR RESERVOIR PURPOSES.

Mr. McRAE. I call up the bill (S. 2129) to authorize the entry of land for reservoir purposes, and I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any citizen of the United States, or any association of citizens of the United States, or any ditch or water company, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, shall have the right to purchase lands suitable for reservoir purposes, not to exceed one quarter section of unoccupied public lands not reserved for public use at such price as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, not less than $2 per acre: Provided, That when lands so purchased are within a mining district such lands shall be considered mineral lands, and the patent to such lands shall not authorize the purchaser to extract mineral therefrom, but all such mineral shall be reserved to the United States, which reservation shall be inserted in such patent.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall insert in the patent a provision that unless the land so sold shall, within three years from the date of entry, be utilized for reservoir or water-storage purposes, that such land shall revert to the United States. That the privilege herein granted shall not be construed to interfere with the control of the water for irrigation or other purposes under authority of the respective States and Territories, and this provision shall be inserted in the patent.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Amend by adding the following:

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to sell to any railway company operating a line of railway through or near the public lands of the United States so much land under this act as he may deem necessary, not exceeding 160 acres at any one place, for gravel pits, reservoirs, and also right of way for pipe systems connecting the same with such railways, and is authorized to issue patents therefor as provided herein: Provided, The same shall be utilized for reservoir purposes within three years from the date of purchase, as specified for individual purchasers in section 2 hereof: And provided further, That the land or right of way shall not be within the limits of any park, forest, military or Indian reservation, or the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, as this bill was reported only this morning, the report has not yet been printed. I will have it printed with my remarks so that it may go into the RECORD. The object of the bill, taken in connection with the amendment reported by our committee, is to provide means by which railroad companies now or hereafter operating their railways in, through, or near the public lands of the United States may acquire by purchase from the Government at an appraised valuation tracts of land not exceeding 160 acres in any one place for the purpose of making reservoirs from which water may be drawn in the operation of their roads.

The amendment provides that pipe lines may be laid across the public lands to connect these reservoirs with the railroads, the grant, however, to be made by the Secretary of the Interior, in whose discretion the whole matter is left; but this discretion is so limited that he can not grant more than 160 acres at any one place.

It also provides that in like manner land may be conveyed to the railroad company for a gravel pit on paying the appraised value into the public Treasury.

Mr. HARTMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? I understand that they are not permitted to purchase land except for the construction of reservoirs, to be used for the purpose of supplying the water to their respective roads and to provide gravel?

Mr. LACEY. That is all. That is the only purpose of the proposed amendment in the shape of an additional section to the Senate bill.

Mr. HERMANN. What is the reference to the mineral lands in the bill?

Mr. LACEY. I have not the Senate bill before me, but ask the Clerk to send it to me and I will explain. It is in relation, however, to the question of irrigation. The first section of the Senate bill covers the question of irrigating ditches, and provision is made for the use of water for mining purposes also.

Mr. CAMINETTI. That is just what we want to investigate. This bill might create very great damage in California.

Mr. COFFEEN. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The committee amendment was again reported.

Mr. CHILDS. I desire to offer the amendment I send to the desk, to be added at the end of the act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, which has been read.

Mr. HERMANN. Let me ask the gentleman first this additional question: In his first explanation, as to the purposes of the bill, I understand he stated it provided to the railroad companies the right to secure land for reservoir purposes in connection with their railway privileges. But it seems to apply also, as I understand the bill, to the mining interests of the country, and I should desire further information with regard to the scope of the bill as it affects mining operations.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the first section of the bill of the Senate I will read, and then endeavor to explain its provisions.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Before that, if the gentleman from Iowa will yield to me——

Mr. LACEY. Certainly, if the gentleman is familiar with the amended bill, I yield with pleasure.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. That is just the trouble; I am not familiar with its provisions, and therefore I rise for the purpose of getting information. I think the policy sought to be outlined here ought to be carried out in full, in all of its details, and there are some important questions in connection with the matter that should be clearly understood.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to have the bill again reported.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The report accompanying the bill is not before the House.

Mr. LACEY. I have the report in my hand. It was made this morning.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It has not been printed, and is not in such shape as to be accessible to us.

Mr. LACEY. I will read the report. It is as follows:

This bill provides for the entry of public lands for reservoir purposes, and your committee think its purpose a wise one, and recommend its passage.

But we think that there is a necessity for an enlargement of the scope of the act.

We have already recommended a substitute for H. R. 7451, which would carry out the objects of the present bill in part, but we think that the whole matter can be more conveniently disposed of by the addition of another section to the present bill.

We therefore recommend that the bill be amended by adding the following section:

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to sell to any railway company operating a line of railway through or near the public lands of the United States so much land under this act as he may deem necessary, not exceeding 160 acres at any one place, for gravel pits, reservoirs, and also right of way for pipe systems connecting the same with such railways, and is authorized to issue patents therefor, as provided herein: Provided, The same shall be utilized for reservoir purposes within three years from the date of purchase, as specified for individual purchasers in section 2 hereof: And provided further, That the land or right of way shall not lie within the limits of any park, forest, military or Indian reservation, or the District of Columbia."

This additional section will provide for the purchase of the necessary gravel pits, reservoirs, and pipe lines upon the public lands for the benefit of the railways located there.

We think that the sale of such land for these purposes, not exceeding 160 acres in any one tract, may be safely intrusted to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, the land to be properly appraised.

Your committee also recommend that the title of the bill be amended to read as follows: "To authorize the entry of land for gravel pits and reservoir purposes, and authorizing the grant of right of way for pipe lines."

Now, the first section of the Senate bill is in the following words:

That any citizen of the United States, or any association of citizens of the United States, or any ditch or water company, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, shall have the right to purchase lands suitable for reservoir purposes, not to exceed one quarter section of unoccupied public lands not reserved for public use, at such price as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, not less than $2 per acre: Provided, That when lands so purchased are within a mining district such lands shall be considered mineral lands, and the patent to such lands shall not authorize the purchaser to extract mineral therefrom, but all such mineral shall be reserved to the United States, which reservation shall be inserted in such patent.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill as originally prepared covered ditch companies, or water companies, and had for its main purpose the aid of irrigation, or to simplify matters connected with irrigation in the arid lands of the United States. In the same arid lands, however, the railway companies met with the same difficulty and great inconvenience about procuring water, and it was thought best to cover both questions in the same bill, so far as it was possible to do so.

Mr. HARTMAN. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me, I frankly say that I knew nothing whatever of the questions involved in this bill until it came up to-day. I would like to ask the gentleman if he would object to withdrawing the bill from consideration for the present, and allow it to come up on some other day?

I have heard the same or a similar statement of opinion from at least two gentlemen sitting near me. We do not want to oppose the bill, if, after careful examination of it, we can approve of it; but there is a very important matter involved, and that is the question of the right of any person, company, or corporation to purchase a tract of land for reservoir purposes at a stipulated figure, or at a minimum figure; because if that is done, the purchaser and holder of that reservoir tract has complete control and monopoly, in many instances, of the disposition of all the water supply that can possibly be gathered in the vicinity. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the bill.

Mr. LACEY. I have no question but that if gentlemen will examine this bill they will find it satisfactory. I ask leave to withdraw it from the present consideration of the House.

Mr. HERMANN. Has this bill been examined by the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. LACEY. I understand so; and I understand the bill is entirely satisfactory to all parties. Under the statement of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], I will ask to withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks to withdraw the bill. If there be no objection it will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

SETTLERS ON CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 3655) for the relief of settlers on unsurveyed Government lands lying within certain railroad land grants.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where any citizen or citizens of the United States have heretofore made actual bona fide homestead or preëmption settlement on any unsurveyed Government land, though such settlement may prove to be within a land grant from the Government to a railroad corporation, such settlers, notwithstanding such grant, shall be protected in the peaceable possession of such homestead or preëmption claim, and shall receive from the United States title to the land so occupied, in the same manner and under the same conditions as other settlers on like public land.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Public Lands were read, as follows:

Amend by inserting at the end of line 4 the words "or desert-land entry and," and strike out the word "Government," in line 5.

Add to the end of line 12 the following:

"And said railroad companies may select from the lieu lands of its grant an amount equal in quantity to the lands so occupied by settlers."

Add the following:

"SEC. 2. Nothing in this act shall be so construed as to waive any right the United States now have to declare a forfeiture of such grants for failure to comply with any condition of the grant."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, on the first reading of the bill I did not pay as close attention as I should, and I desire to ask if this bill provides for settlers upon the indemnity strip? I have sent for a copy of the bill, but I do not know whether it will reach me in time. As I understand, it provides for any valid homestead or preëmption settler within the granted limits upon any odd section, but the person whom we ought to try to help is the settler upon the odd section within the indemnity strip.

Mr. McRAE. I think the bill will cover that, but if the gentleman wishes to make it perfectly certain, I suggest to him that he insert the words "within the indemnity limit."

Mr. WILSON of Washington. A large body of settlers made their settlements outside of what was known as the 40-mile strip, not knowing that at that time there was authority in the Secretary of the Interior to withdraw the 10-mile indemnity strip and the second 10-mile indemnity strip, and they got upon the odd sections there. Now, if we can give these people some relief by legislation here in this bill it ought to be done.

Within the Western States and Territories are vast tracts of land claimed and held by railroad companies under grant of lands to aid in the construction of the roads. Much of this land is still unsurveyed, and there has been and is now no certain means by which the home-seeker can distinguish the railroad-land sections from the Government sections; hence many settlers have within the limits of these grants settled and improved lands and are now occupying the same as their homes. To many of these homes the railroads are claiming title. The object of this bill is to confer title in such cases on the settler, and permits railroad companies to select from the lieu lands granted an amount equal to the sum of lands so occupied.

Mr. McRAE. I think there will be no question about the bill covering them, but there is no objection to inserting the words "or within the indemnity limit."

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Then I propose, Mr. Speaker, to amend by adding, after the word "grant" in line 7, the words "or within the indemnity limits surveyed."

Mr. McRAE. I have no objection to that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, after the word "grant," insert the following:

"Or within the indemnity limits surveyed."

Mr. HERMANN. I will ask my friend from Washington [Mr. WILSON] whether that will not exclude settlements upon the unsurveyed lands; whether it will not be construed to mean only such settlements as were made upon surveyed lands within the indemnity limits?

Mr. McRAE. But if the gentleman will pardon me, the gentleman from Oregon thinks that your use of the word "surveyed" may exclude those that are "unsurveyed."

Mr. HERMANN. Make it "surveyed or unsurveyed."

Mr. McRAE. I would suggest that you withdraw the word "surveyed" and let it be "within the indemnity limits."

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I accept that suggestion.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the title will be amended as recommended by the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I would suggest that the bills which the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands is going to call up, if there be no objection, be sent for, so that we may have them here and have some understanding about the bills.

TIMBER AND STONE ACT.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7259) for the relief of certain settlers who have entered lands under the timber and stone act, etc.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all entries heretofore made under an act entitled "An act for the sale of timber lands in the States of California, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington Territory," approved June 3, 1878, as amended by the act of August 4, 1892, which said entries have been or may be held to be invalid for the reason that the lands embraced therein have "been offered at public sale according to law," and which said entries have not been canceled nor the lands covered thereby otherwise entered, appropriated, or disposed of prior to the passage of this act, be, and the same hereby are, confirmed.

SEC. 2. That an act entitled "An act for the sale of timber lands in the States of California, Oregon, Nevada, and Washington Territory," approved June 3, 1878, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "and which have not been offered at public sale according to law," where the same occur in the fifth and sixth lines of section 1 of said act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of McRAE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF TIMBER LANDS IN THE STATES OF CALIFORNIA, OREGON, NEVADA, AND WASHINGTON.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5714) to amend an act entitled "An act for the sale of timber lands in the States of California, Oregon, Nevada, and in Washington Territory."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act for the sale of timber lands in the States of California, Oregon, Nevada, and in Washington Territory," approved June 3, 1878, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows, to wit:

"SEC. 3. That upon the filing of said statement, as provided in the second section of this act, the register of the land office shall post a notice of such application, embracing a description of the land by legal subdivisions, in his office for a period of sixty days, and shall furnish the applicant a copy of the same for publication, at the expense of such applicant, in a newspaper of general circulation published nearest the location of the premises, to be designated by the register of the land office, for a like period of time; and after the expiration of said sixty days, if no adverse claim shall have been filed, the person desiring to purchase shall furnish to the register of the land office satisfactory evidence, first, that said notice of the application prepared by the register as aforesaid was duly published in a newspaper as herein required; secondly, that the land is of the character contemplated in this act, unoccupied and without improvements other than those excepted, either mining or agricultural, and that it apparently contains no valuable deposits of gold, silver, cinnabar, copper, or coal; and upon payment to the proper officer of the purchase money of said land, together with the fees of the register and the receiver, as provided for in case of mining claims in the twelfth section of the act approved May 10, 1872, the applicant may be permitted to enter said tract, and on the transmission to the General Land Office of the papers and testimony in the case a patent shall issue thereon: Provided, That any person having a valid claim to any portion of the land may object, in writing, to the issuance of a patent to lands so held by him, stating the nature of his claim thereto; and evidence shall be taken, and the merits of said objection shall be determined by the officers of the land office, subject to appeal as in other land cases. Effect shall be given to the foregoing provisions of this act by regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the only purpose of this bill which has just been read is to empower the registers and receivers of the land offices to designate the papers in which timber-land notices shall be published. I think it unwise and impolitic to make any change of the present law. It has been in operation many years. For several years I had the designation of the newspapers in which land-office notices should be published, and in my judgment it has operated well.

It gives the register and receiver no power and no opportunity of favoritism. He must designate the paper published nearest the land, without regard to its politics or anything of that kind; and it has grown into almost law in the Western country that its operation should continue; and it seems to me that it will be exceedingly unwise at this time to change the method of designating the papers in which timber-land notices shall be published. Leave it as the law is now, providing that the register and receiver shall designate the papers published nearest to the land.

In all my acquaintance with land matters in the West I have never known this to be violated; and in fact under the law it can not be violated, because whenever a notice comes up to be published the register and the receiver have to take a map and measure which newspaper is published nearest to the land for which the publication is to be made. Now, if we change the law as to timber-land notices, it will at once involve politics and partisanship and all that sort of thing that never has to my knowledge crept into this advertising in the past. It seems to me that the old law is just what we should have, a law that says that the register and receiver shall designate the newspaper located nearest to the land, utterly regardless of politics.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have found in my experience, which has been somewhat extensive in these land matters in the West, that whenever the Republicans were in power—in respect to the suggestion of publication of the advertisement in the paper nearest to the land—when the Republicans were in power the Republican paper in the same town got it, and when the Democrats were in power the Democratic paper got it, when there were two papers published in the same town. Have you not found in your experience, so far as favoritism and putting it into politics is concerned, that instead of taking it out of politics it has put it squarely in; and when the designation was made as to the paper the notice was to be published in, when there were two papers published in the same town, it was published in the Republican paper even when the land was perhaps 40 miles away?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, my experience has been to the contrary. I know that when—and I hesitate to say the number, when there were from five to eight advertisements a day, that whenever there was any doubt we always made a note of it, and then if one paper got it to-day or to-morrow the next time we would give it to the other newspaper. I never had any trouble in my district about it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. You were a fair man.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. No, I think I am as much permeated with partisanship as anybody else; but we recognized that this was not partisan patronage, but something that all were entitled to, and we recognized that the people who were paying for the advertisement had some right in the matter, so we advertised as he desired.

But what I want to do is to keep it out of the power of the register and receiver to absolutely designate the paper, because that would give an opportunity, it seems to me, for a great deal of favoritism. I believe that the old law in its operation for the last fifteen years has given rise to as little complaint as any law that could be enacted. This does not apply to homestead entries; it does not apply to desert-land entries; it simply applies to timber-land entries.

Now, I want to call attention to the fact that upon the west side of the State of Washington there is perhaps the largest timber deposit in the known world. Nearly all our notices over there are timber-land notices, and to give these land officers at Olympia or at Seattle—all honorable men, who, so far as I know, are performing their duties faithfully—to give them, I say, the absolute power to designate whatever paper they please for these publications is, I think, inadvisable. It is not desirable to place in the hands of any public officer any such discretionary power, especially when you have a law that has worked satisfactorily for ten or fifteen years past, and which has given rise to no complaint at any time or any place, so far as I am advised.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. The publication under this law has to be for sixty days, has it not?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Ninety days.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, why could not the settlers be saved considerable expense by shortening that time? Under the homestead law we make only six publications.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I think that might be done and ought to be done. The old law requires a publication for ninety days, and, for a timber-land notice, I believe the expense is from $6 to $10, whereas it ought not to exceed $5. We ought to reduce the time to sixty days, and I do not know but we ought to abolish the publications entirely, because out of the thousands of cases of final proofs that have come within my knowledge I have never known of a single complaint being brought about by these publications in the newspapers. But in any case we ought to shorten the time and reduce the expense to which the settler is subjected by having these publications made.

If we could amend the bill in that way, leaving out this power to designate the papers, it seems to me that would be about right, and I do hope the committee will not put into the hands of any officer any such power of discrimination as is here proposed, especially when we have a law upon the statute book that has worked well for ten or fifteen years and has given rise to no complaint.

Mr. FLYNN. Is it not a fact that the present Commissioner of the General Land Office has placed a construction upon the law which seems to be satisfactory to everybody, holding that, no matter what the politics of the paper may be, the notice must be published in the paper nearest to the land?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. In answer to that I will say that if a notice was published in any paper not nearest to the land, and that fact was afterwards discovered, it would cause a suspension of the final proof, and a new publication of notice to make final proof would be required.

Mr. FLYNN. Then most of the entries that I know of in my section prior to this ruling would have to be suspended.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. There is no question about the law. It provides absolutely that the notice must be published in the paper nearest to the land.

Mr. MARSHALL. Do you think there ought to be any different rule in reference to timber lands?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The timber lands are generally more remote from the settlements where papers are published.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It is true, as the gentleman from Arizona suggests, that the timber lands are far removed from the settlements in many cases, but all along Puget Sound and all through that region there are half a dozen newspapers published in every county, and if an amendment could be adopted cutting down the time, reducing the expense of these notices and leaving the old law to stand, providing for publication in the paper nearest to the lands, I think that would be about right. Another point. Under the present law the register and receiver have a right to designate in a contest case any newspaper within the county.

Now, that has not worked very satisfactorily, because almost any register or receiver will designate the paper that is most convenient to him, or the one that has been most agreeable to him, or the one that is published in the place where he is located. Now, very many readers of the little country newspapers never see these contest notices, and if you give the register and the receiver the power to designate any newspaper they please, then supposing a man to make a timber-land entry in Whatcom County, the farthest portion of my State, and supposing the register or receiver to designate a paper in Thurston County, more than 300 miles away, nobody would know anything about it.

The idea of the law is that the notice shall be published in the paper nearest to the land, so that people who reside in the neighborhood shall see the publication and know whether or not the law is being complied with.

Mr. LUCAS. The gentleman will notice that this bill has been introduced "by request."

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yes; but that does not affect the bill or the principle at all.

Mr. LUCAS. No; but it is a circumstance to be noted.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me it would be very unwise indeed at this time to change the existing law so far as this very important subject is concerned. It is not so much the widest publicity that we desire in the matter of these publications as it is that the notice shall be put before the class of people who are most likely to know whether fraud exists or not; for the object in giving notice is to enable parties who are acquainted with any frauds to make those frauds known at the time of the hearing at the local land office. There is no necessity for a change in the law, for the reason that at the present time the law favors the policy that has been carried out recently by the present Administration and in former years by former administrations.

The rule has been invariably to select those papers which are published nearest to the land in question; and after long years of experience in connection with sales of the public lands I have discovered this, as a general thing, to be the best and most satisfactory policy; because it is presumed that persons residing in the neighborhood of the land are best acquainted with the land and know whether it is timber land or not. Under the present timber law it is necessary that the party shall make proof that the land he desires to purchase is chiefly valuable for timber. That is the requirement of the law. Now, if he desires to purchase the land for any other than timber purposes, making the timber merely a pretext, persons residing in the neighborhood of the land will best know whether the land is actually sought for timber purposes or not.

It it be left to the register or receiver to select some newspaper in the town or city in which the local land office may be situated, or some other place distant or otherwise from the land, it will be readily seen that great frauds may be perpetrated, from the fact that information as to the real purpose in purchasing the land will not be conveyed by those who have the means of knowing whether the land is really desired for legitimate purposes or not. For this reason, it occurs to me, the existing law, with its present construction by the Department, should remain.

Again, public lands which contain timber are as a general thing remote from the local land offices, from the principal towns or cities where there are several newspapers. In nine cases out of ten it will be found that the paper published nearest to the timber land is a single journal published in a town or village of the vicinity. So that very little harm can be done if the law be left as it is, because if the nearest paper be selected, it will generally be found that there is but one paper to be designated.

For these and other reasons which it is not necessary to enumerate, it occurs to me it would be very unwise to disturb the existing law, or the construction which the Department has put upon it.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, the reason for this bill is perfectly obvious. The Department, after an experience of several years, under the old method of advertising, thinks it ought to have the discretion to select the papers in which these notices are to be published. The notices of sale in cases of this kind are quite important; and the object should be to give the greatest publicity to the sales. Frauds have been perpetrated by selecting some newspaper without any general circulation, because by accident or design it was nearest to the land. Mistakes have been made in determining which paper was the nearest to the land. Mistakes of this sort ought not, in my judgment, to operate to the injury of the honest, bona fide purchaser; yet, following the plain letter of the law as we have it now, they do. The land officers ought to be authorized to select the newspaper in which to publish these advertisements, and the notice when thus given ought to be recognized by the law. It is enough to make the applicant pay for the notice.

Mr. HERMANN. In the land district in which I reside—in fact in the town in which I reside—is located the local land office. The main timber belt now sought for is about 200 miles from that land office. In the town in which the land office is situated are the leading newspapers of the land district. Now, I will ask my friend whether it would subserve the purpose of the law, which is that these entries shall be honestly made, to have this publication made in newspapers 200 miles away from the location of the land, thereby permitting speculators, syndicates, etc., to enter lands for other purposes than timber purposes—for mineral purposes or agricultural purposes, for instance.

They well know that if the notice be published in newspapers 200 miles distant from the lands, or 200 miles farther than the newspaper nearest to the lands, no person who may be interested in defeating the fraudulent intent of the proposed purchaser can obtain information as to his purpose. Does not the gentleman think that a great many frauds can be perpetrated in that way, whereas by publication in papers nearest to the land the intended fraud may be discovered and frustrated?

Mr. McRAE. That depends upon where the man lives who contemplates to perpetrate the fraud upon the public domain. The present law would give just as much opportunity for such fraud as there could be under this bill. I repeat that everything depends upon the residence of the man who wants to commit the fraud. And whether he lives near the land or whether he may live away from it, if he wants to keep that information from the community at large, why he would publish it in a paper that does not have a general circulation in the neighborhood.

Mr. HERMANN. But the paper circulating nearest to the land ought to be designated. My friend would admit, and naturally, that such a paper or such an advertisement published in such a paper, would meet the eyes of the people who are likely to be better acquainted with the circumstances of the case than if it were published two or three hundred miles away.

Mr. McRAE. Oh, there is no necessity for publishing it two or three hundred miles away. It ought to be published in the county or in the vicinity, and if the register or receiver publishes it two or three hundred miles away from the land it would be, to my mind at least, clear and conclusive evidence that he and somebody else were in collusion to rob the Government.

But I undertake to say that bonded and sworn officers will not do that except for the very purpose of committing fraud: and it is better by far to fix the responsibility of these officers, and so require them to secure an honest administration of the law and make them responsible, that this legislation is proposed.

Mr. HERMANN. Let me illustrate this case to the gentleman: I reside in a county that is a hundred miles long from north to south, and 72 miles from east to west. In one extreme portion of it there is valuable timber land, near which is published one newspaper. The land office is about 65 miles away from this point. Now, does not my friend believe, in publishing matters of this kind, that it would be better to publish it in a paper two or three or five or ten miles from the land, where more people would have knowledge of the facts, the character and quality of the land, and better able to give notice, if fraud exists, than if this was published sixty-five or a hundred miles away?

Mr. McRAE. Of course; and if the register having discretion in the matter did not exercise it properly under those conditions, he ought to be removed.

Let us take another case. Suppose there is no paper published there at all, and you must go outside and publish it in another county or in another State, as is often the case, and in a paper that does not circulate in that community at all. The land-grabber is compelled to publish in that paper because it is the nearest and he knows that there will be no competition; and therefore, under such circumstances and without any competition whatever, he buys in the land.

Mr. HERMANN. Yes; a very extreme case.

Mr. McRAE. Yes, but it has happened and it may happen again.

Now, the bill can be amended, if it be deemed advisable, to require the publication to be in a paper in the community if there is one, but let some officer be charged with the responsibility of selecting the paper that will give the greatest publicity to the notice.

Mr. HERMANN. Will not the gentleman agree to this, that the amendment shall include the newspaper published in the county nearest the land?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I would not do that.

Mr. McRAE. If you do that you at once get into the trouble that we have already. You have to make measurements on the map and go through all the formality that has been heretofore attended with so much difficulty, and with which the settlers ought not to be harassed, instead of doing what is far better, to give the officer the discretion to select the paper in which the notices shall be published. If there is one paper published in the county, let him take that. If there is more than one, then let him have the power to say which of them should have it.

Mr. HERMANN. But in some cases there are counties in the West, as the gentleman knows, which are four or five times as large as some of the older States. The counties exist under peculiar conditions because of their immense size in some cases——

Mr. McRAE. I do not see how we could remedy that except by dividing the counties.

Mr. HERMANN. It could be done by a general law to cover this advertising.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The gentleman from Arkansas has stated the law with one exception now. The only difference is that the register and receiver can not now designate the newspaper.

Mr. McRAE. That is the meat of this bill.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. He is now charged with the enforcement of the law, and must collect the money for the advertisements. Any person can go to the office and have the advertisement inserted. He goes to the office, makes his application, and makes his final proof. The register or receiver looks at the map which is hanging on each local land-office wall. He takes a measure, if he is an honest man, and measures it. He then takes the $5, and charges himself with it, and when the advertisement comes in he examines it to see if the section and township and range, the name and description are accurate, and when he finds that, he approves it and pays the newspaper man for it. That is all there is of it; but he shall, under the law, designate the paper nearest to the land.

Mr. McRAE. And if he makes a mistake in selecting that, if he is not informed of the publication of a little paper which he had never seen, why the entry and sale are void, and the man who may have gone upon the land and cut his timber is subject to be yanked up in the Federal court and put in jail, and fined, and his lumber seized and sold. You expect the land officer to know things which he can not know, and he acts at the peril of the man who is trying honestly to buy the land and not his own.

Mr. HUNTER. In the event that the publication was made in a newspaper under the rule suggested by the gentleman from Washington, that it should be the nearest newspaper, if it was published in a newspaper that was not nearest to the land, would that invalidate and destroy the title of the purchaser?

Mr. McRAE. I understand so. I understand that to be the ruling in the Department, although I am not prepared to cite the case.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It has been held both ways. I know that mistakes have been made in the spelling of the name or a mistake in the section or township or range, an improper description. That comes back for correction. I want to say that wherever it occurred in our office, we readvertised, and I paid for it myself; but it only occurred upon two or three occasions. I hate to see this law amended, I hate to see this power given into the hands of one or two men upon the west coast of my State, because I believe it will not operate to the best interests of the service.

Mr. McRAE. If the advertisement is made in the same county will not that protect it?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It may.

Mr. McRAE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I think we ought to recommit this bill with instructions to report it back, with an advertisement for sixty days, or for thirty days. We should be doing some good in that way; but by this we are reversing the law that has been upon the statute books for the last fifteen years.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I venture to suggest that this bill as it now stands provides for the publication in a newspaper of general circulation, published nearest to the location of the premises, to be designated by the register of the land office.

Mr. McRAE. Yes.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. The only difference between this bill and the law as it now stands is that it provides for the publication in a paper of general circulation and, in addition to that, that it shall be designated by the registrar. Now, it follows from that that the objections that have been made are not well taken; that this bill would not authorize the designation of a newspaper far removed from the premises where there is a newspaper nearer to the premises than the one designated.

Mr. HERMANN. Excepting this, I desire to say that the register or receiver might be guilty of partiality. He might say, "This is not a paper of general circulation," whereas in reality it might be. Who shall decide that question?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. That would be a matter to be decided by this registrar. Unquestionably there are two interests involved: First, the party having the notice issued; and, second, the general public; and both parties are interested in having the matter absolutely settled. This makes the registrar the responsible party, and I know of no better way of determining whether a paper is of general circulation, or whether it is nearest to the premises, than by referring it to some appropriate person, and any particular person interested could have an appeal on this subject.

But now the law as it stands has the effect that if a person fails to publish his notice in the paper nearest the premises, then, not having complied with a jurisdictional provision of the law, his proof is absolutely void, and it invalidates his title. Now, I am insisting that an amendment to the law should be made which will set at rest those questions of fact and law that may be involved.

Mr. McRAE. That is just the purpose of this bill.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. And while I think this bill is not drawn as carefully, perhaps, as it should be, yet I think it is a move in the right direction. We should, if we can, meet all the objections that have been made.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Where does the gentleman from Nebraska get the idea that an appeal could be taken from a decision of the registrar or receiver designating the paper?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. That certainly could be done.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not think so.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. The order of the registrar or receiver must necessarily become a part of the record, and an appeal could be prosecuted on that question. I submit that to my friend, who is a lawyer, and who must know that.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have never known an appeal to be taken or sought to be taken upon this ground, and I do not think there is any provision by which an appeal can be taken.

Mr. McRAE. I would like to move this amendment and have a vote upon it. I have two other bills that I would like to have passed this morning, which are more important than this one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 15, page 2, after the word "premises," the following:
"And in the county wherein the lands are situated, if there be one in such county."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, now we have got this down to counties, a mere geographical area of a county; but that is not what I have been opposing. I am opposing the other paragraph—that the register and receiver shall not have the power to designate absolutely and unconditionally the paper, either in the county or outside of it.

Mr. HUNTER. Who designates at this time?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The register or receiver, in the paper nearest to the land.

Mr. HUNTER. They do that now.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. That is, more properly the register does that. But this gives him the power absolutely in the county, the same as in contest cases, as I referred to in my first remarks. In contest cases, wherever we have a contest, the register can designate the paper in the county. Now, I think it would have been better in contest cases to have the advertisement in the paper published nearest the land. Finally, in contest cases we had to go to work, under a regulation of the Land Office, giving us instructions to place the notice absolutely on the land.

No, Mr. Chairman, the matter is not perfected very much by the addition of the county. It now resolves itself into the same condition as in the contest cases, and we always have more or less trouble with them, and I hope the bill will be sent back for instructions, or that it will be laid on the table. It is not in the interest of the settlers, and not in the interest of anybody that I know of.

Mr. McRAE. I would like to have a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. I have an amendment I desire to offer.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I have an amendment I desire to offer, if it is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "sixty," in line 12, page 2, and insert the word "thirty;" strike out the words "for a like period of time," in lines 16 and 17 and insert "for four consecutive weekly insertions;" strike out the word "sixty," in line 17, and insert the word "thirty."

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple matter to which I ask the attention of the gentleman from Washington. It is unnecessary to have a publication for sixty days, altogether unnecessary.

Mr. McRAE. How will it suit the gentleman if we say six weeks instead of sixty days.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Make it five consecutive weeks.

Mr. McRAE. If the amendment is modified in that respect, I will accept it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington (to Mr. PICKLER). That is the same as the homestead.

Mr. PICKLER. But you have to post the notice in the land office.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. HERMANN. I would suggest to my friend that he insert the words "at least," for the reason that there are some cases in which it may be necessary to give a longer notice than five consecutive weeks.

Mr. McRAE. I have no objection to a modification of that kind.

Mr. HERMANN. Then the register and receiver can exercise that discretion.

Mr. McRAE. I would have no objection to an amendment changing the amendment in that respect.

Mr. PICKLER. You have to post a notice in the land office, and my amendment gives thirty days, which is now the period the notice has to be posted in the land office. If you make it "five consecutive insertions," will that always cover thirty days?

Mr. McRAE. I think it will always cover thirty days.

Mr. PICKLER. "Five insertions." I think that will be all right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HUNTER. Let the amendment as modified be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "sixty," in line 12, page 2, and insert "thirty."
Strike out "for a like period of time," in lines 16 and 17, and insert the following: "For five consecutive weekly insertions."
Strike out "sixty," in line 17, and insert "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 14, page 2, by striking out after the word "newspaper" the words "general circulation."

The amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 0.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I hope the gentleman will withdraw this bill, as I do not want to have to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. McRAE. Let the previous question be considered as ordered and let the bill go over until another day.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. If I agree to that, Mr. Speaker, what parliamentary rights will I have?

Mr. McRAE. You will have the right to vote. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have the right to move to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I hope the gentleman will withdraw this bill. It is a bad bill. Nobody was willing to father it and it was introduced by request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is entirely out of order.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Then I will subside, but this bill affects only my State and nobody has asked for it, and I want to preserve my parliamentary rights.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. WILSON of Washington (pending the count by tellers). Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas agrees to have this bill go over, and to have a half an hour's debate upon it in the House.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the bill, and that I be permitted to call it up hereafter in the House, and that we have thirty minutes' debate upon it before the vote is taken.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SECTIONS 2401 AND 2403, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7803) to amend sections 2401 and 2403 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2401 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2401. When the settlers in any township not mineral or reserved by the Government, or persons and associations lawfully possessed of coal lands and otherwise qualified to make entry thereof, or when the owners or grantees of public lands of the United States, under any law thereof, desire a survey made of the same under the authority of the surveyor-general and shall file an application therefor in writing, and shall deposit in a proper United States depository to the credit of the United States a sum sufficient to pay such survey, together with all expenditures incident thereto, without cost or claim for indemnity on the United States, it shall be lawful for the surveyor-general, under such instructions as may be given him by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and in accordance with law, to survey such township or such public lands owned by said grantees of the Government, and make return therefor to the general and proper local land office: Provided, That no application shall be granted unless the township so proposed to be surveyed is within the range of the regular progress of the public surveys embraced by existing standard lines or bases of township and subdivisional surveys."

SEC. 2. That section 2403 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as heretofore amended is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2403. Where settlers or owners or grantees of public lands make deposits in accordance with the provisions of section 2401, as hereby amended, certificates shall be issued for such deposits which may be used by settlers in part payment for the lands settled upon by them, the survey of which is paid for out of such deposits or said certificates may be assigned by indorsement and may be received by the Government in payment for any public lands of the United States entered or to be entered under the laws thereof."

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The report (by Mr. HALL of Minnesota) is as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bills (H. R. 6194 and 7559) to amend sections 2401 and 2403 of the Revised Statutes, have had the same under consideration and report them back to the House with the recommendation that they be laid upon the table and that the accompanying substitute therefor be passed.

Communications from the Department of the Interior hereto attached are made a part of this report.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, July 2, 1894.

Hon. T. C. McRAE,

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, July 19, 1894.

SIR: I transmit herewith report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on House bill No. 7559, "To amend sections 2401 and 2403 of the Revised Statutes," relating to surveys of public lands.

I concur in the views expressed by him, and would recommend the passage of the bill with the amendments suggested in his report.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS C. McRAE,
Chairman of Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 6, 1894.

SIR: Under your instructions, dated April 3, 1894, I have the honor to submit herewith my report, in duplicate, on House of Representatives bill No. 6194, Fifty-third Congress, second session, entitled and reading as follows:

A bill amending section 2401 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That section 2401 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2401. That when the settlers in any township, not mineral or reserved by Government, and persons and associations lawfully possessed of coal lands and otherwise qualified to make entry thereof desire a survey made of the same under the authority of the surveyor-general, and file an application therefor in writing and deposit in a proper United States depository to the credit of the United States a sum sufficient to pay for such survey, together with all expenses incident thereto, without cost or claim for indemnity on the United States, it may be lawful for the surveyor-general, under such instructions as may be given him by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and in accordance with law, to survey such township or coal lands and make return thereof to the general and proper local land office: Provided, That the township or coal lands so proposed to be surveyed is within the range of the regular progress of the public surveys embraced by existing standard lines or bases of township and subdivisional surveys."

It is a truth that the Government is deeply interested in the legal and orderly development of the public lands of all classes, and it has been the policy to facilitate such development by liberal legislation intended to give to all citizens equal opportunities.

The development of public lands, containing valuable deposits of coal, is a matter of great importance to the general public, and undoubtedly should be encouraged by appropriate legislation.

Although the discoverer of a valuable deposit of coal, upon the unsurveyed public domain may, under section 2359, United States Revised Statutes, take possession of and hold his mine, yet there is no provision of law under which a patent can be issued therefor until the public surveys have been extended so as to embrace it; and until such survey is made the Government can not avail itself of the advantage of a sale.

I am of the opinion that a necessity exists for legislation providing a proper method for obtaining title by Government patent to lands containing valuable deposits of coal which are situated upon the unsurveyed public domain.

The bill before me has in view an enlargement of the facilities contained in the coal-land laws by permitting such lands to be surveyed in manner as now provided by sections 2401 and 2402, United States Revised Statutes, and section 2403 as amended by the act of March 3, 1879, (20 Stats., 352), for the survey of agricultural lands required for actual settlement.

Believing that it is in accordance with sound public policy to have our coal lands upon the unsurveyed public domain which are not available under existing law brought into the market and developed as early as practicable, and believing that their disposal and development would be promoted by the enactment of this bill, I recommend its passage.

The copy of the bill and the letter from the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, and a copy of existing regulations relative to deposits by individuals for the survey of public lands, are hnrewith returned.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 17, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the Department, of a letter dated June 28, 1894, from Hon. THOMAS C. MCRAE, chairman of the House Committee on the Public Lands, inclosing House bill No. 7559, entitled "A bill to amend sections 2401 and 2403 of the Revised Statutes," and requesting an early report thereon with such suggestions and recommendations in reference thereto as may be deemed proper.

In response to the direction of the Department to report the views of this office upon the provisions of the pending bill, I have to state as follows:

Under existing law settlers upon the public lands may make deposits for the survey of the townships in which their claims are situated, when such townships are within the range of the regular progress of the public surveys embraced by existing standard lines or bases for the township and subdivisional surveys.

The triplicate certificates issued for such deposits prior to March 3, 1879, can be used only by the settlers in the purchase of lands in the township the surveying of which was paid for out of such deposits:

The triplicate certificates issued subsequent to March 3, 1879, and prior to August 7, 1882, may be assigned by indorsement and used in payment for lands entered under the homestead and preemption laws in any land district; and

Triplicate certificates issued on and after August 7, 1882, can be received in payment for lands only at the land office in which the lands surveyed for which the deposit was made are subject to entry, and not elsewhere.

Reference is made to sections 2401, 2402, and 2403 of the Revised Statutes, and the amendatory acts of March 3, 1879 (20 Statutes, 352), and August 7, 1882 (20 Statutes, 327).

By section 1 of House bill No. 7559 section 2401 of the Revised Statutes is so amended as to provide, in addition to the authorization of deposits by settlers for the survey of public lands, that when the owners or grantees of public lands of the United States under any law thereof desire a survey made of the same under the authority of the surveyor-general, and shall file application therefor in writing, and shall deposit in the proper United States depository to the credit of the United States a sum sufficient to pay for such survey, together with all expenditures incident thereto, without cost or claim for indemnity on the United States, it shall be lawful for the surveyor-general, under such instructions as may be given him by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and in accordance with law, to survey such township or such public lands owned by said grantees of the Government, and make return thereof to the general and proper local land office: Provided, That the township so proposed to be surveyed is within the range of the regular progress of the public surveys embraced by existing standard lines or bases for township and subdivisional surveys when said application is made by settlers, otherwise said surveys to be made of the lands granted by the United States or owners or grantees as aforesaid.

Section 2403, Revised Statutes, provides that the amounts deposited by settlers under section 2401 shall go in part payment for their lands situated in the townships the surveying of which is paid for out of such deposits.

By section 2 of the pending bill section 2403, Revised Statutes, is so amended as to provide that, when settlers or owners or grantees of public lands make deposits in accordance with the provisions of section 2401 as amended by said bill (No. 7559), the amount so deposited shall go in part payment for their lands situated in the townships the survey of which is paid for out of such deposits, for which there shall be issued certificates. Also that each certificate when not used by settlers may be assigned by indorsement and may be received by the Government in payment for any public lands of the United States entered or to be entered under the laws thereof.

By section 3 of said bill all laws inconsistent therewith are repealed.

I have carefully considered the provisions of the pending bill, which has in view an enlargement of the facilities for the adjustment of the various Congressional land grants and for the obtaining of title by the settlers upon the public lands, and as the Government is equally interested in the legal and orderly development of the public lands, it is good policy on its part to facilitate such development by liberal legislation.

There is no question of the great desirability of the early completion of the survey of the public lands within the limits of the railroad and other land grants, in order that the grantees, may be enabled to select the lands to which they are legally entitled under such grants, and it is equally desirable to afford every facility to settlers upon the public lands to obtain title to their claims.

There is at present no specific appropriation for the survey of the public lands within the limits of the railroad and other Congressional land grants, and as the regular appropriations have been, and are likely to be, inadequate to meet all demands for public land surveys the advisability of such legislation as will provide additional facilities for the adjustment of land grants and meet the demands of settlers is obvious.

I believe House bill No. 7559 to be, in the main, in accordance with sound public policy, but would suggest the following amendments, viz:

Amend the proviso to section 1 by striking out all after the word "surveys," in line 23, and making the same read as follows:

"Provided, That no application shall be granted unless the township so proposed to be surveyed is within the range of the regular progress of the public surveys embraced by existing standard lines or bases for township and subdivisional surveys."

Amend section 2 so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2403. Where settlers or owners or grantees of public lands make deposits in accordance with the provisions of section 2401 as hereby amended, certificates shall be issued for such deposits, which may be used by settlers in part payment for the land settled upon by them the survey of which is paid for out of such deposits, or said certificates may be assigned by indorsement, and may be received by the Government in payment for any public lands of the United States entered or to be entered under the laws thereof."

The bill thus amended would, in my opinion, be free from objection, and I recommend that it be so passed.

Mr. MCRAE's letter and the inclosed copy of H. R. bill 7559 are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MINERAL LANDS, MONTANA AND IDAHO.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 3476) to provide for the examination and classification of certain lands in the States of Montana and Idaho.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed, as speedily as practicable, to cause all lands in the States of Montana and Idaho within the land grant and indemnity land-grant limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, as defined by an act of Congress entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route," approved July 2, 1864, and acts supplemental to and amendatory thereof, to be examined and classified by commissioners to be appointed as hereinafter provided, with special reference to the mineral or nonmineral character of such lands, and to reject, cancel, and disallow any and all claims or filings heretofore made, or which may hereafter be made, by or on behalf of the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company on any lands in said States which upon examination shall be classified as provided in this act as mineral lands.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of making the examination herein provided for, there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, three commissioners for each of the following land districts, to wit: The Bozeman, Helena, and Missoula land districts, in the State of Montana, and the Cœur d'Alene land district, in the State of Idaho, at least one of whom for each district shall be a practical miner and a resident of such district; and said persons so appointed for each district shall constitute a board of commissioners to perform within such district the duties herein prescribed. They shall each receive for their compensation such sum as may be allowed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding their actual expenses, and in addition thereto such further sum, not exceeding $10, for each day they may be actually engaged in the performance of their duties; and their accounts shall be audited by the Secretary of the Interior and paid monthly. Before entering upon their duties each of said commissioners shall take an oath to faithfully perform the duties of his office. Said commissioners shall make examination of the lands herein mentioned within their respective districts, and may also take the testimony of witnesses as to the mineral or nonmineral character of any of said lands, and receive any other evidence relating to said matter, and shall have power to summon witnesses to appear before them, and to administer oaths; and they shall, immediately upon their appointment, proceed to examine and classify the lands herein mentioned within their respective districts, as provided in this act. The oath of office of said commissioners shall be filed by them in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. All testimony taken by said commissioners shall be reduced to writing, subscribed by the witnesses, and filed with the report of the commissioners hereinafter required. The action or decision of a majority of said commissioners in each district shall control in all matters herein provided for. Not more than two of the commissioners in any one district shall be appointed from the same political party.

SEC. 3. That all lands shall be classified and taken to be mineral lands under this act which prior to the passage of this act have been located or patented as mineral lands, or which have, or probably will have, a market value by reason of the minerals which they contain, or which show such indications of valuable mineral deposits as would induce a miner to spend his time or money upon them with the reasonable expectation of finding mineral in paying quantities, or which, from their geological formation or their situation or propinquity or relation to known mineral lands, are or probably will be valuable for the mineral therein; and all of these matters shall be considered by the commissioners in determining the mineral or nonmineral character of such lands and in classifying the same. The classification herein provided for shall be by sections where the lands have been surveyed, unless there are such differences in the situation or character of different parts of the same section as in the opinion of the commissioners to require its classification by quarter sections; and in no case shall any subdivision of less than a quarter section be made for classification upon surveyed lands. If the lands examined are not surveyed, classification shall be made by tracts of such extent, and designated by such natural or artificial boundaries to identify them, as the commissioners may determine. Where mining locations have been heretofore made or patents issued for mining ground in any section of land, this shall be taken as prima facie evidence that the whole of such section is mineral land: Provided, That the word "mineral," where it occurs in this act, shall not be held to include iron or coal: And provided further, That the examination and classification of lands hereby authorized shall be made without reference or regard to any previous examination or report or classification thereof.

SEC. 4. That such of the lands herein mentioned as have been surveyed prior to the passage of this act shall be first examined and classified as herein provided, and afterwards, and as speedily as practicable, the lands herein mentioned which have not been surveyed, until all the lands herein mentioned shall have been examined and classified, as herein provided.

SEC. 5. That said commissioners shall, on or before the 5th day of each month, file in the office of the register and receiver of the land office of the land district in which the land examined and classified is situated a full report, in duplicate, in such form as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, showing all lands examined by them during the preceding month, and specifying clearly, by legal subdivisions, where the land is surveyed, or otherwise by natural objects or permanent monuments, to identify the same, the lands classified by them as mineral lands and those classified as nonmineral; and with said report shall be filed all testimony taken and written communications received by said commissioners relating to the lands embraced in the report. The register and receiver shall file one duplicate of said report in their office, together with all accompanying testimony and papers, and the other duplicate shall be by them forwarded direct to the Secretary of the Interior, and said commissioners shall furnish to the Secretary of the Interior at any time such further or additional report or information as he may require concerning any matters relating to their duties or the performance of the same. Upon receipt of such report the register of the land office shall, at the expense of the United States, cause to be published in a newspaper of general circulation in the county in which the land is located, at least once a week for four consecutive weeks, notice of the classification of lands as shown by said report, and any person, corporation, or company feeling aggrieved by such classification may, at any time within sixty days after the first publication of said notice, file with the register and receiver of the land office a verified protest against the acceptance of said classification, which protest shall set forth in concise language the grounds of objection to the classification as to the particular land in said protest described, whereupon a hearing shall be ordered by, and conducted before, the said register and receiver, under rules and regulations as near as practicable in conformity with the rules and practice of such land office in contests involving the mineral or nonmineral character of land in other cases; and an appeal from the decision of the register and receiver shall be allowed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That at such hearing the United States district attorney or his assistants for the judicial district in which the land is situated shall appear and defend the interests of the United States, and for such service he shall receive compensation not exceeding $25 per day, to be paid out of the fund provided for the examination and classification of said mineral lands.

SEC. 6. That as to the lands against the classification whereof no protest shall have been filed as hereinbefore provided, the classification, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be considered final, except in case of fraud, and all plats and records of the local and general land offices shall be made to conform to such classification, and as to the lands against the classification whereof protests may be filed, the final ruling made after the day set for hearing shall determine the proper classification, and all records of the local and general land offices shall be made to conform to the classification as determined by such final ruling, and all costs of such hearing shall be paid by the unsuccessful party, under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to establish such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect the true intent and provisions of this act as speedily as practicable.

SEC. 7. That no patent or other evidence of title shall be issued or delivered to said Northern Pacific Railroad Company for any land in said States until the examination and classification provided for in this act shall have been made, and such patent or other evidence of title shall only issue then to such land, if any, in said States as said company may be by law and compliance therewith and by the said classification entitled to, and any patent, certificate, or record of selection, or other evidence of title or right to possession of any land in said States, issued, entered, or delivered, to said Northern Pacific Railroad Company in violation of the provisions of this act shall be void: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be taken or construed as recognizing or confirming any grant of land or the right to any land in the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, or as waiving or in anywise affecting any right on the part of the United States against the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company to claim a forfeiture of any land grant heretofore made to said company.

SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended to carry into effect the provisions of this act, the same to be paid out upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. McRAE. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. McRAE. Does the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] desire any general debate?

Mr. HARTMAN. I am not particular. I presume we are ready to vote on the bill.

Mr. McRAE. Then, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman who introduced the bill does not desire to address the House, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be now closed and that the bill be taken up for consideration by paragraphs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BYNUM). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] that the general debate be now closed and this bill be considered by paragraphs under the five-minute rule?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this pertains only to mineral lands along the Northern Pacific road?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir; to mineral lands in Idaho and Montana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the vote upon the amendments recommended by the committee may be taken in gross.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has some amendments to propose to the committee amendments, and I think it will be better to take the bill up by paragraphs and dispose of the amendments as they are reached.

The Clerk (reading the bill by paragraphs) read as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of making the examination herein provided for there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, three commissioners for each of the following land districts, to wit: The Bozeman, Helena, and Missoula land districts, in the State of Montana, and the Cœur d'Alene land district, in the State of Idaho, at least one of whom for each district shall be a practical miner and a resident of such district; and said persons so appointed for each district shall constitute a board of commissioners to perform within such district the duties herein prescribed. They shall each receive for their compensation such sums as may be allowed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding their actual expenses, and in addition thereto such further sum, not exceeding $10, for each day they may be actually engaged in the performance of their duties; and their accounts shall be audited by the Secretary of the Interior and paid monthly. Before entering upon their duties each of said commissioners shall take an oath to faithfully perform the duties of his office. Said commissioners shall make examination of the lands herein mentioned within their respective districts, and may also take the testimony of witnesses as to the mineral or nonmineral character of any of said lands, and receive any other evidence relating to said matter, and shall have power to summon witnesses to appear before them, and to administer oaths; and they shall, immediately upon their appointment, proceed to examine and classify the lands herein mentioned within their respective districts, as provided in this act. The oath of office of said commissioners shall be filed by them in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. All testimony taken by said commissioners shall be reduced to writing, subscribed by the witnesses, and filed with the report of the commissioners hereinafter required. The action or decision of a majority of said commissioners in each district shall control in all matters herein provided for. Not more than two of the commissioners in any one district shall be appointed from the same political party.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all after the word "compensation" in line 12 on page 2, down to and including the word "exceeding" in lines 14 and 15, and to insert after the word "duties" in line 16, the words "which shall include their transportation and subsistence expenses." In support of that amendment I will say that it has been the custom, I am informed, in the partition of Indian lands, to allow $6 per day and actual traveling expenses, and instead of $6 a day and actual traveling expenes, I propose to allow $10 a day, which shall include both traveling and subsistence expenses. I will say to the gentleman further that I am informed that this is the usual allowance in such cases.

Mr. HARTMAN. While the expenses of transportation and of living are as high as they are in these two States, it seems to me that the allowance proposed by the gentleman from Texas would not be sufficient. I suggest that the gentleman modify the amendment so as to provide for the payment of $8 a day and expenses.

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir; I would not be willing to agree to that. An aggregate compensation of $10 a day is enough.

Mr. HARTMAN. Another thing. The gentleman must remember that anyone who engages in this occupation of examining and classifying these lands must be an expert—must understand the subject-matter that he is investigating. It is not every person who is capable of doing this work.

Mr. SAYERS. There will be no difficulty in finding men to do the work at $10 a day—good men, too.

Mr. HARTMAN. Well, in order not to delay the bill, I will assent to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas. My understanding is that it provides for $10 a day compensation to these parties, and that they are to pay their own expenses.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I have not had time to read the bill, but only to glance at the first section. I wish to ascertain whether I am correct in understanding that the bill with the amendment just adopted provides for a commission composed of three persons, at a compensation of $10 a day, to examine the mineral lands of Montana and Idaho within the Northern Pacific Railroad grant?

Mr. McRAE. That is correct, I think.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. All the lands—the mineral lands?

Mr. McRAE. Well, it is to classify the lands so as to segregate the mineral lands from the other lands covered by the grant.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The alternate sections that the railway company claims to own, as well as the others—the whole of them?

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman will remember that the mineral lands were excepted from the Northern Pacific grant. There has been a contention between the railroad company and the miners as to when these lands passed to the railroad company. The contention which underlies this bill—which is, that the exception continues to the time of patent—has recently been supported by the Supreme Court of the United States; and now all parties, I believe, desire that this classification be made. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], who introduced this bill, is more familiar with the facts than I am.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It provides for an examination of all the lands within that grant?

Mr. HARTMAN. No, sir.

Mr CANNON of Illinois. All the mineral lands?

Mr. HARTMAN. It provides for an examination of lands within the grant supposed to contain minerals. In Montana, Idaho, and other mineral States the minerals are found in what are known as "mineral zones." There are certain portions of Montana and Idaho that we know contain no more mineral wealth than can be found in the city of Washington. So that it will not be necessary to make an examination of every alternate section through the whole length of the Northern Pacific Railroad grant in those two States in order to discover the lands coming within the mineral zone. Hence this work is not so much of an undertaking as the gentleman seems to think.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Under the opinion of the Supreme Court, with which I am not familiar, the contention or theory on which this bill is framed has been, I understand, confirmed. Now it is proposed to examine the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad in Montana and Idaho—the mineral lands. Am I correct?

Mr. MCRAE. It is proposed to make an examination for the purpose of determining what lands are mineral, in order to segregate the mineral lands from the agricultural. It will not be necessary, as my friend from Montana has suggested, to examine every section——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understand that.

Mr. MCRAE. But simply to make such an examination as will enable the commissioners to segregate the mineral lands and to settle the dispute between the railroad and miners.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That is, to take for the Government the mineral lands coming within the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad, which that company has been claiming heretofore?

Mr. MCRAE. That is it exactly.

Mr. HARTMAN. And which the Supreme Court of the United States has held the railroad company is not entitled to.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, this is a pretty large job, is it not?

Mr. HARTMAN. It is no child's play, of course.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. There are, I presume, fifteen or twenty million acres of land within that grant, or more?

Mr. HARTMAN. There are 17,800,000 acres in Montana within the Northern Pacific grant, and 1,900,000 acres in Idaho.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understand that, but——

Mr. HARTMAN. And no considerable portion of the land will have to be examined.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understand. But you provide for the appointment of a commission, and the payment of $10 a day for their services. You provide for a report, with a chance to the railway or to the people to make a contest, and finally for the confirmation of the report.

Now, I wish to ask my friend from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE], considering the fact that the North Pacific Railway was not completed west of the Missouri River in time, and within two weeks past, with a great flourish of trumpets, we passed through the House a bill to forfeit every acre of the land they hold, if he thinks it economy to pass this bill now, and thereby, impliedly at least, acknowledge the title of the North Pacific Railway to the lands?

Mr. MCRAE. If the gentleman will read the bill, he will find that we expressly reserve in the bill all the right of forfeiture we have, and distinctly provide that there shall be no such implication to follow the passage of the bill. Whatever rights may exist between the parties now will be preserved by this provision. We know that as long as the railroad company holds the legal title, the miner's right is imperiled, and whatever may be the final fate of the forfeiture bill to which the gentleman refers, we intend by this bill to protect the miners if possible. That bill would protect them if it becomes a law, but if it fails, then this bill gives them another chance.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I wanted to see how much my friend thought we ought to spend, considering the fact that in justice and equity according to the House, the North Pacific road has no title to all that land west of the Missouri River; and how far he would go in making this kind of an expenditure when his own bill declares that they have no title at all. I know it will make some places on the commission; but I think that we had better pick out the people who are going to constitute the commission, and give them just that much money outright, and avoid this circumlocution.

Mr. MCRAE. I am glad to see my friend has so much faith in the passage of the forfeiture bill. I hope his friends and party associates in the other end of the Capitol will take the same view of it, and then we will not need to organize this expensive commission.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. My friend from Nebraska on my left [Mr. HAINER] expresses the opinion that the other bill was absolutely a "bluff."

Mr. MCRAE. The gentleman is very much mistaken, and will find that it is not a bluff. We intend to protect the miners and the settlers and all parties concerned by forfeiture and classification.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn, and the Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That all lands shall be classified and taken to be mineral lands under this act which prior to the passage of this act have been located or patented as mineral lands, or which have, or probably will have, a market value by reason of the minerals which they contain, or which show such indications of valuable mineral deposits as would induce a miner to spend his time or money upon them with the reasonable expectation of finding mineral in paying quantities; or which from their geological formation, or their situation or propinquity or relation to known mineral lands, are or probably will be valuable for the mineral therein; and all of these matters shall be considered by the commissioners in determining the mineral or nonmineral character of such lands and in classifying the same. The classification herein provided for shall be by sections where the lands have been surveyed, unless there are such differences in the situation or character of different parts of the same section as in the opinion of the commissioners to require its classification by quarter sections; and in no case shall any subdivision of less than a quarter section be made for classification upon surveyed lands. If the lands examined are not surveyed, classification shall be made by tracts of such extent, and designated by such natural or artificial boundaries to identify them, as the commissioners may determine. Where mining locations have been heretofore made or patents issued for mining ground in any section of land, this shall be taken as prima facie evidence that the whole of such section is mineral land: Provided, That the word "mineral," where it occurs in this act, shall not be held to include iron or coal: And provided further, That the examination and classification of lands hereby authorized shall be made without reference or regard to any previous examination or report or classification thereof.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Strike out in lines 18 to 20 the words "quarter sections; and in no case shall any subdivision of less than a quarter section be made for classification upon surveyed lands," and insert "legal subdivisions."

Strike out in line 27 the words "whole of such section," and insert "forty-acre subdivision within which it is located."

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 5 was read, as follows:

SEC. 5. That said commissioners shall, on or before the 5th day of each month, file in the office of the register and receiver of the land office of the land district in which the land examined and classified is situated a full report, in duplicate, in such form as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, showing all lands examined by them during the preceding month, and specifying clearly, by legal subdivisions, where the land is surveyed, or otherwise by natural objects or permanent monuments, to identify the same, the lands classified by them as mineral lands and those classified as nonmineral; and with said report shall be filed all testimony taken and written communications received by said commissioners relating to the lands embraced in the report. The register and receiver shall file one duplicate of said report in their office, together with all accompanying testimony and papers, and the other duplicate shall be by them forwarded direct to the Secretary of the Interior, and said commissioners shall furnish to the Secretary of the Interior at any time such further or additional report or information as he may require concerning any matters relating to their duties or the performance of the same. Upon receipt of such report the register of the land office shall, at the expense of the United States, cause to be published in a newspaper of general circulation in the county in which the land is located, at least once a week for four consecutive weeks, notice of the classification of lands as shown by said report, and any person, corporation, or company feeling aggrieved by such classification may, at any time within sixty days after the first publication of said notice, file with the register and receiver of the land office a verified protest against the acceptance of said classification, which protest shall set forth in concise language the grounds of objection to the classification as to the particular land in said protest described, whereupon a hearing shall be ordered by, and conducted before, the said register and receiver, under rules and regulations as near as practicable in conformity with the rules and practice of such land office in contests involving the mineral or nonmineral character of land in other cases; and an appeal from the decision of the register and receiver shall be allowed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That at such hearings the United States district attorney, or his assistants, for the judicial district in which the land is situated shall appear and defend the interests of the United States, and for such service he shall receive compensation not exceeding $25 per day, to be paid out of the fund provided for the examination and classification of said mineral lands.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

In line 46 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifteen."

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman who introduced the bill to the amendment offered by the committee, which is to reduce the compensation of the district attorney or assistant appointed to defend the interests of the United States, from $25 per day to $15 per day.

Mr. HARTMAN. I understand that.

Mr. SAYERS. I understand the proposition is to pay one of the assistant district attorneys $15 a day for services before the commission. Now, they are all paid a regular salary for representing the Government of the United States, and you are adding probably a salary amounting to over $4,500 a year to what they already receive.

Mr. HARTMAN. I think that the gentleman will find that assistant district attorneys, and the district attorney, receive, in addition to the nominal salary, fees and compensation for rendering services to the Government of the United States in cases where they are selected to represent the Government. Now, it has been deemed desirable and advisable by those of us who prepared and reported this bill, that the interests of the United States should be represented on this examination of these lands. It was certainly deemed discreet that it should be done.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman inform the House for what purpose is an assistant district attorney paid an annual salary if it not be to represent the Government?

Mr. HARTMAN. How much salary does a United States district attorney receive?

Mr. SAYERS. Well, it varies in different districts.

Mr. HARTMAN. How much in my district?

Mr. SAYERS. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. HARTMAN. If I am not mistaken, he receives the munificent salary of $500 a year. No; $250, I am told by my friend, Mr. SWEET. It is impossible to get a man who will give his time for $250 a year, if he is competent to practice law at all, to render such service as is required, who would be worth anything.

Mr. SAYERS. Does not the gentleman know that when a man accepts the office of regular assistant United States district attorney he thereby engages himself to represent the Government in all cases into which he may be called?

Mr. HARTMAN. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. SAYERS. What is the object in appointing such a man and paying him $500 a year?

Mr. HARTMAN. The amount is $250. I was mistaken. I want to say, furthermore, to the gentleman that the compensation of $250 a year which he receives is not compensation for the trial of cases, or for the attending of hearings such as are here contemplated.

Mr. SAYERS. For what purpose is it paid him?

Mr. HARTMAN. He is paid for attending to such United States business as may be turned over to him by the district attorney, but he has exactly the same fees in addition to that as the district attorney himself has. The gentleman knows that the district attorney is not confined to a salary.

Mr. SAYERS. That is so; but I know this one thing, Mr. Speaker, that every sundry civil and every general deficiency appropriation bill contain appropriations for the payment of regular and special assistant United States district attorneys, and these appropriations carry large sums of money. Of course I do not assume to speak for the amount that is paid to the regular assistant United States district attorney in the gentleman's district; but I do contend that this House should not pay an assistant district attorney who represents the Government before register and receiver more than $4,500 per year, as is provided for in this bill.

Mr. HARTMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SWEET] will have something to say upon that.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, I have served as United States district attorney. I have had an assistant appointed by the United States Attorney-General. The United States district attorney receives a salary of $250 per year, which it is expected will pay his office rent. His services are paid for in fees, and when they exceed the sum of $6,000 per annum he is obliged to account for the money, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. SAYERS. That is my understanding.

Mr. SWEET. Now, when the assistant is appointed, he is appointed for some special purpose, and is paid a fixed sum, the ame as any other attorney.

Mr. SAYERS. I will state to my friend that he is mistaken. Regular assistant attorneys receive regular salaries, some of them from $1,200 to $2,500 per annum.

Mr. SWEET. That may be so.

Mr. SAYERS. Then there are special assistant district attorneys who correspond to the character of the assistants that the gentleman has just named.

Mr. SWEET. That may be so in districts sufficiently large, or where the volume of business is large enough to require salaried assistants; but in districts like Montana, Idaho, and Washington—perhaps Washington now has a regular assistant—in the States which I have mentioned you must make application for your assistant, and state what his employment is for, and the Attorney-General, if he allows the assistant at all, fixes the salary he shall receive, or in other words the fee.

Mr. SAYERS. In other words, only special assistants are employed in Idaho and Montana.

Mr. SWEET. That is the fact.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well. Now, I will ask the gentleman if he thinks that assistant district attorneys should be paid at the rate of nearly $5,000 per annum for representing the Government in the matters contained in the bill under consideration?

Mr. HARTMAN. I will say to the gentleman that I consider $15 a day a very moderate compensation for the services of an attorney in attending upon these hearings and looking after the interests of the Government. So far as that is concerned, the only objection to it is that it is too small.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman would pay a man $10,000 a year then?

Mr. HARTMAN. No, sir; I do not say that.

Mr. SAYERS. If you pay $25 a day, it amounts to over $7,000 a year.

Mr. HARTMAN. This compensation is only for the days when he is engaged in that work.

Mr. SAYERS. The bill does not say so.

Mr. HARTMAN. If it does not so state, I am perfectly willing that it shall; but I think the gentleman will find upon investigation that it does so state. The provision is on page 7, line 46.

Mr. SAYERS (reading):

Provided, That at such hearings the United States district attorney or his assistants for the judicial district in which the land is situated shall appear and defend the interests of the United States, and for such service he shall receive compensation not exceeding $15 per day.

Now, the gentleman knows that these hearings can be procrastinated from day to day.

Mr. HARTMAN. Let me say to the gentleman that unless the United States district attorney is guilty of fraud it is impossible for him to collect more than $15 per day for each day actually engaged representing the interests of the United States.

Now if there is anything vague in the language, I am perfectly willing, I will state to the gentleman, to accept an amendment to this effect—that he shall receive not exceeding $15 for each day engaged in representing the United States in such hearings. But if the gentleman will notice, these hearings are to be had before the register and receiver. There are hearings to be had after notice given, as provided by the bill: and there will not probably be more than twenty or thirty in an entire year. That is a rough guess; and that is all we can make; but if the gentleman thinks that this service would continue every day he is mistaken.

Mr. SAYERS. What is the area of these mineral lands?

Mr. HARTMAN. The area of the mineral lands it is impossible to estimate.

Mr. SAYERS. About what?

Mr. HARTMAN. I presume it would be safe to say that in the State of Montana alone it will amount to 3,000,000 acres within this grant, but let me go further before the gentleman interrupts me. He will remember this, that each particular section of this land is not reported separately and by itself. The section is not advertised by the register and receiver in the particular section or quarter section. Each particular report is made by the commissioners, and then the register and receiver publishes the notice of hearings. Any person has the right then to come in who is aggrieved by that report and file his protest, and then the hearing occurs.

Mr. SAYERS. So the gentleman estimates that out of this large area of land there will not be over twenty or thirty hearings in a year.

Mr. HARTMAN. I do not say that positively. That is all a guess. As we all know, this is an absolutely new domain. We have never had anything of the sort before.

Mr. SAYERS. And that is the reason I wish to know the probable cost of this business.

Mr. HARTMAN. Let us suppose that it takes 300 days in the year. I want to know of the gentleman if it is not money well spent to have the United States represented by competent men; and you can not get such for less than $10 or $15 a day.

Mr. SAYERS. The proposition is not one as to whether good men should get $5 or $10 a day; but the proposition is, at least my proposition is, to so guard this bill by the insertion of a provision that no advantage can be taken and that these hearings can not be unduly procrastinated at the expense of the Government.

Mr. HARTMAN. Has the gentleman any objection to the language?

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman was on the Committee on Appropriations he would know how these expenditures are swelled every year, and he would appreciate the necessity for protecting the Government.

Mr. HARTMAN. I have no fault to find with the gentleman from Texas at all. The only point is this: Is it good judgment on the part of the United States to fail to have competent representatives in these hearings?

Mr. SAYERS. No, sir. If the United States district attorney shall appear before these commissioners he gets $15 a day; and the bill provides that he shall appear

Mr. HARTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. That is in addition to his other fees.

Mr. HARTMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion there? There are three land districts in the State of Montana which are included under this bill. What would the United States district attorney do if he had a hearing in each one of these districts on the same day? Should he be compelled to employ assistants to go to the other hearings, and go to one himself, and pay them for their work?

Mr. SAYERS. What does the gentleman propose? Does he propose to hire a lawyer to attend to each one of these matters?

Mr. HARTMAN. Not at all.

Mr. SAYERS. Then, what is the proposition?

Mr. HARTMAN. We propose that in every contest the result of the action of these commissioners, after notice has been given by the register and receiver, that the United States shall be represented by a competent attorney. We say that it is impossible to get such competent attorney unless you pay him something for his services.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well. Then, why does not the gentleman suggest the amount to be paid to the attorney in each contest? Then we could tell what it would amount to.

Mr. HARTMAN. How is that?

Mr. SAYERS. Why does not the gentleman suggest the amount to be paid in each contest?

Mr. HARTMAN. I will tell you why. Some of these contests may last a week or two weeks. I have known such controversies to last four, five, or six weeks. Now, do you think you could get a competent attorney to take those cases for $15 a contest? It would be impossible.

Mr. SAYERS. Under this bill an expense account against the United States of not less than a hundred or a hundred and fifty thousand dollars could be incurred.

Mr. HARTMAN. Can the gentleman show how?

Mr. SAYERS. I will show you. I take the gentleman's own statement. He says he knows of contests which will last one or two weeks.

Mr. HARTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, the gentleman can not tell how many contests there will be. There may be two or three hundred. Now suppose the average contest lasts seven days——

Mr. HARTMAN. The average will not be so high as that. The average will probably be about two days.

Mr. SWEET. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. SWEET. Why could not the matter be arranged in this way. In the first place, there are no assistant district attorneys in Montana or Idaho. Now, why not, when a contest arises, keep it under the control of the United States authorities by directing the United States attorney for that district to make a showing to the Attorney-General that he is unable to attend to it, and to request the appointment of an assistant at whatever salary or compensation the Attorney-General may fix?

Mr. SAYERS. I would not object to that.

Mr. HARTMAN. I would be perfectly willing to accept that suggestion. I certainly have no desire to saddle the Treasury with any unnecessary expense in this matter. But let me show the gentleman from Texas wherein he is wrong. If each contest lasted seven days at $15 a day that would be only a hundred and five dollars for a contest, and two hundred contests in a year would amount to only about $21,000—a much less sum than that suggested by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. But that would be before one commissioner.

Mr. HARTMAN. Oh, no. I mean in the entire State.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to insert in line 46, page 7, after the words "per day," the words "for each day that such attorney or assistant shall actually appear before the register or receiver."

Mr. HARTMAN. I accept that.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the committee amendment strikes out "twenty-five" and inserts "fifteen."

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the amendment of the gentleman from Texas to be offered as an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. McRAE. So that if the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is adopted, the compensation will be $15?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

The amendment of Mr. SAYERS was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was then adopted.

The Clerk will read the amendment to section 8.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 8, line 3, strike out "eighty" and insert "forty;" so that the provision will read: "The sum of $40,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. SAYERS. I move to amend that amendment by striking out "forty" and inserting "twenty," and I call the attention of the gentleman from Montana to the fact that it will be impossible to spend more than $20,000 for this purpose during the coming fiscal year, and that the necessary appropriation for the next year can be made at the short session of Congress.

Mr. HARTMAN. The gentleman's amendments to the other parts of the bill have reduced the expenditure under it so much that I am willing to accept that amendment making the sum $20,000.

The amendment of Mr. SAYERS was agreed to, and the amendment of the committee as amended was then adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SAYERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILROADS FOR RESERVOIR PURPOSES.

Mr. McRAE. I call up the bill (H. R. 7451) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BYNUM). The bill will be read.

Mr. LACEY. As the Committee on Public Lands has reported an amendment, to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and insert a substitute, I ask consent that the original bill be not read.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The substitute reported by the committee will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall in his discretion find it necessary for the use of any railway company, whose line is located and operated through the public domain, that said company should acquire title to some part of such public land for gravel pits or the construction of reservoirs and the right of way for pipe lines to connect the same with such railways, said Secretary is hereby authorized and empowered to sell to said company a sufficient area of such land, not exceeding 160 acres in any one tract, and to issue patents therefor, and to issue permits for such line: Provided, That such company shall pay therefor not less than the appraised value of such lands, the appraisers thereof, three in number, to be appointed by the Secretary: Provided, further, That the lands or right of way shall not be within the limits of any park, forest, military, or Indian reservation, or the District of Columbia."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this is, in a different form, the same bill to which the attention of the House was called awhile ago. This bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, who agreed to report the substitute just read. In the meantime there came from the Senate a bill, which has been read this afternoon, known as the "Teller bill." It was proposed to add this provision to that bill as an amendment, instead of passing it as a separate measure. But there is some question as to the effect of the first part of the Teller bill upon the irrigation laws of the United States; and it is desired that further time be given to the consideration of that measure. In the meanwhile there is no objection, I believe, to this bill in its amended form, and therefore it has been called up for passage. The other measure can be considered separately hereafter.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The amendment of the committee to make the title read: "An act to authorize the entry of land for gravel pits and reservoir purposes, and authorizing the grant of right of way for pipe lines," was read and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, our committee has no other bills which we are disposed to call up now. There are several important measures, which, if brought up, would provoke discussion, and it does not seem advisable to present them at the present time. I move that the House adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SETTLE, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. STOCKDALE, indefinitely.

The motion of Mr. MCRAE was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. WASHBURN presented sundry memorials of citizens of St. Paul, Scandia, Minneapolis, Chicago, Stillwater, and Rush City, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLATT. I present a memorial of a similar nature remonstrating against the violation of the American principle of separation of church and state which is involved in making appropriations for or contracts with agents of sectarian institutions for Indian education, the memorial being from the city of Meriden, Conn., which is my home. The names signed to the memorial are among the best citizens of the place.

I inquired the other day whether it would be proper, the Indian appropriation bill having gone into the hands of a conference committee, to refer these memorials to the conference committee. I am satisfied it would be a departure from the practice of the Senate heretofore, whether it might be strictly admissible or not. But I take this occasion to call the attention of the conferees to the fact that a large number of these memorials are being presented daily in the Senate and I hope that they will consider the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been reported and acted upon by the Senate, the memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented sundry memorials of citizens of Chicago, Evanston, Hamilton, East Peoria, Roodhouse, Fithian, Stonington, and Nunda, all in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the violation of the American principle of separation of church and state which is involved in making appropriations for or contracts with the agents of sectarian institutions for Indian education, etc.; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURPIE. At the request of W. R. Stokes, of Lebanon, Ind., I present drafts of amendments to the Federal Constitution. As the amendments are very brief I ask that they may be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of 135 citizens of Chicago, Ill., praying that Congress terminate the pending tariff legislation, as a failure to do so quickly will work incalculable loss and irreparable injury to the financial and industrial interests of the country; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the petition of John F. Hall and 67 other citizens of Salem, N. H., praying for a system of Government schools for advancing education among the Indians on the basis of the American free school system; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2217) to provide for the closing of a part of an alley in square 185 in the city of Washington, D. C., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 14th of July last, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and that it be printed; which was agreed to.

REPORT ON SALMON INDUSTRIES.

Mr. GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] on the 13th instant, in relation to the salmon industries of the Columbia River, to report it favorably with amendments. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to print 1,000 extra copies of Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 200, Fifty-third Congress, second session, being the report of the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries on the salmon industries of the Columbia River, the same to be for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing were, in line 10, after the word "salmon," to strike out "industries" and insert "fisheries," and in line 11, after the words "Columbia River" to insert "Basin."

Mr. DOLPH. I inquire of the Senator from Maryland, who reports the resolution, how many copies of this document are proposed to be printed?

Mr. GORMAN. The colleague of the Senator [Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon] offered the resolution, and it proposes to print 1,000 additional copies.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I introduced the resolution to print 1,000 extra copies for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maryland that that is a very important and interesting document to the people of my State and the States bordering on the Columbia River, and the number which would be available for the use of Senators, if only the usual number is ordered printed, would be entirely inadequate. Would the Senator object to having a limited number printed for the use of the Senate?

Mr. GORMAN. Not at all. Within the rule the Senator may offer an amendment for that purpose.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the amendments of the committee be acted upon, and then I shall offer an amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator that when the proper time comes, after the amendments of the committee have been acted on, I shall move to insert "one thousand additional copies for the use of the Senate."

Mr. DOLPH. That will be satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendments reported by the Committee on Printing, which have been read.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I move to strike out "one thousand" and insert "two thousand," and after the words "Columbia River Basin," to insert "one thousand for the use of the Senate and one thousand for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "one" and insert "two," so as to read: "Two thousand copies;" and after the word "basin," to strike out "the same to be for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries," and insert "one thousand for the use of the Senate and one thousand for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COKE introduced a bill (S. 2254) to establish a light-house and a range light at the entrance to Galveston Harbor, in the county of Galveston, in the State of Texas; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. DOLPH. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which, with the letter from the collector of customs at Portland, Oregon, I ask may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas the board of children's guardians, at a meeting held July 16, 1894, passed resolutions asking for an investigation of certain charges reflecting on its management and usefulness: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, directed to investigate the management of the office of the Superintendent of Charities, of the Board of Children's Guardians, and of the Washington Humane Society, and to report to the Senate whether, in the judgment of the committee, there is conflict or duplication of duties among the established agencies for the protection of children in the District of Columbia and any other material facts in relation to the management of the organizations named. Such investigation may be conducted by a subcommittee or otherwise, in the discretion of the chairman of the said committee.

SEWERAGE OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PROCTOR. I submit a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 500 copies of Executive Document No. 445, first session of Fifty-first Congress, it being a report of a board of sanitary engineers upon the sewerage of the District of Columbia, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. What will be the cost involved?

Mr. PROCTOR. There was but a single copy of that report remaining in the document room, and I borrowed that copy. It is quite important, in view of some pending legislation, that there should be a reprint of it.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator that he have the resolution referred to the Committee on Printing, and the committee will report it promptly.

Mr. PROCTOR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

INDUSTRIAL TROUBLES IN CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Mr. PLATT. That is a long resolution. Let it lie over and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the resolution will be printed, and go over until to-morrow.

ROBERT TRAVILA.

Mr. DOLPH. If the morning business is disposed of, I ask——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is concluded, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 894) for the relief of Robert Travila for loss of carbine in late war.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUE AND SALE OF BONDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first business on the Calendar under Rule VIII will be stated.

The resolution submitted by Mr. PEFFER January 18, 1894, declaring that the Secretary of the Treasury has no lawful authority for issuing and selling bonds as proposed in the notice published January 17, 1894, was announced as first in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over, being objected to. The next business on the Calendar will be stated.

WILLIAM R. WHEATON AND CHARLES H. CHAMBERLAIN.

The bill (S. 1057) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PASCO. There is a minority report in that case, and it will take some time to dispose of the bill. I suggest that it go over under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the suggestion of the Senator from Florida the bill goes over to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. DOLPH subsequently said: The bill (S. 1057) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California, went over under Rule IX. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] has no objection to its being passed over without prejudice. The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] was not present when the bill was reached on the Calendar, and I ask that it go over under Rule VIII.

Mr. PASCO. I have no objection to that course being pursued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be restored to the Calendar under Rule VIII. The Chair hears none.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT CAPE ARAGO, OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1191) making an appropriation for the completion of the light-house at Cape Arago, in the State of Oregon, which was passed over the other day.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That $15,500 of the remaining balance of the sum appropriated by the act approved March 3, 1891, for the establishment of a light and fog signal at the mouth of the Coquille River, Oregon, be used in the erection of light keepers' dwellings and a fog signal at the Cape Arago light station.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALEB HUSE.

Mr. PUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5735) to remove the political disabilities of Caleb Huse.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

HANNAH HOWARD.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to take up the message of the House of Representatives in relation to the tariff bill.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a few moments to call up a bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. VEST. I will yield if the bill leads to no debate.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 1833 to grant a pension to Hannah Howard.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1833) granting a pension to Hannah Howard. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Hannah Howard, and to pay her pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINOR CHILDREN OF ALFRED PHIPPS.

Mr. PALMER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5459) to pension the minor children of Alfred Phipps.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place the names of John T. Phipps, Bertha L. Phipps, Mary M. Phipps, Alfred J. Phipps, and Florence H. Phipps, orphan minor children of Alfred Phipps, Company A, Twelfth Maryland Infantry, upon the pension roll of the United States, as if no widow had survived, until they shall respectively arrive at the age of 16 years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY A. L. EASTMAN.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1656 to increase the pension of Mary A. L. Eastman.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1656) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. L. Eastman. It proposes to place on the pension rolls the name of Mary A. L. Eastman, widow of Robert L. Eastman, late captain and brevet major, United States Infantry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. COKE. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 7335, granting to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the message of the House of Representatives on the disagreement of the two Houses in respect to the tariff bill. It can then be laid aside temporarily until the bill which the Senator from Texas wishes to have taken up is disposed of.

Mr. COKE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the message of the House of Representatives in respect to the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COKE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7335) to grant to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLATT. For the purpose of saving my rights, I wish to enter a motion now to reconsider the vote by which the bill has just been passed. I do not know that I shall press it, but I wish to have time to examine the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The motion to reconsider will be entered.

GRANT OF LANDS TO OKLAHOMA CITY.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] be excused as one of the managers on the part of the Senate at the conference between the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 6080), granting a certain military reservation to Oklahoma City, Okla., to aid the public free schools thereof, and for other purposes, and that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] be appointed in his place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] will be appointed as a conferee in the place of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] on the bill indicated by the Senator from Kansas. The Chair hears no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7079), making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. VEST. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order will be proceeded with.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following message from the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 19, 1894.

Resolved, That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 4864, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. MCMILLIN, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. REED, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. PAYNE be managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, when the debate closed yesterday evening there was a colloquy pending between the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and myself as to the effect of paragraph 236 of the McKinley act of 1890 on the refining interests of plantations. That paragraph reads as follows:

236. That any person who shall knowingly refine or aid in the refining of sugar imported into the United States or upon which the bounty herein provided for has already been paid or applied for, at the place described in the license issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and any person not entitled to the bounty herein provided for, who shall apply for or receive the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall pay a fine not exceeding $5,000, or be imprisoned for a period not exceeding five years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

I maintained in that discussion with the Senator from Rhode Island that this paragraph of the McKinley law practically prohibited refining sugar by the producer of the domestic sugar. The interpretation put upon this clause of the statute by the then Secretary of the Treasury, when applied to by Col. Cunningham, of Texas, for his interpretation, was that in order to entitle him to refine sugar at the place where the license to produce sugar was obtained he would be compelled to erect a separate establishment disconnected with his sugar house in order that he might do so.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to interrupt him just at that point? The Senator from Louisiana can not mean to say that the Department ruled that it would be necessary for Mr. Cunningham or anybody else to erect a separate establishment to refine the sugar produced at the place licensed by the Department?

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not mean to say that, and I was about to proceed to state that the Secretary of the Treasury informed him (and his construction I think was evidently right) that he could only refine his own sugar; that he could not refine imported sugars; that he could not refine any sugars made in the country upon which a bounty was paid. That, therefore, prevented him from refining domestic sugars, because upon all of them the bounty was due.

Mr. ALDRICH. It did not prevent him from refining them, but it prevented him from refining them in the place licensed for the production of sugar.

Mr. CAFFERY. Exactly. The Senator from Rhode Island is very astute and keen on these points. I do not intend to make any acute or superficial construction of that clause. I want to go right straight to the merits of it. The refining of imported or of domestic sugar is prohibited at the place where the license is procured to produce sugar. That is a practical prohibition of a sugar planter from getting such a process or such an apparatus as will enable him to refine extensively his sugar or the sugar imported. It is necessary if anyone wants to refine sugars to erect an establishment that will run continuously. One can not afford, simply to refine the sugars produced by the ordinary planter, to purchase and erect the apparatus required to refine such sugars as will go into competition successfully with the trust sugars.

It is very true that the centrifugals turn out sugars, as I have previously stated, which, to some extent, go into consumption; but in order to refine the cane sugars it is necessary to put up a bone-black establishment, which I am told will cost about $300,000. Of that I know nothing. I derive my opinion from a gentleman who contemplated putting up one in my parish, and that was the statement he made to me in regard to the cost of the plant.

Therefore, this clause of the McKinley law does practically prohibit any extensive refining of sugar by the producer. In order to do that he would either have to buy the domestic product, which under this clause he can not do, or he would have to import foreign sugars; and in order to refine either he would have to go to the additional cost of erecting a separate establishment. Why? The Senator from Rhode Island says that the provision of the law is made to prevent frauds by mixing sugars. What is to prevent the planter who would be entitled to refine upon his own premises in a separate establishment imported sugars or domestic sugars from mixing such sugars with his own?

Now, sugar is made openly. The very large establishments, the evaporators, the tanks to hold juice, the various machinery connected with a sugar house occupy very considerable spaces. There is a very large number of attendants. Under the operation of the McKinley act it is required by the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that a sugar weigher shall be constantly present during the time the sugar is made upon which a bounty is due. How, therefore, could any mixing be accomplished? Could it not as well be accomplished in a separate sugar house 25 feet off as in the main sugar house? No; the contention is entirely correct which was made by the Senator from Delaware and myself that this clause of the McKinley act is a practical prohibition of the producer from going extensively or going at all into regular refining.

It is said that when Napoleon made his celebrated expedition into Egypt he carried along with him a body of French savants, and in making an analysis of the contents of the beet that they saw growing on the borders of the Nile, they discovered that there was a considerable amount of saccharine in it. After the establishment of the empire of Napoleon, the beet industry of France was stimulated by a very large bounty and by a protective law that almost shut out all foreign sugars. At the start there was only 6 per cent of saccharine in the beet. By the application of science, particularly the science of chemistry, the saccharine has been increased from 6 per cent to about 17 per cent, which is the ordinary saccharine of the German beet. That culture has gone on and developed to such an extent that the beet product of the world to-day is in round numbers about 700,000 tons in excess of the whole cane product of the world.

In the great Northwest the soil and climate have been found to be exactly suited to the culture and production of the beet. Successful factories are located in Nebraska and California, and I believe in Utah. Those factories have a very promising prosperity before them. In the present depressed condition of agriculture throughout the United States if this industry were permitted to flourish, to grow, to increase, there is no doubt that it would afford an immense relief not only to that country but to the whole United States from the existing low prices of cereals. It would afford an outlet for the farmers who can now hardly raise at the present prices wheat and other cereals.

Under the terms of the McKinley act the licenses have to be procured on the 1st of July. At that period the sugar-making season commences. I am told that it has already commenced in Nebraska, and perhaps in California. If a bounty is not a contract I do not believe that anybody will hold but that the completion of the crop during the pendency of the bounty law would entitle the producer to the benefit of the bounty. I do not believe anybody could hold to the contrary of that position.

Now, the people who have commenced the manufacture of beet sugar in the Northwest are entitled in my opinion to the bounty stipulated under the terms of the McKinley act. The contract if not complete is almost so. It might be quibbled away in a court of law, but I do not believe that the Congress of the United States, dealing with a matter verging so near perfection as this, will hesitate to say that the producer is entitled to the benefit of the law conferring the bounty.

Therefore I say, Mr. President, that in any schedule on sugar the bounty for this year at least ought to be guaranteed to the producer.

Laying aside all considerations of the delusion of these producers, if you so please to term it, in regard to the binding force of the bounty under the McKinley act as forming a contract, they at least thought that the Government of the United States was pledged for the continuance of that bounty for fifteen years as stipulated in the law.

It was an honest delusion, if delusion at all; and when it is now proposed to change the law, it is at least equitable (and I appeal to the sense of justice of the Senate and the other House) that the bounty stipulated in the law of 1890 shall this year be accorded to the producer; and if the ad valorem or a specific tax is finally agreed to be levied upon sugar, and that tax does not yield the producer of sugar the equivalent of the bounty, the tax ought to be supplemented with such an amount as would come up fully to the bounty. I believe that that is a just and equitable dealing. I believe that it will meet the common sense of justice of the whole people; and I believe that the Senate and House will grant this request of the sugar producers.

The capacity of the Northwest to produce beets is almost illimitable. The amount of money that the United States has to pay annually for imported sugar is considerably over a hundred million dollars. Under the operation of the McKinley law with raw sugar upon the free list, and the refiner protected by a tax upon the refined sugar of sixty one-hundredths of a cent, there is a very considerable amount of the gross sum that goes into the till of the protected refining interest.

Mr. Havemeyer stated in his testimony before the Senate investigating committee that $35,000,000 have been realized by the trust in the last three years as a profit upon the business in which they were engaged. That may not be an unreasonable sum if the outlay is very large, the expenses of refining very great, but from all accounts the capital is not such nor the expenses so great as to warrant any such profit as $35,000,000 in three years.

Under the terms of the Senate Finance Committee's bill the protection of the sugar-refining interest is cut down about one-half. The estimate that has been made (and it is very difficult to make any estimate upon this subject) is that the sugar trust would derive a protection of between twenty-five and thirty one hundredths of a cent a pound upon sugar.

Now, Mr. President, why is it not possible to levy a duty either upon the basis of a specific rate or upon the basis of a flat ad valorem which will give sufficient revenue to the Government and sufficient protection both to the producer and to the refiner? I believe that a fair, square, honest ad valorem rate, or a specific rate, which is not difficult to fix because the polariscope defines clearly and exactly the saccharine contents of all sugars, would meet with the universal approval both of Congress and the country.

Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in regard to my own State and in regard to the attitude which myself and my colleague have been compelled to take in reference to the sugar schedule. Under a tariff law continuously in existence for so many years our people have rested under a profound conviction that their interests would never be disturbed. They have been induced to go into the cane culture. They have relied upon the action of the Government that has almost obtained the force of law by uninterrupted custom, by continuous application. Relying upon this state of affairs, relying upon the doctrines of the Democratic party, they have rested with some degree of confidence under the belief that their industry, if molested, would not be destroyed.

It is a common belief that the representatives of every interest that flourishes under protection when that interest is about to be assailed, when the amount of protective duty is about to be lowered, will make statements utterly at variance with the truth; that their cry that their industry will be lost or imperiled is engendered by their fears; that they have conjured up in their imagination false danger, and that in reality their interest would not suffer but perhaps would be improved by an application of the pruning-knife, cutting down, curtailing, paring, diminishing. That possibly may be true in regard to a great many protected interests. It may be true in regard to manufacturers who can manufacture upon an equality with the whole world.

It may be true of any interest where the conditions of production in the United States are quite as favorable as they are elsewhere. But that can not possibly be true of an industry which has taken its whole growth, which has had its origin, because of the stimulus of tariff protection. That can not be possibly true where an industry flourishes under conditions of inequality with like industries in other portions of the globe, where the conditions are all unfavorable to the industry protected, and where when the artificial prop of legislation is taken away the industry must necessarily stop or be very considerably endangered.

I will not repeat what I have heretofore advanced in regard to the condition of the planters of Louisiana. I will not state again the condition surrounding them. The statements that I have made in that regard will appear in the former part of my remarks, and I do not now choose to either elaborate or repeat them; but I say that with the better labor that we have (for the colored labor of my State has improved year by year, and in my opinion it is now infinitely superior to the cooly labor of Cuba and of South America); with the application of the improved methods discovered by the Germans, with more attention to the soil than has heretofore been given, that, if tariff legislation does not strike them down now, they will in a space of a decade be able to hold their own; that they will be able to a great extent to hold their own with the cane-growing countries of the world.

This is a mere belief of mine which may not be justified by the events; but from my limited observation of the increase of the output of sugar in my State, the increase of the product of the soil, the increase of the amount of saccharine extracted from the cane, I honestly believe, with a superior labor and a more intelligent agriculture there, that we shall soon be able to compete with the other cane-growing countries of the world.

Mr. President, I have had for years and years a fervent aspiration and hope that the Democratic party would finally succeed in formulating a tariff bill which would give relief to this country. I have for years and years believed that the paternal theory of government, so ably and eloquently advocated by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], is false in theory and injurious in application. I have for years and years believed that the security of the liberties of this country depended upon the largest amount of individual liberty to the citizen consistent with the due enforcement of the laws on the part of the constituted authorities.

I have believed that we have prospered in spite of protection. When the Republican party took the nation into its confidence, carried it into the high mount of protection, and laid before it the beauties and the glories of the world of protection that lay underneath, the people of the United States said to them in the election of 1892: "Get thee behind me, Satan." The people of the United States have denounced as loudly as a people can denounce the false theories and the injurious workings of the protective system; and my deliberate opinion is that the men of thought and of brain and heart on the other side of this Chamber—and there are many of them there—would, if they had the opportunity, themselves introduce a bill and carry it through, very largely reducing the duties now imposed under the McKinley law.

Louisiana does not desire to stand in the way of tariff reform. Louisiana is a Democratic State, and joins her sister Democratic States in the effort to bring about tariff reform. I do not believe there is a patriot in Louisiana who does not cherish the most earnest desire to see a consummation and realization of the ardent wishes of the loyal Democrats of this Union that tariff reform be inaugurated; but I ask our Democratic brethren to pause lest in advancing along with their solid column toward the goal of tariff reform they march over the prostrate body of my State.

Unfortunately for us, Mr. President, not through our wrongs, not by our choice, we have been compelled to be from the very nature of our pursuit, an obstacle to the peculiar theories held by a large number of our Democratic colleagues as to the best methods of bringing about tariff reform. In my opinion it would have been a wise thing and a safer thing, though I am not here to criticise or carp, to have followed the old beaten track, along which and over which the Democratic columns have advanced to victory in the past. I thought the time was inopportune and the moment not auspicious to inaugurate new theories of taxation, but, as I said, I have no criticism to make; I will not foul my own nest; I will not rise in my seat in the Senate and say that this, that, or the other is distasteful to me.

I yield deference to the opinions of those in the majority on this question. Though my individual views on particular subjects may be somewhat impinged upon or opposed by the theories which underlie the formation of the Wilson bill, I shall vote for that bill in silence, unless it destroys my State. We do not occupy the position, nor can we be forced to occupy the position of malcontents and rebels against the party. We are in the very sanctuary of the Democratic temple; we have hold of the very altar of refuge in that sanctuary. When a blow is threatened against us, there we look for security, and ask, not for the protection which is clamored for as protection, but we ask for an application of the ancient, the honored, the correct, the just, the true doctrine of tariff for revenue.

That is all for which we have asked; that is all for which we ask now. We are entitled to that much, not outside, but inside of Democratic rule, Democratic practice, and Democratic principle; and, in my opinion, it would have been a safe thing to have adhered to that old rule and not have deflected our footsteps into strange and untrodden bypaths. They may lead us no man knows where. When a voyage of discovery is undertaken in the matter of tariff legislation, if a departure from old plans, old precedents, and old theories be made, no man can predict the result.

Mr. STEWART. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Not at all.

Mr. STEWART. In a tariff for revenue, does the Senator object to incidental protection to sugar?

Mr. CAFFERY. In a tariff for revenue I want to impose it without any sort of regard to protection.

Mr. STEWART. Would it be, in the opinion of the Senator, any objection to a tariff for revenue that it gave incidental protection to sugar?

Mr. CAFFERY. None in the world.

Mr. President, right here the question of the Senator from Nevada raises this thought in my mind: A tariff for revenue, which has been laid for years and years, has brought about a certain industry or certain industries. When it is thought best to change the principle of the party adopting tariff for revenue as to articles grown up under that tariff, is it not both a principle of politics and a principle of common justice and common humanity not to destroy the industry fostered under that tariff policy? In my mind it is not a question of theory, it is not a question as to whether tariff for revenue or tariff for protection is better; but it is a simple question of common justice on the part of any party as to whether or not a certain industry or certain industries, grown up under a tariff for revenue, shall be wantonly and ruthlessly destroyed by a change of theory or a change in the application of a theory.

Mr. President, my State stands, if not first, amongst the first in the Democratic column. Sad will be the day to me when she either lingers in the rear or when the roll is called and Louisiana does not respond to the Democratic call. That State is entitled to recognition at the hands of the national Democratic party. That State's Democracy, her loyalty, her truth, her fidelity——

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the Senator from Louisiana himself were framing a tariff law for this country, and he found he could raise revenue enough to meet all the expenditures of the Government by placing duties exclusively on those articles of foreign production the like of which we do not at all produce in this country, I ask him if he would put all his customs duties on such articles?

Mr. CAFFERY. If I would put all the customs duties there?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes. If he could raise revenue enough by placing the duties solely on foreign products the like of which we do not produce at all in this country, would the Senator favor the raising of the revenue from those articles and put no duty whatever on other foreign products coming in competition with the products of this country?

Mr. CAFFERY. The question is too general to admit of a specific answer, but I say generally I would.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I took it for granted the Senator would. His argument seems to lead in that direction.

Mr. CAFFERY. That is just precisely my argument. I would put a tariff upon articles not raised in the United States, or raised to a limited extent, and I would put an excise duty upon tobacco and whisky; I would put a duty upon articles of luxury, whether they were raised in the United States or not, and that would about fill the bill of my ideas of tariff imposition.

Mr. President, I want to make a supplication for my State. It does not humiliate me and it ought not to humiliate any Democrat to come before his fellow Democrats and beseech them to withhold the hand that would destroy; and, in this particular instance, they can do so on exact lines with Democratic policy.

It is estimated that the bill as passed the House of Representatives would create a deficit of $25,000,000. The estimated amount in the first instance to be derived from incomes has been shown to be too high. It is now thought that the revenue from incomes will only be about $12,000,000, and it is very seriously questioned whether or not the amount derived from incomes will not almost entirely be absorbed in the cost of collection.

We have a Treasury, the gold in which has been departing nearly every day; we have a vast amount of silver currency and paper currency to maintain at par with gold. Would a surplus in the Treasury be an unalloyed evil? Would it not be better, Mr. President, to have a surplus in that Treasury of at least $50,000,000 than to have the fate of all this money, now held upon a parity with gold, trembling in the balance, to have the United States on the brink of going to protest in every panic, forcing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds, and resorting to all kinds of expedients to keep up the amount of gold necessary to be held in the Treasury as a reserve?

It will not at all be out of line with either Democratic policy or theory or with the exigencies of the present conditions to levy such a tariff upon sugar, an article which produces revenue, that all these difficulties may be bridged over, that the currency be secure, and the danger of bankruptcy or protest on the part of the Government of the United States avoided.

Mr. President, in concluding I will say to my Democratic brethren, that, while the peculiar position we have been compelled to take upon this floor may somewhat have alienated us politically from them, I beg them to think and to know that the fires of Democracy burn in our bosom as brightly as in theirs; I beg them to consider that if they push this matter of their tariff reform too far, if they push it beyond that point where my State will suffer deadly injury, if we resent, if we are compelled to go into opposition on that point, it will be more in sorrow than in anger; it will be because the dread alternative is presented to us of seeing our State hurt, crippled, or destroyed, or breaking loose somewhat the close ties that ought to bind us in fellowship with our fellow Democrats.

I hope, Mr. President, that day will not come; I hope some way will be seen out of the difficulties that now environ us so that we shall all come together; I hope that wise and temperate and moderate counsels will prevail; and I hope that men wedded to this theory, that theory, or the other theory, will forego the application of their theory. I hope the gentlemen who find that it is a little unpopular to put a tax upon sugar in certain districts will see that sometimes a thing may be unpopular, and yet entirely just and right. I hope they will not put the alleged unpopularity of the sugar tax as against the interests of a great Commonwealth, the interests of the Treasury of the United States, and the interests of the Democratic party itself.

The tariff on sugar is a cardinal doctrine of Democracy; this is the cardinal point of tariff for revenue. How can it be departed from upon an alleged unpopularity of it? Is that a just ground? Can Senators say, in their conscience, in their judgment, that because the Republican party took the tariff off of raw sugar and made free raw sugar popular, therefore the Democratic party must take the tariff off of all sugar? I beg my Republican friends to know that the tariff under the McKinley act has not conduced to the lowering of the price of sugar so much as the enormous output of sugar.

Mr. Havemeyer swears in his testimony before the investigating committee that he keeps the price of sugar up to the importing point. The German is pushing him, or competing with him, and he is keeping the price up to the importing point; and a close analysis of the sugar situation will display the fact that the McKinley tariff of sixty hundredths of a cent upon refined sugars is not such a great boon as our Democratic brethren have been deluded into believing. The boon of cheap sugar has been given by protected Germany, by this artificial stimulus to the producers of beets all over Europe.

The battle-royal is between the cane product and the beet product. The German ships free on board at Hamburg to-day granulated sugars at 3.16 cents per pound. That sugar is transported from there to the United States at about 12½ cents a hundred pounds, and when you add the tariff of sixty one-hundredths of a cent to the freight and the cost price of sugar at Hamburg, and take the price of granulated sugar in New York, you will find it is the low price of sugar in Germany and the enormous output of beet sugar there which has produced the low price of sugar in this country. This sixty one-hundredths of a cent is absolutely prohibitive of the introduction of that sort of sugar which is consumed; that is, refined sugar. The people do not eat raw sugars; they eat the refined sugars; and with the refinement of ingenuity the sugar trust has got its tariff just as it wants it.

Mr. President, this bill has in it an exceedingly objectionable feature to me. Why it was ever incorporated in the bill I can not conceive. It is the provision which exempts the sugar of the Hawaiian Islands from the operation of any tariff which may be imposed upon sugar. Why this discrimination? What Democrats want it? Is Hawaii the salt of the earth? Shall we be favoring Liliuokalani or Dole by this? What special claims has Hawaii that we must make this exemption from the operation of the tariff laws in its favor?

What justifies it? How are they entitled to it? In a tariff bill is inserted a provision—it did not occur in the bill as it came from the House, but in the bill as reported from the Senate committee—that the sugar schedule should not in any way affect the treaty with Hawaii. If that provision goes through, the President of the United States would hardly feel warranted in signifying to the authorities in Hawaii that the treaty between the two powers should cease after proper notification. That treaty expires in November next. One of the clauses of the treaty requires a notice of twelve months before its abrogation, and under the impression derived by the President of the United States, and legitimately derived from that provision in this tariff bill, he will come to the conclusion that we want absolute reciprocity with Hawaii, and he will hardly venture to give notice of the cessation of the treaty. How will that affect the sugar-growing interests of the Northwest?

Sir, by that treaty only raw sugars are admitted free. No refined sugars can be brought in free under the treaty with Hawaii. So with raw sugars free, and with a tariff on the refined sugar, and with a tariff placed both on refined and raw sugar coming from other countries, the sugar kings of the Pacific coast have a bonanza. For years and years sugar upon the Pacific coast has been higher than in New York, with raw sugar free, even before the adoption of the McKinley act. The raws are a good deal cheaper and the refined a good deal higher there than in New York. I have not the data, but I know that from having seen the figures.

What reason is there for it? I heard the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] say in the debate on the bill, when it was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, that the Hawaiian Islands or the sugar trust derived a benefit of about $6,000,000 from the operations of that treaty. Six million dollars given to the trust and Claus Spreckles, because the evidence before the Senate investigating committee shows that Claus Spreckles and the American Sugar Refining Company, called a trust, are equal partners in regard to the sugar refining interests on the Pacific Slope.

Why, therefore, inject such a peculiar provision into the tariff law? Why make the island of Cuba, the continent of Europe, every country in the world producing sugar and importing it into the United States pay a tariff and admit sugar from Hawaii free? What is the object of it? Is it some hallucination that has seized the mind in regard to the Nicaragua Canal, this vast scheme concocted by certain speculators? Is it thought that the Hawaiian Islands are so necessary to the canal that a peculiar and strange exemption must be made in regard to sugar from that country? I hope not; but I can see no other reason. I am at a loss to discover why it was that this provision was inserted.

Mr. President, I wish to give to the bill my honest and earnest support. I do not want to stand out alone or with a handful of men in opposition to the behest of this great party. It may be that an untoward fate will overtake the bill. It may be that some evil will befall the earnest efforts of the Democratic party in consummating the wishes of nine-tenths of the citizens in regard to the bill, for they all want to have a bill passed. Everybody wants to have a bill passed.

Everybody wants to have this state of uncertainty done away with and the business interests allowed to go on. I, as a loyal Democrat, want to support loyally and honestly the bill. What I have said in the Senate in regard to the step that I shall be forced to take under certain circumstances has almost torn my heart out by the roots. I have been absolutely agonized at the contemplation of the dreadful responsibility which I would incur by that step. But I have taken it deliberately; I have taken it with a firm conviction that my duty lay toward my State, and, Mr. President, if the dread alternative is presented to me, I shall have to drink the bitter cup.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, my purpose in rising is to make a brief personal explanation, and not to indulge at this time in any of the features of this debate.

I have before me the Richmond Dispatch of Tuesday, July 24, yesterday, and also the Richmond Times, both daily papers of our capital city. In both of these papers I observe accounts of the speech made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] on Monday last, and in both of them, for it is an Associated Press dispatch which they publish, I observe the following language:

> The Representatives of New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Virginia at the outset announced that the House bill was so radical, so destructive of the interests of the people, that they would not support it.

I felt assured when I read that language that it was a clerical error, or at least one into which the reporter had casually and for some reason unknown to me fallen. This morning, in company with my colleague [Mr. HUNTON], I called the attention of the Senator from Maryland to these expressions, feeling confident that it was an error. I was so assured by him, and that he had not uttered any such language. It occurred to me that possibly the name of West Virginia had been used in some connection, but I felt assured also that the position of her Senators was the same as that of my own State, for I had never heard any intimation of such an opinion from them. The Senator from Maryland assured me that neither as to the Senators from Virginia nor the Senators from West Virginia had he uttered any such language, and, further, that he had not understood such to be their position.

For myself I have simply to say, that from the outset of this great struggle in the Senate I have felt profoundly convinced that under present conditions no greater calamity could befall this country in an economic sense than the failure of the party in power to enact into a law a reasonable tariff bill. In all of my meetings and discussions with and suggestions to members of the committee and to my colleagues, I have stated, as I do now, that I name no conditions to command my vote; that whether or not the bill suited me or conformed to any special view that I might entertain as to one item or another, it would command my support.

My judgment was that there was no subject upon which a body of this character could be called upon to legislate that so much demanded the spirit of conciliation and compromise as a tariff bill affecting so radically different sections of the country enacted into a law by gentlemen who represent such varied and diverse interests. It is still my opinion, Mr. President, that any man, whomsoever he be and of what department, who lays down an arbitrary statement that this or that item must not be compromised, does not occupy as broad a position as patriotism demands.

I have no speech to make, Mr. President, but I wish simply to say that I regard the delay in the passage of the tariff bill as a great misfortune to our country and to all of its inhabitants, and that in every respect my course in the Senate regarding it has been actuated by, and has conformed to, the desire to effect results. The smallest may criticise, but only the wise can achieve results, and in my judgment wisdom as to a subject so vast must ever be found in the spirit of compromise and conciliation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas suggests the want of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. TURPIE. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] is detained from the Senate by indisposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. President, I had the pleasure of listening to the speech of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], delivered day before yesterday, and I heard no word uttered by that Senator on that occasion which bore the semblance of the construction placed upon his speech by the press dispatch read by my colleague [Mr. DANIEL] a few minutes ago. The position attributed to my colleague and myself does us both the grossest injustice, because if there are two Senators upon the floor who have made more sacrifices than my colleague and I to obtain the early passage of the tariff bill I have yet to find out those two Senators.

While on my feet I shall take occasion to ventilate in a very brief way the views I entertain upon tariff reform. Tariff reform is no new subject to me. I learned it in my early youth. I learned it from that great tariff reformer, Robert J. Walker, and from that day to this I have not only been an earnest and honest tariff reformer, but I have been a tariff reformer upon the lines laid down by Robert J. Walker. In order to define my position upon the tariff, I beg leave to read from Mr. Walker's celebrated report in 1845 a few of the leading principles of tariff reform to which I subscribe:

> First. That no more money should be collected than is necessary for the wants of the Government, economically administered.
> Second. That no duty be imposed on any article above the lowest rate which will yield the largest amount of revenue.
> Third. That below such rate discrimination may be made, descending in the scale of duties; or, for imperative reasons, the article may be placed in the list of those free from all duty.
> Fourth. That the maximum revenue duty should be imposed on luxuries.

Fifth. That all minimums and all specific duties should be abolished and ad valorem duties substituted in their place, care being taken to guard against fraudulent invoices and undervaluation and to assess the duty upon the actual market value.

Sixth. That the duty should be so imposed as to operate as equally as possible throughout the Union, discriminating neither for nor against any class or section.

There are the principles which actuate me in all my efforts at tariff reform. But I am aware that it is impossible to get a tariff bill which will suit any one given individual. While I subscribe to the doctrines which I have just read from the report of Mr. Walker, I knew when we in this body entered upon the preparation of a tariff bill that it was to be a bill of compromise. While I was most anxious to get rid of the enormities of the McKinley act, I knew that I could only get rid of it by compromising with my fellow Democrats and getting the best bill that could pass this body to take the place of the McKinley law.

I beg to say here that many of the votes which I cast while the bill was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole did not reflect my views. They did not reflect the views of the eminent tariff reformer from whom I have quoted, but I knew that in order to get the tariff bill in such shape that it would command a majority of the votes in this Chamber I had to give to others in the same way that I expected them to give to me.

Mr. President, as we all know, we came to some agreement, how or where it is not worth while for me to state, and that in order to get a bill which would command 43 votes in this Chamber we, of the Democratic side of the Chamber, had to yield to the Committee on Finance our peculiar views as to many of the items in the tariff bill. In obedience to that arrangement I have in good faith followed the committee in all of its amendments, because I knew that if I departed from the agreement we would not be able to get a bill which would command 43 votes in the Senate. This much for the explanation of some of the votes which I have given. The bill as passed by the Senate does not come up to my ideas of tariff reform, but there is no item in the bill which the Senate has passed that is not a very great improvement on the McKinley tariff law.

The press dispatch from which my colleague has read represents him and myself as being opposed to the tariff bill unless we get certain concessions in it. My colleague has denounced that as incorrect, and I do also. I presume the reference there is to a duty on coal and iron ore. While I am an earnest advocate of a duty on coal and iron ore, and I think my colleague occupies the same position, there is no item in the bill which I would not sacrifice in order to achieve the success of a tariff-reform bill in the Congress of the United States. I am for a duty on coal and iron ore because it is within the doctrine of tariff reform to which I subscribe as laid down by Mr. Robert J. Walker.

I believe, sir, that everything we produce, where we import a similar article, is entitled to have a revenue duty, with the incidental protection that such a duty affords. We know that the coal and iron ore produced in this country—and a good deal of both of those articles is produced in my own State—are subject to competition from abroad. That being the case, I believe it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to put a revenue duty upon coal and iron ore and afford those two articles the incidental protection of that revenue tariff. If we have not reached the revenue standard as to those two items reduce the duty further, but if we have gotten to the revenue standard, as I believe we have, then let us have a revenue duty of 40 cents a ton on coal and iron ore, and let these two articles, which are produced in your State, Mr. President [Mr. FAULKNER in the chair], and mine, have the benefit of the incidental protection of that revenue tariff.

Under the McKinley act coal has a protection of 75 cents a ton and iron ore has a protection of 75 cents a ton. The pending bill reduces the duty in both cases to 40 cents a ton, and it is reduced to 40 cents a ton because it was believed that that is the revenue standard. Being at the revenue standard, according to the doctrine which I have always held, those two articles, produced in many of the States of the Union, are entitled to the incidental protection of such a revenue tariff. I am therefore earnestly in favor of the proposed tariff tax of 40 cents a ton on coal and the same rate on iron ore, but the day never has come when I was not willing, and the day never will come when I shall not be willing to make further sacrifices on coal and iron ore in order to obtain the passage of a revenue tariff bill through both Houses of Congress.

Mr. President, the only other item which causes much trouble in the tariff fight is that of sugar. I apply to sugar as well as to coal and iron ore the doctrine which I have just stated. We produce immense quantities of sugar and we import immense quantities of sugar, and in that condition of affairs, according to my doctrine, the sugar we produce is entitled to have the incidental protection of a revenue tariff. I believe that 40 per cent ad valorem is about the revenue tariff tax on sugar, and therefore I am willing, nay, desirous, to see the sugar product of this country protected by such a revenue tax.

In addition to the 40 per cent on sugar there is a tax of one-eighth of 1 cent on refined sugar. That we are told is a protection to the sugar trust. I for one am in no sense of the word in favor of protecting trusts; on the contrary, I am violently opposed to it, but when we come to consider that the McKinley act gives one-half of a cent and that the bill as passed by the Senate proposes to give one-eighth of a cent, surely nobody can hesitate a moment, in order to get the bill through both Houses of Congress, to allow one-eighth of 1 cent.

These are the main troubles which surround our situation at the present time. They are grave difficulties, but I believe there is patriotism enough in the Democrats of both Houses to give and take and come to an agreement which will command the united support of the Democratic party in both Houses and give us a bill which, if not satisfactory to you and to me, is so much better than the McKinley act that we will take it, and take it gladly.

Mr. President, this is no time for Democrats to stand on their opinions and reject the opinions of brother Democrats. We are here for the purpose of passing a tariff bill. Such a bill was never passed in the history of the Government except as a compromise measure, and I trust there is no Democrat in the sound of my voice, no Democrat in either House, who is not willing to make compromises in order to get a tariff bill which everybody must know is a great improvement on the McKinley act, and which will relieve the people of the United States from a great burden of taxation.

More than that, it is not only important to us, important to the country, important to the Democratic party to pass a tariff bill during this session of Congress, but it is important to the country at large that the bill should be passed with all the promptness and speed we can command. The country is awaiting anxiously the passage of the bill, and the mails are loaded down with entreaties to members of both Houses of Congress to pass the tariff bill so that trade may revive, industries spring up in all the quarters where it has been so depressed, and prosperity come back to the land which needs it so much as does ours.

Mr. President, these sentiments have animated me in the tariff fight from the beginning, and they shall guide my course until the tariff bill is passed or until both Houses acknowledge that no tariff bill can be passed at this session of Congress. I beg leave to state here that during the entire tariff struggle my colleague and I have been perfectly harmonious in the course which we have pursued, and that in all of our course hereafter I shall be guided, as I know he will be guided, by the determination to pass the best bill which the two Houses can agree upon, and I trust that may be done speedily.

Mr. QUAY. I offer certain amendments to the pending motions, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amend the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] by making it apply to the entire amendment numbered 156.

Amend the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] by adding at the conclusion:

"Except as to amendment No. 156, from which the Senate hereby recedes."

Amend the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] by adding:

"Except as to so much of its amendment, numbered 156, page 41, as is contained in the following words, beginning with the word 'and' in line 10, and ending with the words 'ad valorem' in line 14:

"'And upon all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color and upon all sugars which have been discolored there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of one-eighth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the said duty of 40 per cent ad valorem; '"

Which the managers upon the part of the Senate are instructed to yield.

Mr. QUAY. I intend to ask for a vote of the Senate on these motions when they can come up in order. They may lie on the table for the present.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the amendments will be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania will lie on the table, and be printed.

CUSTOMS INSPECTORS AT SAN FRANCISCO AND VICTORIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, suggesting an appropriation for two inspectors at San Francisco, Cal., and Victoria, British Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

P. B. KENNEDY.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2634) for the relief of P. B. Kennedy, surviving partner of Dalton & Kennedy.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to P. B. Kennedy, surviving partner of Dalton & Kennedy, of North Carolina, or to his legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $356.20, the amount collected from Dalton & Kennedy in the years 1881 and 1884.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. Let us have the report first.

Mr. BURROWS. What is this for?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. It is to refund to these parties taxes illegally assessed upon them on account of tobacco.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report will be read.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Very well. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report.

The report [by Mr. BUNN] was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2634) for the relief of P. B. Kennedy, surviving partner of Dalton & Kennedy, submit the following report:

Dalton & Kennedy, of Eagle Mills, Iredell County, State of North Carolina, were manufacturers of plug tobacco during the year 1878, and thereafter.

On the 9th day of September, 1878, twenty-four boxes of manufactured tobacco were found in an outhouse near to but not on their factory premises. Said tobacco had the brand of Dalton & Kennedy, but was not stamped. Dalton & Kennedy claimed said tobacco, but neither of them had any knowledge or information whatever as to how it was taken from their factory or who put it in said outhouse. Said tobacco was put back in their factory, and said factory was seized by the internal-revenue officers.

In a few days after said seizure the said Dalton & Kennedy bonded their said factory, and were required by said officers to include said twenty-four boxes of tobacco in the appraisement, the said Dalton & Kennedy protesting against it; and against their protest they were required to enter said tobacco a second time on their books for internal-revenue tax, they having theretofore paid said tax in the regular course of their business. On the 10th day of July, 1880, the collector of internal revenue notified said Dalton & Kennedy that they were assessed for taxes on said tobacco for the year 1878, amounting to $323.76; and on the 21st day of January, 1881, the said Dalton & Kennedy were compelled to pay, and did pay, under protest, the said assessment on said tobacco, $323.76, with penalty, 5 per cent, $16.18, and interest, five months, $16.18; total, $356.12.

Said Dalton & Kennedy ought not to have been required to pay said sum, they having previously paid the taxes on the tobacco. It has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, October term, 1883 (United States vs. Ulrici, 111 U. S., 38), that the payment of the tax relieves the taxpayer from any liability to pay it a second time.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the the words "and eighteen hundred and eighty-four," after the word "one," in line 9, and as so amended the bill do pass.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I will state that this bill was passed unanimously by the House two years ago.

Mr. BURROWS. Is there anything from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in regard to this matter? Has it been referred to the Treasury Department?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I can not say as to that, but it was investigated by the Committee on Claims of the House and unanimously reported.

Mr. BURROWS. It seems to me that ought to have been referred to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to see whether the facts set forth in the report, that the tax has been paid twice, are substantiated by the records of the Department. Of course, if it has been paid twice it ought to be refunded.

Mr. LOUD. I will state to the gentleman that the committee carefully investigated this case. We took all due precautions and are satisfied from the evidence before us that it had been paid once, and ought not to have been paid again.

Mr. BURROWS. Has the claim been referred to the Treasury Department?

Mr. LOUD. I am not able to state exactly. There are letters from the Treasury Department relating to the case, although I can not recall in detail all of the facts. But it was recently examined and recommended by the committee, and in my judgment there is no doubt of the propriety of the claim.

Mr. BURROWS. Is there anything from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in regard to the matter?

Mr. LOUD. I have just said I can not recall in detail the the facts.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw the bill for the present and get a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not insist upon that.

Mr. SAYERS. There will be no objection whatever on my part if such a letter is procured.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. The bill has already passed the House.

Mr. SAYERS. That may be so.

Mr. BURROWS. Nothing will be lost by letting it remain and retain its place for the present. If it is clear that it has been improperly paid, of course I shall not object to refunding the payment.

Mr. SAYERS. Nor I.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I am satisfied that it has been paid twice.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will state that he knows that of his own knowledge——

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I can not say that; but I know the parties well, and from all of the facts connected with it I have no reason whatever to doubt that it has been paid twice.

Mr. LOUD. As I stated, I can not refer in detail to the facts on which the committee based its report; but I am satisfied that all reasonable evidence was before the committee to convince any reasonable man that it had been paid twice. It was one of the clearest cases we had before the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Claims were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa," approved March 2, 1889, as amended by an act entitled "An act to amend 'An act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa, approved March 2, 1889,'" which amendment was approved April 30, 1890, and as amended by an act entitled "An act to amend 'An act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa, etc.,'" which amendment was approved February 7, 1893, and as amended by an act entitled "An act to amend 'An act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa, approved March 2, 1889, as amended by acts of April 30, 1890, and February 7, 1893,'" which amendment was approved March 24, 1894, be so amended that instead and in place of the words "for such reasonable rates of toll as the city of Sioux City, Iowa, may from time to time prescribe, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War," the said section shall read "for such reasonable rates of toll as the owner or owners of said bridge may from time to time prescribe, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa for the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ELECTRIC RAILWAY, ARLINGTON RESERVATION.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7515) granting the right of way through the Arlington reservation for electric railway purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon Electric Railway Company, a body incorporated under the laws of the State of Virginia, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and thereafter maintain and operate its electric railroad across the lower and eastern portion of the grounds of the United States Government known as the Arlington reservation, in the State of Virginia, opposite the city of Washington, said line to be east of and contiguous to the river road, except so much of the northwestern corner of said reservation not to exceed 10 rods south of the intersection of said river road with the north line of said reservation: Provided, That this diversion shall not exceed 20 rods from said river road easterly; and for such purpose said company is hereby granted a right of way 50 feet in width, not including slopes, through the grounds aforesaid. And the said company shall repair at its own expense, in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of War, any damage, injury, or displacement that may be done to roads, footways, bridges, or fences upon or through the Government lands referred to in this act by the construction or operation of the said electric railway company, and shall erect such sheds or other shelter for the comfort and convenience of passengers and at such points as the Secretary of War shall direct: Provided, That said line or route shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and when such right of way shall cease to be used for the purpose aforesaid, the same shall revert to the United States Government. And said road shall be commenced within one year from the date of the passage of this act and finished within three years: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall allow the use of steam power: And provided further, That the said railway company shall not cross, enter, touch upon, or be granted any right whatsoever upon that part of the Government land set aside and known as the Arlington National Cemetery. And that material for the building, grading, or ballasting of said electric railway shall not be obtained from, nor shall the trees be disturbed on, the Arlington reservation: And provided further, That the tracks of said company may be freely used for the passage of cars by the Falls Church and Potomac Railway Company from such point as said company may connect with the Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon Electric Railway Company. And the cars of said Falls Church and Potomac Railway Company shall be propelled over the said line, from its junction therewith, by the motive power of said Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon Electric Railway Company; and the said Falls Church and Potomac Railway Company shall have the right to collect fares on its cars as fully as if operating that portion of the line in its own right. But said Falls Church and Potomac Railway Company shall make just compensation for the use of said track and motive power; and in case any dispute should arise concerning such compensation or manner of use, any party in interest may apply to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which court is hereby empowered to fix the amount to be paid for such use and motive power and the mode in which such use may be enjoyed: Provided, That the limitations, requirements, and restrictions imposed by this act upon the Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon Electric Railway Company shall apply to the Falls Church and Potomac Railway Company. SEC. 2. That the right to repeal, alter, or amend this act is reserved to Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent to consider this bill?

Mr. COOMBS. I should like to ask from what committee it comes?

Mr. MEREDITH. It comes from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COOMBS. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman where this railroad runs?

Mr. LAPHAM. It runs from Alexandria, and crosses the river at Analostian Island, into the city.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Committee on Military Affairs recommended the following amendment:

In section 1, line 10 of the bill, after the word "except," to strike out the word "so;" also strike out all of lines 11 and 12 and all of line 13, to and including the word "reservation," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That said line running northerly may be diverted from said river road easterly at a point not more than 20 rods southerly from the intersection of the river road with the northerly line of said reservation: Provided, That this diversion shall not exceed 20 rods from said river road easterly."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LAPHAM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHRISTOPHER SCHMIDT.

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 573) for the relief of Christopher Schmidt.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to consider a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40 a month for and during the term of his natural life to Christopher Schmidt, of St. Paul, Minn., for injuries received from accidental shot on the rifle range at Fort Snelling, July 14, 1892, in quarterly payments, upon such vouchers as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, we want some explanation of this.

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the Senate, and also the House Committee on Claims. Christopher Schmidt, a citizen of St. Paul, Minn., while walking on the public highway near Fort Snelling, Minn., was shot and seriously wounded and made a cripple for life by United States soldiers, while they, under command of their officers, were practicing rifle target shooting near said highway. It seems that by some misunderstanding the danger flag which should have been put up to warn persons walking upon the highway was not displayed. The man was shot, and as a result lost one eye, lost his sense of smell, and his hearing in one ear. He is now unable to earn a cent, and is absolutely without means. When shot he was on his way to a neighboring farmer in search of work which had been promised him.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman will withdraw this bill for the present, so I can examine into it. If not, I shall have to object to it, because it proposes to pension a man at the rate of $40 per month for the rest of his natural life.

Mr. KIEFER. How long a time does the gentleman want to examine into it?

Mr. SAYERS. I will look into it as soon as I can.

Mr. KIEFER. Then I will withdraw the bill for the present.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FUNK. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order, which is the call of committees for reports.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. On last Friday I introduced into the House a resolution of inquiry, addressed to one of the Departments of the Government. By order of the House it was referred to the standing committee having charge of that subject-matter—the Committee on Military Affairs. I learn from the chairman of that committee that the resolution reached the committee this morning for the first time.

During the intervening time more than half of the period allowed by the rules of the House for a report from the committee has elapsed, and the committee have had no official knowledge of the existence of the resolution. Between now and the expiration of the time allowed to the committee for the consideration of the resolution, no proper and satisfactory reference of it can be made to the Department to which it relates. At this stage in the proceedings of the House, so near the end, as it is hoped, of the session, it is certainly a complete embargo upon this sort of business if we can not have the rules of the House more strictly complied with.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will make inquiry of the distributing clerk, and will inform the gentleman.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 79) to authorize a corrected patent to be issued for the donation land claim of Wheelock Simmons and wife; and

A bill (S. 1076) to release a certain limitation existing in an act of Congress touching the Episcopal Church at St. Augustine, Fla.

A bill (H. R. 7097) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

A further message from the Senate by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5459) to pension the minor children of Alfred Phipps; and

A bill (H. R. 894) for the relief of Robert Travila for loss of carbine in the late war.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That Mr. PETTIGREW be excused from service as one of the conferees on the bill (H. R. 6080) granting a certain military reservation to Oklahoma City, Okla., to aid the public free schools thereof, and for other purposes, and Mr. CAREY be appointed in his place.

CORRECTION OF BILL.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to make a correction in regard to a bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks that the following order be made to correct a bill which passed on yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized in enrolling House bill 7451 to insert the word "That" at the beginning of the bill, making it conform to the bill as read and as it passed the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the word "That," which has been omitted from a bill sent to the enrolling room, be inserted. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE THROUGH GROUNDS OF NAVAL OBSERVATORY A PUBLIC STREET.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution (H. Res. 32) declaring Massachusetts avenue through the grounds of the Naval Observatory a public street.

The report of the committee of conference is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the House resolution 32, "Declaring Massachusetts avenue through the grounds of the Naval Observatory a public street" having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same.

JNO. T. HEARD,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
P. S. POST.
Managers on the part of the House.

CHAS. H. GIBSON,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
GEO. C. PERKINS.
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the statement, which will perhaps explain the matter better than the report.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The House joint resolution 32 provided for the declaring of Massachusetts avenue through the grounds of Naval Observatory a public street. The Senate amended same by providing that no street, avenue, or public thoroughfare in the neighborhood of the buildings erected upon the United States Naval Observatory grounds shall extend within the area of a circle described with a radius of 1,000 feet from the center of the building known as the clock-room of said observatory.

It also provides for extending said Massachusetts avenue just outside of such a circle, and authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to acquire the ground within the circle of 1,000 feet not now owned by the Government for the observatory, and to sell all outside of such circle belonging to the said Naval Observatory grounds. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to appoint a board of three appraisers to determine and fix the price at which the public land or any part thereof shall be sold, and to determine the value of the parcels of private property to be purchased. The Senate amendment further provides for proper condemnation proceedings in the event the Secretary of the Navy can not agree with the owners of the private property involved.

The adoption of the conference report is an agreement to the Senate amendment.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to was laid on the table.

PROCEEDINGS OF TRIBUNAL OF ARBITRATION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FUNK] to withdraw his demand for the regular order long enough to have a resolution considered to print the correspondence and papers in reference to the arbitration between the United States and Great Britain in reference to fur seals. It is quite an important matter, and ought to be considered.

Mr. FUNK. I shall consent to that; and then I will demand the regular order. This being pension day, I want to have all the time we can for the consideration of business of that kind.

The SPEAKER. This being a public resolution, the Chair will lay it before the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, under the direction of the Department of State, 6,000 copies of the official proceedings of the Tribunal of Arbitration created in pursuance of the treaty of February 29, 1892, between the United States and Great Britain, including all documents, papers, and agreements presented officially to said tribunal by the agents of said Governments, respectively, and also including the written or printed arguments and the oral arguments of the counsel on behalf of each of said Governments made on said hearing at Paris, and the opinions of the arbitrators, respectively, delivered in said tribunal in conformity with its order, admitting the same to constitute a part of said proceedings; of which number 1,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the use of the Department of State.

The report of the Committee on Printing (by Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee) was read, as follows:

The committee have considered the Senate concurrent resolution to print 6,000 copies of the official proceedings of the Tribunal of Arbitration, created in pursuance of the treaty of February 29, 1892, between the United States and Great Britain, and directs me to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

The estimated cost of same is $92,359.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if the expenditure for the publication of this document comes out of the general appropriation for printing?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It comes out of the general appropriation for printing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The bill as agreed upon appropriates $21,308,295.79, being $557,507.02 less than the law for 1894, $202,508.50 more than as it passed the House, and $70,020 less than as it passed the Senate.

ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
WILLIAM J. COOMBS,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the amount appropriated for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, was $21,865,802.81. The amount carried in this bill, as stated in the report of the managers on the part of the House, is $21,308,295.79, being a reduction under the law of last year of $567,507.02.

Now, then, unless some gentleman desires information in addition to that submitted by the report of the managers, I will ask for a vote on the report.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, as I caught the reading of the report, I believe there was a concurrence in the Senate amendment increasing the salaries of the six auditors from $3,600 to $4,000, and the six deputy auditors from $2,250 to $2,500. Am I correct in that?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is correct. It is the amount fixed by the statute.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Am I also correct, that I caught from the report, that the House conferees agreed to the amendment of the Senate, authorizing the payment of the chief of the special agents division and his assistant their traveling expenses, etc., when they travel outside of the District?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman give me five minutes?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As to the last amendment, I am not here to criticise the House committee for having agreed to it. I understand perfectly well that when there are differences between the House and the Senate upon a bill carrying appropriations there must be something of concession. I regret, however, that that amendment was agreed to by the House conferees. The matter has been spoken of and attention has been called to it on more than one occasion in the House, and this item now appears, I think, for the first time in any law or appropriation in the history of the Government.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman will remember that it was reported by the House Committee on Appropriations, but went out of the bill on a point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I remember that, but it is new legislation. In all the years since the Pension Office has been in existence, under Mr. Cleveland's first Administration, and under Mr. Harrison's, and up to this time, these two officials, whose duty of superintending this special agent service is and ought to be performed here in Washington, there has been no such provision as this; and now, for the first time, this allowance is made for ithe payment of their expenses when they go out of the District. In my judgment their duties can be best performed in the District, and ought to be performed here.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me remind the gentleman that the number of these officials was fixed at two in the bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and also in this bill, whereas prior to that time five of these special examiners were authorized; and, as I am advised, they had the privilege of a per diem allowance when absent from the District on public business.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I do not understand that to be the case; but let us get at the facts.

Mr. DOCKERY. The facts as I understand them are these. The number of these officials was reduced from five to two on the recommendation of Commissioner Raum at the last session of Congress. Prior to that time there had been five special examiners, who had the privilege of a special allowance such as is carried in this bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Have these officials heretofore received this compensation or allowance for expenses?

Mr. DOCKERY. Prior to the recommendation of Commissioner Raum, which reduced the number from five to two, they did receive such an allowance, as I am informed.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. When was that recommendation made?

Mr. DOCKERY. It took effect in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then am I in error in supposing that this item is new legislation?

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman is in error, as I am advised by a gentleman usually correct, if he supposes that these examiners have not heretofore received a per diem allowance when absent from the Pension Office.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me ask the gentleman from Missouri whether that allowance was not made by the Commissioner of Pensions under some provision of law?

Mr. DOCKERY. Undoubtedly it must have been. Prior to the last fiscal year, as I have said, there were five of these special examiners, but on the recommendation of Commissioner Raum the number was reduced to two, but in the bill for the fiscal year 1894 there was no provision for the per diem allowance when absent from the office.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why was that left out in 1894?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not remember. I suppose the provision in the bill was framed in harmony with the recommendation of the Commissioner. The gentleman will remember, however, that this provision only allows actual expenses, and the probabilities are that it will never be availed of, or that it will be availed of to a limited extent. I will state to my friend that it is a provision upon which, as he knows, I laid no special stress, but the other body insisted that it ought to be retained in the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am glad to know that it will probably not be availed of, but that probability, it seems to me, renders it proper that the item should not be in the bill at all.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to be understood as agreeing with the gentleman from Illinois in his idea that these gentlemen ought generally to be in the office here in Washington, and for that reason I think it is altogether probable that no stress of official duties will call them away, except perhaps on some unusual occasions.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I only wanted to know the facts about this matter. As to the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri, if I should be spared life and health until the next session of Congress, I shall take an interest in finding out exactly how much of this money has been expended by these two officials and on what kind of duty it has been expended.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will, for I concur with him in the desire not to make or support any appropriation that is not proper and in the interest of the public service.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I have no doubt that is true. Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the increase of the salaries of the auditors and the deputy auditors, I do not say that that was unwise. I am not here to criticise the House conferees for receding from the disagreement of the Senate amendment, but I do desire just for a minute to call the attention of the House to the history of the salaries of these officials. I recollect very well that in the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, in the year 1875, when, according to my recollection, the late Mr. Randall was at the head of the Committee on Appropriations, and our present colleague, Judge HOLMAN of Indiana, was a member of that committee, we had a great deal of appropriation, and much of nonappropriation, in small matters in the main, but amounting in the aggregate to a considerable sum.

For weeks and months discussions were had touching appropriations, and the columns of the newspapers were filled with accounts of the great saving that the Democratic House of Representatives was forcing by the decrease of the salaries of Government officials. The contest was long and bitter. The Revised Statutes of the United States gave then, as now, $4,000 per annum to each of these Auditors and $2,500 to each of the deputies; but by main force, by long standing out and insisting, the Democratic House compelled an appropriation of only $3,500 a year for each of the Auditors and $2,250 for each of the deputy auditors.

And so there was a decrease in the salaries of these and many other Government officials. The excuse for this was that the country was in the midst of hard times; that the revenues were short; that the compensation of business people and laboring people was reduced; that there was distress throughout the length and breadth of the country. Hence these reductions were made.

At that time gold was at a premium of 25 per cent over and above the currency of the country in which salaries were paid.

Now, from that time to this these salaries from year to year have been slowly restored. Most of them were restored during Mr. Cleveland's former Administration. And now, in the year of our Lord 1894, when the currency in which these officials are paid is gold or its equivalent—when our currency is no longer at a discount of 25 per cent, as it was when these reductions were made in 1875—substantially the last reductions are wiped out, and these officials are to get hereafter $4,000 a year and the three deputies $2,500 a year. The campaign of 1876 was largely made upon the savings, as alleged, in cutting down the salaries of these officials.

Perhaps this is a fit time to restore those salaries. But money is worth one-fourth more than it was then; but I apprehend that the times are better now. It is true we are borrowing money to pay the current expenses of the Government; we were not then. But at any rate this restoration of salaries has been accomplished. I am not here to oppose the adoption of this conference report, but merely by way of reminiscence to refresh the recollection of gentlemen as to how political campaigns are sometimes run.

At the time to which I have referred, we saw a great party with the shibboleth of economy and reduction of salaries, because the times were hard, win the race so far as the House of Representatives was concerned, not only in 1876, but also in 1878, upon the ground of these savings that the representatives of the people had made. But now in 1894 the salaries are restored—perhaps properly enough. I do not know whether the next campaign is to be run on the restoration of these salaries as the former was run on the reduction. I merely wanted to call the attention of the House to this matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say on the part of the conferees that I regret the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is not satisfied with this conference report. I supposed the gentleman was not in favor of an illiberal policy.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, I am not dissatisfied with your report.

Mr. DOCKERY. So far as the conferees were concerned, they endeavored to treat this bill as a business bill. I do not think a suspicion of politics has connected itself with the action of any of the conferees, either on the part of the House or the Senate. I feel that I am warranted in making that statement. We have presented an economic bill, a bill which carries the money necessary to support the Government. Mr. Speaker, I ask a vote.

Mr. BINGHAM rose.

Mr. DOCKERY. Of course, I do not wish to cut off the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, there is one paragraph in connection with this conference report upon which the House should be informed, as it has been the subject of several debates, the paragraph with reference to the increase of the appropriation for special examiners or other persons employed in the Bureau of Pensions, detailed for the purpose of making special investigations. Gentlemen are aware of the fact that this item estimated for by the Secretary of the Interior, upon the recommendation of the Bureau of Pensions, for this force, for the next fiscal year, was $500,000. The House committee reported an appropriation of $200,000 as sufficient for the necessary conduct of the work. The Senate amended the House appropriation by increasing it from $200,000 to $300,000. In conference the agreement was reached to make the amount $250,000, in lieu of the $200,000 appropriated by the House and the $300,000 as proposed in the Senate amendment.

This question has been very fully discussed by the House; and while I reluctantly acceded to this increase, I desired in no wise to impair the efficiency of that portion of the Bureau of Pensions that went into the examination of these claims, either as to their perfection or completion in the aiding of the soldier, together with the necessary investigation as to whether the claims were tainted with fraud.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman state in that connection that the reduction from $300,000 to $250,000 was made, if I mistake not, on his suggestion?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is true.

Mr. DOCKERY. The majority of the conferees deferred to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, he having had large experience in connection with pension matters.

Mr. BINGHAM. Therefore I have felt it my duty as representing the minority side, to emphasize the fact that while we have protested as to the estimate of the Commissioner asking for $500,000, and have also made our protest against the amendment of the Senate recommending $300,000, it is well for the Commissioner of Pensions to understand that after a fair and reasonable appropriation has been allowed there will follow a very thorough investigation should he at a later date in the next fiscal year submit either a large or small deficiency, and he will be expected to exhibit in his next annual report the details of his expenditures under this appropriation. I hope they will be wise and carefully entered into.

There have been declarations that large frauds exist in connection with pensions. We have been willing to make reasonable allowance for the investigation of these alleged frauds. But should that Bureau demand of Congress a deficiency appropriation, Congress will insist that their must be a clear exhibit as to this expenditure, both in its details and in its results.

Mr. SAYERS. I understand, then, that in the opinion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] $250,000 is amply sufficient for this purpose, and that no deficiency appropriation will be needed.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think that has been emphasized by the action of your committee and by the action of this House, and I trust it will be understood by the Commissioner of Pensions that he should follow the rule which the Internal Revenue Department follows in its detective service and the rule which the Post-Office Department follows in its detective service. Those Departments never come to Congress for a deficiency appropriation. And the Commissioner of Pensions must understand that we shall scrutinize his action in this matter with great care. With this view I was willing to favor an increase of the appropriation $50,000 above the sum originally voted by the House.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BINGHAM. With pleasure.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. The amount appropriated, as I understand, by this conference report for this item is $250,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir. We have agreed to an increase of $50,000 over the amount originally voted by the House, reducing the Senate appropriation which proposed an increase of $100,000.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Is this for detective purposes?

Mr. BINGHAM. Under the administration of the Bureau it is not wholly for such purposes. This special force is detailed to aid pensioners to complete their claims, as well as to follow out any claims tainted with fraud.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Can the gentleman state how much was appropriated in this line for the last fiscal year, including the deficiency? I mean the fiscal year just closed.

Mr. BINGHAM. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, the amount was $225,000. The appropriation for the year just closed was $200,000; and we gave a deficiency appropriation of $200,000 more.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania illustrates his suggestion by a reference to the detective force of the Treasury Department and other Departments.

Mr. BINGHAM. I referred to the Internal Revenue Bureau and to the Post-Office Department.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Can the gentleman so specify the items of expenditure for the last fiscal year as to tell us what proportion of the appropriation was expended for detective purposes?

Mr. BINGHAM. I can not.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. You have not that information?

Mr. BINGHAM. We have not that information.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Has any member of the conference committee that information?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think there is no such exhibit.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman will permit me, I think it was stated, perhaps by the gentleman from Maine, on the floor of the House during the discussion of this matter, that the Bureau claimed only 10 per cent of the fund appropriated was involved in the detection of what may be considered cases of fraud in connection with pension matters.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Ten per cent expenditure of the total?

Mr. DOCKERY. Of the amount appropriated for the special examining force.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think the gentleman from Missouri is in error.

Mr. DOCKERY. No; I think 10 per cent was suggested, after looking over the whole field, as being about the amount involved in that connection.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. And 90 per cent of the total to facilitate the allowance of pension claims?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is my understanding.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. From the number of pensioners dropped from the rolls and the few pensions allowed, I was rather inclined to the opinion that possibly 90 per cent had been used in the attempt to discover fraud, or alleged frauds, and only 10 per cent to facilitate pensions.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think the gentleman is in error in that regard.

Mr. BINGHAM. There is no necessity for an appropriation of any considerable amount for detective service in connection with pensions.

Mr. COOMBS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with his consent, a single question. I know that he, as well as other gentlemen on his side of the House, as well as upon this side, are very anxious to have the matter of the investigation and allowance of pension claims in such shape as that they may be made as rapidly as possible on account of the increasing age of the pensioners. Now, I ask him if he would like to take a position that would in any way limit the Commissioner of Pensions as to the amount of expenditures in facilitating the granting of pensions?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have in no wise stated that I took such a position as that.

Mr. COOMBS. Would you not double the appropriation of $250,000 if you deemed it necessary for that purpose?

Mr. BINGHAM. Undoubtedly, if I regarded it necessary to do so. It has not been found necessary heretofore, however, in order to expedite pension claims.

A MEMBER. Because they were not expedited.

Mr. BINGHAM. Now, the office, through its Commissioner, comes in and asks Congress for the unusual appropriation of $500,000; and the position of the House in regard to the matter was predicated on the message of the President of the United States, as well as the utterances of the Commissioner of Pensions himself, that the pension roll was "honeycombed with fraud."

And the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and the House itself, in view of this statement, simply said to the Commissioner of Pensions: "We will give you only $200,000 for this purpose, as Congress has heretofore given, and regard it as sufficient if properly applied."

Mr. COOMBS. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania is mistaken in connecting these two things. They are entirely different. On the contrary, the Commissioner of Pensions distinctly states that the money is not to investigate frauds in the applications for pensions, or in pensions already granted, except such as may be incidentally found in connection with the business of the office.

When this matter came before the Committee on Appropriations I went to the Pension Office myself, so as to understand distinctly the facts in relation to it. I, as a friend of the soldier, believed the money was being spent in expediting the granting of just pensions; and when he asked for $500,000 I was in favor of giving the total amount, because I believed, as I had reason to believe, that it was being expended or to be expended in expediting these claims. I was in favor, therefore, of the whole appropriation. But our friends on the other side were not willing that that amount should be given.

Now, we must trust somebody. Someone must have the control of the matter, and I believe the Commissioner of Pensions is an honest man, and when he says he needs the money to make the investigations necessary in connection with the public business, I think he states what is correct, and I believe in giving it to him, so as to give these old soldiers their pensions as quickly as possible.

In the committee the other day it was suggested that this compromise of $250,000 be agreed to. I was perfectly willing to give $100,000 more if necessary, and would have voted for it willingly.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman from New York to say that this side of the House controlled the amount that should be appropriated in this bill?

Mr. COOMBS. Oh, we had to make some compromises. There was a misgiving in the minds of certain gentlemen representing the other side of the House as to the object of the expenditure of the money, although I believe that migiving was entirely without foundation and should not have been entertained.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. If this side of the House control in that regard it is the first appropriation bill where they have had that power, and I am and have been in ignorance of the fact stated by the gentleman. If $500,000 was asked for by the Commissioner of Pensions, and was needed, it ought to be given.

Mr. COOMBS. The reason is this: I am afraid the Commissioner of Pensions, reading in the RECORD the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. BINGHAM. Pardon me; reading in the RECORD what has already been said by other gentlemen.

Mr. COOMBS (continuing). Reading the remarks upon this subject will naturally entertain a reluctance, even if it be necessary, to spend more money than the amount appropriated and apply for a deficiency. I want him to feel at liberty to spend all the money that is necessary to get these pensions granted quickly.

Mr. BINGHAM. We do not question that proposition.

Mr. COOMBS. I believe you all feel just the same way.

Mr. PICKLER. Why are there so many suspensions and reductions?

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I hope we shall not indulge in a political discussion on this conference report.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] yield?

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield, for a question, to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I was not present when the bill was passed, but gentlemen tell me that the statement was made that the Commissioner of Pensions said that $200,000 was all that would be needed. I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] if that is true?

Mr. DOCKERY. The informant of the gentleman is in error. The Commissioner of Pensions made no such statement. On the contrary, he asked for $500,000.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Why was not that amount given?

Mr. DOCKERY. Because in the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations, concurred in, I believe, on both sides, it was thought that $200,000 would be sufficient; but the gentleman evidently did not hear the statement of his colleague [Mr. BINGHAM], the conferee representing the minority, when the report was first submitted. I asked the gentleman to state to the House, and he did so state, that the amount fixed at $250,000 was his own suggestion; which was concurred in by the majority of the conferees representing this side of the House.

We have dealt with this question without any reference to political considerations. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] suggested $250,000. We agreed to the amount, believing that it was sufficient, and I want to say again that in making that suggestion I do not think the gentleman had any thought of politics or political bias. I know we had not on this side.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. We are not taking politics into account, but we want to know whether this appropriation is sufficient and the reasons for fixing this amount.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope politics will not be brought into it. This day is set apart by order of the House for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and this matter has been heretofore thoroughly threshed and rethreshed.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. It is very easy for the committee to agree to the Senate amendment of $300,000, if more than $200,000 is needed.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have stated the facts on which we reached the conclusion that $250,000 was necessary.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Of course I did not hear the statement before the subcommittee.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman will consult the RECORD he will find the statement of his colleague [Mr. BINGHAM] in support of the statement I have just made, and if he has any doubt on that question the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] is present and I will yield to him.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states that they had to give a deficiency appropriation of $200,000 for the past year, making the total $400,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. In the general appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, we appropriated $200,000 for this purpose. We came in early in this session with a deficiency appropriation of $200,000 more; therefore the Pension Bureau has had an appropriation of $400,000 for this purpose during the fiscal year closing on the 30th of June, 1894. The estimate submitted by the Commissioner for the present fiscal year was $500,000. We saw in the present condition of affairs no reason why we should appropriate $500,000. Nothing had occurred in connection with the pensions administration that warranted it. Therefore we adhered to the appropriation of the preceding year of $200,000.

The deficiency appropriation of $200,000 was given in response to a special message from the Pension Office, to the effect they were investigating great frauds, and it was deemed that that additional appropriation would cover the investigation. The Senate have increased our appropriation for the ensuing fiscal year to $300,000. We have compromised on $250,000, and in my statement to the House submitting that as a fair, reasonable amount, I added the declaration the expenditure would be critically examined, for the reason great fraud had been alleged, and if fraud existed it ought to be investigated and concluded under this appropriation, and the necessity for further appropriation in this direction should be clear and well defined in the Commissioner's report.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I assume from the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that probably the committee, or himself, as he has referred to the gentleman from Missouri, thought that there were not as many sleuthhounds and bloodhounds needed as the Commissioner thought in this direction.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would be glad if the gentleman from Iowa would construe his own language, and not mine. I have said nothing that would warrant any such interpretation.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to differ from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] in one statement that he made in his reply to the gentleman from Iowa. I am a member of that committee, and have no recollection, and I think if the gentleman will think the matter over again he will find, that it was not the case that the Commissioner said that he required the $500,000, because he was making large investigations of fraud. Now, I would like for the gentleman to correct that statement.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then I would like to ask the gentleman this question. What, and how did the Commissioner of Pensions, who with a sweep of his pen, in an order, wiped out the pensions of 20,000 pensioners from the roll, unless he entertained or had reached the conclusion that there was fraud or no merit as to their standing on the roll?

Mr. COOMBS. I am calling the gentleman's attention to one specific point, and, as I think, he will find he is in error on that. I will say this—that probably at the beginning, under a public pressure, which ran throughout the land, there was some unwise action in relation to suspending pensioners; and while there was some rabidness at that time, that was immediately corrected. I believe, and I think every man who knows anything about it will say, that pensioners or applicants for pensions were never more fairly treated than by the present Commissioner and under the present administration of that office. Give them their due, gentlemen. I find that my individual efforts at obtaining pensions are more successful, that more careful work has been done upon my pension claims, and more prompt work than I have ever experienced before. I am very well satisfied with the work they are doing; and I think the country is satisfied. I believe that the money is being spent in expediting the pensioning of old soldiers.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope it will be done.

Mr. COOMBS. I hope so, and thoroughly believe it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in conclusion, and then I will demand the previous question, that the $250,000 for the examining force was unanimously agreed to by the conferees on the suggestion of that gallant soldier from Pennsylvania [Gen. BINGHAM], one of the conferees. I ask for the previous question.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to ask a single question. Does the gentleman think it sufficient?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. One further question. The amount, $200,000, that was appropriated last year was expended by early in December in last year, and Congress gave $200,000 more. Does the gentleman have any doubt about Congress giving an additional amount next December in the event that the $250,000 be honestly expended?

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." I do not know what the next session will do? My own judgment is that $250,000 is sufficient for the entire year. Of course, if at the next session Congress shall find more is needed, I have no doubt it will be given. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to, was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the bill (H. R. 7453) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1880; and to ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The title of the bill was reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Committee on the Judiciary will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

COMMODORE DENNIS W. MULLAN.

Mr. TYLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 60) authorizing Commodore Dennis W. Mullan, United States Navy, to accept a medal presented to him by the Chilian Government; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NORFOLK, NEBR.

Mr. MERCER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported with amendment the bill (H. R. 264) for the erection of a public building at the city of Norfolk, Nebr.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of committees for reports.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the second morning hour be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana that the second morning hour be dispensed with?

Mr. BURROWS. With what committee does the call rest?

The SPEAKER. With the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

There being no objection the request of Mr. MARTIN of Indiana was unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, the 25th instant, after the second morning hour, be assigned to the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to call up the bill (H. R. 233) to supplement the act of June 27, 1890, as to pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in any application for a pension under the act of Congress approved June 27, 1890, where it is shown that the soldier or sailor on account of whose service such pension is asked dies or has died without having received an honorable discharge from such service, and without having by his own misconduct forfeited his right to receive an honorable discharge, such want of an honorable discharge shall not debar the applicant from receiving the benefits of said law upon complying with the other requirements thereof.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. OUTHWAITE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask that the report be read in my time.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to have the bill read, Mr. Chairman, so that we may know what it is.

The bill was again read, as above.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN of Indiana) was read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 233) to supplement the act of June 27, 1890, as to pensions, and submit the following report:

The object of this bill is to correct an inequality in the act of June 27, 1890, arising from a limitation in the wording of that act and wholly unanticipated at the time of its passage. Under that act, if a soldier served ninety days in the war of the rebellion and was honorably discharged, his widow is pensionable without reference to the cause of his death. Moreover, where a soldier died in service and in line of duty, the widow is pensionable under the general laws prior to the act of June 27, 1890. There are cases, however, where the soldier died in the service, but from causes such as do not justify the pensioning of his widow under the general law, such as death by accident while absent from his command on personal business, etc.; neither is the widow pensionable in this case under the act of June 27, 1890, because the soldier did not receive an honorable discharge.

This state of facts gives rise to the anomoly of pensioning without question the widow of a soldier who served for ninety days or more, was discharged, and subsequently died an ignominious death, while the widow of a soldier, no matter how long or meritorious his service, who was killed by the cars through no fault of his own while absent on furlough, is denied a pension altogether.

The point involved is clearly defined, and the purpose of this bill is clearly in the direction of equalization and uniformity in the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890. The Fifty-second and the present Congress have frequently been called on to consider private bills to correct this obvious injustice growing out of the wording of that act, and such bills have uniformly received favorable consideration.

It is clearly proper that such inequalities should be remedied where it is possible by general enactment rather than by individual and private acts; your committee, therefore, recommend that this bill do pass.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can add anything to what is stated in the report of the committee, but I may epitomize it by saying that the object of this bill is simply to cure a defect in the act of June 27, 1890. Before an applicant can receive a pension on account of the death of a husband, it is necessary under that act to show that the soldier had received an honorable discharge. A number of cases have come up from time to time where the soldier had been in the service for more than ninety days—for nearly two years in one case that I recall—and where he was killed, not in the line of duty, not while a deserter, and yet, under the requirements of the law, the widow was barred from receiving a pension. Now, the effect of the passage of this bill will be to do away with the necessity for private bills to meet cases of that character. If any gentleman desires to make any inquiry in regard to the bill I shall be glad to yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask the gentleman to yield to me in order that I may state a case in point to which this law will apply.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I introduced the other day a bill which I presume has gone to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It was a case where a soldier overstayed his furlough because of the extreme illness of his wife. He stayed, I think, a number of months beyond the limitation of his furlough and was marked as a deserter. As soon as it was possible for him to return, in view of the circumstances of the case, he started back to his command. On the way, traveling by stagecoach down to the Ohio River, at a point where the stage stopped for dinner he went into a stream to bathe and was drowned. Under the existing law his widow can not have a pension although the soldier was on his way back to his regiment, having, as I said, overstayed his furlough, and the officers of the regiment having, properly under the rules and regulations, reported him a deserter.

Mr. HARE. I desire to suggest in that connection that even if the soldier had not overstayed his furlough and had been accidentally killed when he was on his way back to his regiment, the widow would still have been deprived of the right to a pension under the act of 1890.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is true; because, technically, he would not have had an honorable discharge.

Mr. SPRINGER. The present law provides, I believe, that where the soldier himself is living and applies for a pension, he must have an honorable discharge, but there is a general law under which he can get such a discharge.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But the limitation in that law has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am speaking of the case where the soldier himself applies for a pension. The law requires that before he can get a pension he must produce an honorable discharge, but under circumstances such as the gentleman [Mr. GROSVENOR] has stated and such as the other gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARE] has suggested, the soldier would be entitled under the general law to a discharge. He could apply to the War Department, and on making proof would be entitled to his discharge; but there is no law authorizing the granting of an honorable discharge to a dead man, and I have several times found embarrassment resulting from that condition of things; because, while if the soldier were living he could obtain a discharge under the general law, no discharge could be granted to a dead man. This bill therefore seems to me eminently proper and necessary.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Just a word in conclusion, Mr. Chairman. The intention of this bill is not at all to give discharges to those who are laboring under a charge of desertion. That charge must be gotten rid of in some other way. This bill is for an entirely different purpose.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that the object of this bill is to cover only cases where the soldier was killed in battle or died in hospital and could not have had an honorable discharge, and where, he not having had such discharge, his widow can not avail herself of the pension law of 1890.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. No; because, let me say to the gentleman, that in that case the man has died in the line of duty, and the widow could be pensioned under the general law.

Mr. KILGORE. But I understood the gentleman to say that unless the husband had been honorably discharged his widow could not get a pension under the act of 1890.

Mr. COOMBS. Death in the line of duty is an honorable discharge.

Mr. KILGORE. That I should think would be the construction; but that is not the language of the act of 1890.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. No, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. I could not understand distinctly, from the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, what the purpose of this bill is.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I will give my friend a case in point. A man enlisted in December, 1863, and served until June, 1865. He was sent by his superior officer upon an errand which it was thought he ought not to have been sent upon; but he was a private soldier, and could not do otherwise than obey orders. Upon going out for the purpose on which he was sent, he fell in with some person with whom a dispute arose in regard to certain property having the Government brand upon it. In the course of that dispute, without any attack having been made by the soldier upon the citizen, the latter drew his revolver and killed the soldier. Now, that man had been in the service nearly two years. His wife applied for a pension under the general law, but it was held that the soldier had not died in the line of duty, and therefore she could not obtain a pension under the general law.

Mr. KILGORE. But he was out under the orders of his superior officer, and was killed while in the performance of duty under those orders.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. That would be my view.

Mr. RYAN. But the Bureau held otherwise.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The Bureau has held both ways in cases of that kind.

Mr. KILGORE. Then the bill is intended to cure that sort of case?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. The gentleman understands that there have been a great many bills before the House at Friday night sessions to relieve men from the charge of desertion; and I have known some to pass where the proof disclosed that the man had deserted three times, twice from the Federal Army and once from the Confederate army, and had obtained the bounty once or twice. Now, this bill is not intended to cover such a case as that?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Oh, no, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. Nor any other case where a man labors under the charge of desertion?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. No, sir; it is not intended to cure cases where there is a charge of desertion.

Mr. KILGORE. As I understood the gentleman, where a man without any fault of his own has failed to get an honorable discharge, he will have the same standing in the Pension Bureau that he would have had if he had obtained an honorable discharge? Now, the bill would perhaps take in such a case as that recited by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I do not think it would.

Mr. KILGORE. In that case the soldier labored under the charge of desertion.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. But the object of this bill is not at all to relieve any person from the charge of desertion. It is simply intended to cover the class of cases I have just mentioned.

Mr. COOMBS. Where the man was not technically in the line of duty at the time of his death.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. How would it do to provide that this act shall not apply to any cases where the charge of desertion rests against the soldier. As I understand, then the case cited by the gentleman from Ohio would not come under the act.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think it ought to do so, whether it does or not.

Mr. WAUGH. Allow me a single suggestion. Take the language of this proposed bill:

> Any person who dies, or has died, without receiving an honorable discharge, without its being chargeable to his own misconduct.

Now the removal of charges of desertion and the correction of military records is a matter for the War Department, and it also comes before us in the form of special acts. Now, under the language I have just read, I ask the attention of the gentleman to such a case as this: A soldier who served in the war did not receive any discharge; and his service closed thirty years ago. He has been making an effort to get an honorable discharge from the War Department but has been refused; he has also been making efforts to obtain an honorable discharge by special act of Congress, and in this also has been unsuccessful. Now, would not this bill authorize him to abandon his application at the War Department, to abandon his application before Congress, and to go to the Pension Office in order to have that question determined?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Not at all, as I understand.

Mr. WAUGH (continuing). And let the Commissioner of Pensions pass upon it.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I think not.

Mr. WAUGH. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that. Now, let us see; let us see what the bill itself says. It does not limit a case to the death of a pensioner during the war. It may be a case where the death occurs to-day or occurred yesterday. Then what? The language of the bill is:

> That the soldier or sailor on account of whose service such pension is asked dies or has died, etc.

That is, that he died during or subsequent to the war.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. But read the rest of the sentence. It provides:

> Without having received an honorable discharge from such service, and without having by his own misconduct forfeited his right.

Mr. WAUGH. But who is to determine the question of misconduct? The Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Oh, no; it must be determined by the War Department. It could not be determined by the Commissioner of Pensions or the Pension Bureau. That is covered by the law now. When a man has a charge of desertion pending against him on the records of the Department he can not be pensioned.

Mr. WAUGH. What would be the objection to putting in the words, "as provided by existing law?" It looks as if it leaves the whole matter to the Pension Office.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. This has no reference, I will state to the gentleman from Indiana, to desertions at all. There is no such proposition. I regret that that idea should get into the minds of any gentleman in connection with this bill. I would not consent to bring forward a bill for that purpose.

Mr. KILGORE. If the gentleman will permit me, the only question would be as to the construction of the measure, after it became a law, given to it by the Bureau. They might construe it to cover such cases as that named by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. The truth is it ought to provide specifically against such cases.

Mr. HAINES. It has no application whatever to cases where there are charges against the soldier of any character.

Mr. JONES. I would ask the gentleman from Indiana if he would accept this amendment to be added to the bill:

> Provided, That no charge of desertion is standing against such soldier or sailor upon the records of the War Department.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I would be willing for that amendment.

Mr. JONES. I offer the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia to offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, general debate will be considered as closed; and the gentleman from Virginia will send his amendment to the desk to be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Add to this bill:
> "Provided, That no charge of desertion is standing against such soldier or sailor upon the records of the War Department."

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the bill be laid aside with favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and Mr. TRACEY, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. OUTHWAITE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 233, had directed him to report the same back with an amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask the previous question on the amendment and the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WAUGH. I ask that the bill as amended be reported.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATHS BY FOURTH-CLASS POSTMASTERS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I am instructed to call up the bill (H. R. 7294) empowering fourth-class postmasters to administer oaths to pensioners, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas under existing laws requiring pensioners and their witnesses to make oath in the execution of pension vouchers before an officer having a seal in many instances works great hardship and imposes burdens and expense upon and requires long distance of travel from pensioners who, on account of poverty, infirmities, and disease, are unable to endure the burden: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That hereafter, in addition to the officers now authorized to administer oaths in such cases, fourth-class postmasters of the United States are hereby required, empowered, and authorized, free of charge, to administer any and all oaths required to be made by pensioners and their witnesses in the execution of their vouchers with like effect and force as officers having a seal.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill empowering fourth-class postmasters to administer oaths to pensioners."

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. This bill is not on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; on the House Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask for the reading of the report. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BURROWS. Why not vote on the bill now? There is no objection to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I think the report had better be read so the character of the bill will be understood.

The report (by Mr. BALDWIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 7294) empowering fourth-class postmasters to administer oaths to pensioners, and submit the following report:

The purpose of this bill is to authorize fourth-class postmasters to administer oaths to pensioners and their witnesses in the execution of their vouchers for their quarterly pension payments. The object is to avoid the inconveniences experienced by those who live in sparsely settled communities or remote from any officer at present authorized to administer oaths for general purposes. The bill provides that the postmaster shall use the stamp of his office to authenticate his signature and to charge and receive for each voucher not more than 25 cents, to be paid by the pensioner.

The desirability of such legislation seems to be very apparent, and no ground of objection whatever has occurred to the committee.

The question was submitted to the Commissioner of Pensions, who replied in the following letter:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
"Washington, June 26, 1894.

"DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 13th instant, inclosing H. R. 7294, and asking my opinion as to the practicability of such legislation, came here while I was temporarily absent. It seems to me that the bill, if enacted, will make it convenient for pensioners in rural districts to execute their vouchers, and I see no objection to it whatever.

"Yours, very truly,

"WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

"Hon. A. N. MARTIN,
"House of Representatives."

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass, after being amended as follows:

Strike out all of the preamble; strike out the words "free of charge" in line 6; add at the close of the bill the words "and such postmaster shall affix the stamp of his office to his signature to such vouchers, and he is authorized to charge and receive for each voucher not exceeding 25 cents, to be paid by the pensioner."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill empowering fourth-class postmasters to administer oaths to pensioners."

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. If there be no inquiries in regard to the bill, I will ask the previous question upon it.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like, before the gentleman demands the previous question, to inquire as to the necessity for empowering fourth-class postmasters in cases such as those named in the bill to administer oaths.

Now, you understand that there are more notaries public in every community than there are postmasters, and they are more convenient, and more competent to do this business. A notary public, for instance, must have a seal, as prescribed by the laws of his State. He must keep a record of oaths administered, and there is a certain responsibility imposed upon him, and he can be punished for making a false certificate.

Now, I say that there is no necessity for enlarging the number of officers authorized to administer these oaths, and especially that fourth-class postmasters should not be authorized to do it. It does not subserve anybody's convenience, because there is always a notary public in every community in which there is a postmaster, and two or three to every postmaster.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. KILGORE. That is the case in Texas. I suppose Texas ought to be a model for every other State in the Union. There is a law regulating notaries public. There is no law regulating the taking of affidavits before postmasters. This law does not provide any punishment for a false certificate, or for perjury, or for anything of that kind. Besides, the stamp of a postmaster is not protected as is the seal of a notary public. The stamp with which he cancels letters in his office lies about his office. Anybody in the office can use it. The clerks can use it. Most fourth-class post-offices are not kept under the rigid rules which prevail as to offices of higher grade. Any man can walk in there any hour of the day and pick up this stamp and use it, and nobody would think anything of it.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. KILGORE. The energies of the Pension Bureau have recently been devoted to the detection and prevention of fraud in the Pension Department. You propose now to open the door again by authorizing fourth-class postmasters to administer oaths, and to authenticate them by simply applying the stamp of the office used in the canceling of letters.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the stamp of the office must be used in connection with the postmaster's signature..

Mr. KILGORE. The signature and the stamp.

Mr. RYAN. This only applies to vouchers.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand—the vouchers upon which they draw the money. I do not think that fourth-class postmasters ought to have authority to administer oaths at all, unless they are required to keep seals, just as notaries public would be required under the law to do. A notary public is required to protect his seal and record the work he does.

Mr. BRYAN. Is it not just as easy to get access to the seal of a notary public, as it is to get access to the stamp of a postmaster?

Mr. KILGORE. No; a notary is generally required to keep his seal away from the public.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no.

Mr. KILGORE. He is in Texas.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman speaks about keeping a record. A notary keeps no record of oaths administered.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes, he does.

Mr. PICKLER. Not in our country.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, you should amend the law of your State. I was a notary public twenty-five years ago in Texas, and I had to keep a record of every transaction. We are twenty-five years ahead of you. I had a book in which I recorded the fact that on a certain day Mr. So-and-so was sworn on a certain subject, and that kind of record is evidence in court.

Mr. PICKLER. That did not do away with the necessity for a signature.

Mr. KILGORE. The seal and signature go together.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. There is a law now authorizing certain officers to administer oaths. The same law provides the punishment in case of misconduct. Now, not nearly all of the justices of the peace in this country have seals. Not nearly all notaries public have seals. The object of this bill is to enable pensioners living in a neighborhood where there is no notary public, miles and miles away from the county seat, to take their pension vouchers and go before the postmaster in their immediate neighborhood. A man can not go to the county seat and be sworn to his voucher before the 4th day of the month, the day his pension becomes due. The law punishes him if he attempts to post-date his voucher at all. The object of this bill is simply to make it more convenient to the pensioner, when he comes to make an affidavit for the purpose of drawing his pension.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Why not make this bill applicable in all cases where a man applies for a pension as well as to vouchers?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Before a man can practice as an attorney in the Pension Bureau he must be admitted there. I do not know that we want to open that up at all,

Mr. NORTHWAY. But a great many applicants apply in their own names, and make out their own papers. Why not have the oath administered by a fourth-class postmaster?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Well, Mr. Speaker, that question did not come before the committee. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN], who urged the convenience it would give to his constituents throughout that Territory.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I agree with this bill, but I should like to see it enlarged.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. That question did not come before us, and we did not enlarge it.

Mr. HULICK. I desire to offer an amendment to this bill by inserting the words "free of charge," in the sixth line of the first section, and by striking out all in lines 10, 11, and 12. That is to authorize the postmasters to charge and to receive for each voucher not exceeding 25 cents, to be paid by the pensioner. I think the bill should pass as it was first introduced, with the words "free of charge" inserted. I think these soldiers should have the benefit of the execution of these vouchers for nothing. Now, I do not know how it is at other places, but my experience is that all the officers who execute these vouchers and papers for soldiers do not charge a cent for it.

Mr. LUCAS. That is voluntary.

Mr. HULICK. That is voluntary. I think it ought to be made compulsory.

Mr. PICKLER. These fourth-class postmasters hardly get enough now. These pensioners will all come in on the same day, and what is he going to do with the pensioners and his duties as postmaster at the same time?

Mr. HULICK. I believe that if the office is worth holding at all they ought to contribute that much.

Mr. LACEY. In many instances their salaries are not $12 a year.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. There are a great many of these postmasters whose compensation is almost nominal. The object of this bill is to meet the convenience of the pensioners, and to save them, maybe, a day's journey. The compensation of the postmasters is so little that it seems to me that it would be wrong that they should do this work free of charge, when other parties have been allowed a compensation for doing it.

Mr. HULICK. As I see my amendment meets with considerable opposition I withdraw it.

Mr. NORTHWAY. By a law which is almost universal they will not charge anything.

Mr. WAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifteen."

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I did not understand the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana on the left.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I think I had the floor, and did not yield it. I ask the previous question on the amendments and on the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question for information. I understand that as the law now stands a person making a false oath or false affidavit before certain officers can be prosecuted for perjury or false swearing. Now, if you were to clothe the fourth-class postmasters with authority to administer oaths without carrying with it the other proposition, that all persons who made false oaths before that fourth-class postmaster shall be guilty of perjury or false swearing, then there would be no law to punish false swearing in a case like this.

Mr. LUCAS. It will be a case of perjury, it does not matter before whom the false oath was made.

Mr. KILGORE. Perjury and false swearing are different things.

Mr. LUCAS. If a man makes a false oath before any person authorized to administer oaths he is subject to the penalty.

Mr. KILGORE. That is not always recited in the statute.

Mr. LUCAS. That is not necessary.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, section 5392, which has just been handed to me, I think entirely covers this, and from a hasty glance at it it is just this: that punishment for perjury is not for making a false oath before a particular officer, but before any officer.

Mr. KILGORE. That is, a false oath in a judicial proceeding.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. But this is in pension cases.

Mr. KILGORE. Ah!

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I desire to have the Clerk read this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

5392. Every person who, having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person in any case which the law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate by him subscribed is true, willfully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000 and by imprisonment at hard labor not more than five years, and shall, moreover, thereafter be incapable of giving testimony in any court of the United States until such time as the judgment against him is reversed. (See section 1750.)

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TRACEY). If there be no objection, the committee amendments will be agreed to in gross.

Mr. WAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether the amendment that I offered is pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the other gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] had the floor and declined to yield, so that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WAUGH] is not pending.

Mr. WAUGH. I will ask, then, whether it is in order to offer that amendment now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is now pending.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSION ACT OF JUNE 27, 1890.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the committee I call up the bill (H. R. 7574) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pension to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pension to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pension to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890, be so amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. If any officer or enlisted man who served ninety days or more in the Army or Navy of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who was honorably discharged, has died, or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow without other means of support than her daily labor, or minor children under the age of 16 years, or a child or children who then are, or shall subsequently, prior to attaining the age of 16, become insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his military or naval service, be placed upon the pension roll from the date of the application therefor under this act, at the rate of $8 per month during her widowhood, and shall also be paid $2 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under 16 years of age, and also for each insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless child of such officer or enlisted man, of whom she has the care and custody, irrespective of age; and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, leaving a child or children as above described, or if such soldier or sailor left no widow, such pension shall be paid to such child or children until the age of 16, and to such insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless children, the pension, whether heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted either under this or any former statute, shall continue during the life of such children or during the period of such disability: Provided, That such condition of insanity, idiocy, or permanent helplessness shall have originated and existed prior to the arrival of such child or children at the age of 16 years: And provided further, That said widow shall have married said soldier or sailor prior to the 27th day of June, 1890: And provided further, That in case of the death of a soldier or sailor herein described from causes not chargeable to his service in the Army or Navy, leaving a widow to whom he was married subsequent to the 27th day of June, 1890, and leaving, by a former marriage, a child or children under the age of 16 years, or insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, such child or children shall be pensioned in like form and manner as if no widow had survived. All pensions under this section shall commence from the date of filing the application therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. OUTHWAITE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill H. R. 7574, and I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I would like to hear the bill read, Mr. Chairman.

The bill was again read as above.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill one question. Does the bill contain a provision for pensioning soldiers' widows who remarried and whose new husbands have since died?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. No, sir. The bill has no relation to that subject at all.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the report on that bill read.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I will ask to have the report read as a part of my remarks, retaining the right to the floor.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana (pending the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD without being read and that I be permitted to make a brief explanation.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I would like to have the report read, and then I would like to hear the gentleman's explanation also.

The report (by Mr. ERDMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 7574) to amend section 3 of the act approved June 27, 1890, and submit the following report:

The act of June 27, 1890, provides in section 3 for pensions for the widows and minor children of soldiers who served ninety days and were honorably discharged from service in the late war. That section also provides that—

"In case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless the pension shall continue during the life of said child, or during the period of such disability, and this proviso shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted under this or any former statute."

The construction of this proviso has been the source of much contention in the Pension Bureau and Interior Department. It will be observed that the proviso does not authorize the placing on the rolls of the name of an idiotic, insane, or permanently helpless child, but simply provides that in case a minor child is insane, etc., the pension shall "continue." The construction placed on this clause by Assistant Secretary Bussey was that it could apply only to those who were under the age of 16 years at the date of the passage of the act.

In a comparatively recent decision Assistant Secretary Reynolds holds that it can apply to those under 16 years of age at the date of application under that act, and also to those who have once been admitted to the pension rolls as minors in their own right, or through increase to the widow on their account, but that it does not operate to place independently on the pension roll those permanently helpless, who have never been pensioned as minors, and who are at date of application over 16 years of age.

Whatever may have been the intent of the framers of the act of June 27, 1890, it will be conceded, no doubt, that this construction is as wide as the words employed in the proviso quoted admit of. This limited operation of that proviso, however, gives rise to distinctions which have no foundation in the essential status of the applicant, and which, therefore, appear invidious. If a soldier dies leaving an insane child 15 years of age, that child is pensionable for life under this law. If the child, in every respect as helpless, be 17 years of age, he is not pensionable for any period, although the proviso is founded clearly on the idea that an idiotic or insane child is to all intents and purposes always a minor. The consequence is that numerous private bills are introduced from year to year to pension those who are not pensionable under the provisions of that act as construed, and yet who come within the alleged intent of the framers of that act.

There have been introduced in the present Congress and referred to this committee, up to the 6th day of July, 1894, 64 such bills, and a very considerable number of them have been favorably reported, where the circumstance were such as to meet certain well-defined requirements; the requirements insisted upon the committee in reporting private bills have been incorporated in the general bill herewith reported. It is clearly desirable that relief in matters of this kind should be given by general enactment rather than by private legislation, because the facilities of the Pension Bureau to determine whether each case meets the requirements imposed are much better than those of a Congressional committee, and especially because it is impossible for Congress to take cognizance of each individual case which may be deserving.

The new legislation involved in the bill herewith is as follows:

First. If a soldier leaves a widow and a child who, prior to attaining the age of 16 years, had become, or shall become, insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, the widow shall receive $? per month on account of such child so long as he may be dependent on her, without regard to his age.

Second. If the soldier leave no widow, or if the widow die or remarry, such helpless child, as above described, shall be entitled to pension without regard to his age.

Third. If a soldier leave a widow who is not pensionable under any law, because the soldier's death was not due to his service and because she married him subsequent to June 27, 1890, any children he may leave by a former marriage may be pensioned as if he had left no widow.

The proviso that such condition of idiocy, insanity, or permanent helplessness must have arisen prior to the beneficiary's having attained the age of 16 years is an important one. Since 1866 the law has pensioned minor children of certain soldiers, and, as already suggested, this more recent enactment proceeds on the theory that in certain cases this essential minority has never ceased.

The case of a soldier's son who has attained the age of manhood in health and vigor and then by some misfortune becomes helpless is an entirely different matter, and to omit the proviso referred to would result in the anomaly of paying a pension for life to the son or daughter of a soldier when at some remote period such son or daughter may have become "permanently helpless" by reason of old age or some other cause equally unrelated to the father's military service.

The purposes of the bill herewith seem to be such as to deserve the support of all who desire system, uniformity, and equity in the pension laws; several bills tending to the same end have been introduced, but the one now reported seems to be by far the most symmetrical and to be admirably adapted, both in form and verbiage, to meet the object aimed at.

Your committee, therefore, recommend that the bill do pass, after being amended by striking out the word "has" in line 9 on page 1 and the word "the" before the word "case" in line 27, page 2.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words ni regard to this bill. I will state to the members of this Committee of the Whole that the bill has no reference whatever to remarried widows of soldiers. There is another bill relating to that subject that may come up later, but this has nothing to do with that question. I yield now to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] such time as he may desire to explain the object of this bill.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what attention has been given to the reading of the report, but if it has been followed and understood the bill probably needs no further explanation. I will say, however, briefly, that by the act of 1890 it was intended that soldiers' children who were helpless or imbecile and who were over 16 years of age should still remain upon the pension roll regardless of their age, but the law was construed by Assistant Secretary Bussey not to include any children who were over 16 at the time of the passage of the act. Since then Assistant Secretary Reynolds has reconsidered the question and has held that all children who have been at any time pensioners, notwithstanding the fact that they were over 16 years of age in 1890, when the law was passed, are entitled to be placed upon the rolls for such time as they continue to be helpless.

The object of this bill is to add somewhat to the number covered by Secretary Reynolds's decision, namely, those other helpless or imbecile children who were over 16 at the time their mothers became pensioners, or at the time their fathers died, and were thus deprived of the benefit of the act of 1890. The number included in this amendment will not be very great, but they are as helpless, and they appeal as strongly to the charity of the nation, as those who were younger when the law of 1890 was passed.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. As I understand this bill, it applies only to imbeciles.

Mr. LACEY. To imbeciles and permanently helpless children. For instance, there are some children who are paralyzed and absolutely helpless, and all of that class are, for the purposes of this act, regarded as entitled to the same pension as children under 16 years of age.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. If they became helpless before they arrived at the age of 16?

Mr. LACEY. Yes. The bill prescribes the condition that they shall have become helpless or imbecile before arriving at the age of 16. All there is in this bill is that it makes the scope of the law wider and takes in some cases not now covered. Every private bill providing for a case of this kind that has come up in the House has been passed without serious objection, and this bill simply relieves the House from the necessity for considering that class of private pension bills. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to take up the time of the House in presenting a lengthy argument upon the merits and equities of this bill. I do desire, however, to briefly present a few reasons which, in my mind, are conclusive as to the merits of the measure and the justice and equity of its provisions. All general laws on the statute books relating to the late civil war have been fromed and passed from time to time for the avowed purpose of making suitable and proper provision for the needs of those persons who participated, either as soldiers or sailors, in the war; or in case of death of such soldier or sailor, then for the relief and benefit of such of his family who were dependent upon him for support.

I shall not go into the merits of such legislation, because I believe there is not a member present who for a moment questions the justice and equity of such laws. The law of July, 1861, provided that all who should thereafter, or had theretofore, entered the United States service during the then existing war, should be pensioned for all the disabilities incurred in such service; thus making it the legal contract, duty, and obligation of the Government to pension all who received or incurred any disabilities while in such service. And to the payment of all such invalid pensions the Government was as much bound, and as legally obligated, as it was to pay the monthly wages of the same soldiers and sailors, or to pay interest or principal of any bond issued to raise funds to carry on military operations.

Subsequent legislation has regulated the rates of pensions to be paid for certain specific disabilities and pro rata rates for unspecified disabilities. Later on the act of July 27, 1890, was passed, which provided for such veterans as had rendered ninety days' service, and who had in any way, except from their own vices, become disabled. The law was passed as a kind of a half-way service pension, and has all the merits of any law pensioning survivors of the Mexican war or other wars in which the nation has been engaged. I believe that in lieu of the terms of said act of July 27, 1890, a general service pension law should have been passed placing every surviving veteran of the late civil war on a level with the Mexican war survivor, but so much opposition to such a sweeping measure developed in certain quarters that the general service pension proposition had to be abandoned at the time and a more moderate measure substituted, and which became a law on the above date.

There are two classes of beneficiaries only who come under the scope of pension laws. One, the veteran survivor, the other, those of his surviving family who were dependent on him when living for support. Certainly no one would question the justice of the laws providing a pension for the mother whose dependence for support had rested upon her deceased son; certainly no one would question the justice of the law granting a pension to the dependent widow and the infant child of a deceased veteran.

By a wise provision of the pension enactments it has been made a law that when a child of a deceased soldier reached the age of 16 years the title of such child to pension should cease. This provision was based upon the belief that upon arriving at that age the child was no longer dependent. I believe this provision to be a just one in all ordinary cases, and for such I would not favor any extension of the age limit. But there is one class that the law exempts from this age limit, and to such children as are included in its terms does the right to a pension continue so long as the condition remains the same. This class to which I allude is that which includes children who are insane, idiotic, or permanently helpless and in such condition are receiving pensions or have claims for pension pending before arriving at age of 16 years. To all such the law continues the dependent child's pension during life or until recovery from such mental or physical condition.

Now, I do not believe that there can exist a man, North or South, East or West—certainly not a member of this House—who would take from the widow or the fatherless child of a deceased veteran the small pension allowed them by law. And existing law is found to provide for such idiotic, insane, or permanently helpless child only in cases where the father dies before such child is 16 years old, and where an application for a pension for such insane, idiotic, or permanently helpless child shall be filed before such child reaches the age of 16 years. If such application be not made before arriving at the age of 16 years, no general law makes provision for pension, and so the result is that a large number of private pension bills are introduced at every session of Congress, and usually as many as reach consideration are passed, while those not reached in order go over from one Congress to another until finally passed, abandoned, or the insane, idiotic, or permanently helpless child of a deceased veteran dies, when of course all proceedings in the case terminate.

Now, if a policy for the relief of dependent infants of deceased soldiers has any merit—and I believe it is altogether meritorious—such merit and justice arise from the fact of the dependence of the surviving child as measured by its ability to support itself or become self-supporting. A healthy child of sound mind at the age of 16 certainly is very near if not always quite arrived at the age where it can care for itself. But the insane or idiotic child whose mind is gone, or the child whose physical disabilities are of a character to cause permanent helplessness, such a child is no more and no less a child at the age of 16 than at the age of 5 years. For such, age and time are nothing so far as dependence goes. They are absolutely dependent just as long as such condition exists, not only for food and raiment, but equally dependent for constant care and attendance of some other person.

Now, under existing law, where a veteran of the war dies his infant child or children under 16 years can be pensioned by application being made therefor prior to such child's having reached said age. And if applied for prior to that age in behalf of an insane, idiotic, or permanently helpless child, then, by existing law, the arrival at the age of 16 years does not terminate the pension, but it continues during the life of such unfortunate child or until recovery from such condition. But if a veteran who has a child thus afflicted dies the day his child passes its sixteenth birthday, then under the law as it now stands there is no relief. To meet this class of the most unfortunate and dependent persons that exist I have introduced this bill. A widow and a dependent mother are pensioned because of dependence on the deceased soldier, and there is no question raised as to age—simply one of implied dependence in one case and proven dependence in the other.

Now, does it require any argument to prove to any member the fact that each and every insane, idiotic, or permanently helpless child continues just as helpless and as absolutely dependent so long as life and said condition continue? Can any member cite, or even suggest, any human being more dependent than one of the class embraced by the terms of this bill? Can any member give me any reason, or suggest any reason, why an insane, idiotic or permanently helpless child should be pensioned (and we all concede properly so pensioned) for life while thus conditioned when its veteran father happened to die at such time as to permit a claim to be filed before it was 16 years old, while another veteran's child in precisely the same totally dependent condition, whose father, by the grace of God, was permitted to live and earn a support for his afflicted child for a year or so after it was 16 years old and then died, should be left unprovided for by a law intended to relieve those dependent on the dead soldier for support.

Should the fact that by the life of the veteran father being spared so that he might by his efforts and labor provide for his unfortunate offspring a year or so longer, more or less, and by such extension of his life save the Government from the expense caused by the first-described case—I repeat, should such condition be construed into enacted law to the exclusion of those who must of a necessity be totally and helplessly dependent throughout life regardless of age? Wherein does age lessen the dependence of these classes? Year after year passes, but to such unfortunates they bring but one change—the nearer approach of the day of their final deliverance from the shackles of physical helplessness or darkness of mental affliction.

This bill provides that it shall only apply to such insane, idiotic or permanently helpless children as shall be or have been in such condition at or prior to the age of 16 years. If I were left to my own views I would have made it provide for any child thus afflicted at the time of the decease of its veteran father up to the age of 21 years. But knowing that there was opposition to extending the age limit I have carefully made it harmonize with existing law, so far as possible.

As an illustration of the practical working of existing law, I will relate an instance which came under my personal observation. A neighbor of mine, one of the noblest men I ever knew and a resident of my own State and county, a veteran soldier of the late war, a man universally respected by all who ever knew him, and a man whose personal friendship I had the privilege and honor to possess—this veteran soldier had a child which was permanently afflicted, so as to be one of the classes for which I desire to have the pensionable age limit extended by the passage of the bill under consideration.

This man, in conversation with me, has expressed his sense of independence of pension for himself, and said that should he be taken away he knew his wife would be cared for, as both himself and wife were willing to work, and he feared not for either. But he would add, "Should I be taken, what in God's name would become of my poor child, unable to even care for herself and as helpless as an infant?" And while this noble man feared naught for self, wife, or child while his life was spared, so that by his own effort they would be supported, yet the thought of death to him had one great terror, and that one fear was the thought that his afflicted child would be left helpless and possibly dependent on strangers.

For the wife alone he felt comparatively little anxiety, because he knew that she would bravely meet her contest with the world, but the thought of leaving her not only to fight life's battle for herself, but with a helpless daughter, who could not so much as care for herself and required her mother's constant attention—all this he realized, and with tear-filled eyes and trembling voice I have heard him say, "God only knows what will become of my poor dear child if I am called away."

Time passed along, the child reached an age exceeding 16 years, and still a kind Providence spared his life and he by industry and his daily labor was able to care for his family. Every day almost he could be seen leading his afflicted child along the street after his day's work was finished and he never seemed so happy as when he was caring for her. But one dread day while engaged in his work as usual he was torn and mangled in a railroad accident and brought home to die. And there began the battle of life, for his widow, who not only must earn her own living, but provide for her helpless child. While this condition existed I began to collect data upon which to endeavor to secure favorable action upon a private pension bill which I proposed to introduce. While I was thus engaged a merciful Providence called the child to meet its father in the better world, where once more father and child were reunited, free from the anxieties and helplessness which clouded their happiness in this life.

Now, in this case which I have cited the child, though over 20 years age when his father died, was then and had always been as helpless as when born, so far as earning its own support was concerned. And though the child I have cited has been by death relieved from earthly dependence, yet there are still living some similar cases where God has spared the veteran father, and he has been and still is able to support such child, but which will upon death of such soldier father become absolutely dependent upon public or private charity. For such as these I plead, and for the three classes covered by this bill I bespeak the favorable action of this House.

This measure has the approval of the Commissioner of Pensions; has, I believe, the unqualified approval of every member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I trust will become a law and thus relieve the wants of the most helpless class possible to exist dependent on any soldier or sailor veteran of the war.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I desire to offer an amendment to this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. HUTCHESON. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be considered as closed.

Mr. HUTCHESON. The gentleman certainly would not take advantage of me by making such a proposition——

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Oh, no. I am asking unanimous consent.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Well, I oppose the suggestion. I propose to address myself to this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. The gentleman can not offer an amendment until the general debate is closed.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Mr. Chairman, very well, I will indicate the amendment I desire to propose. I shall at the proper time move to amend by striking out, on page 3, in lines 39 and 40, the words "27th day of June, 1890," and inserting "19th day of April, 1865."

Mr. Chairman, I am aware of the fact that any opposition to a pension bill coming from a person occupying my position, subjects him to the imputation of a sentiment of disloyalty. I am perfectly prepared to stand that imputation, if anybody wishes to impose it. Personally during the war I encountered the Federal soldier; and I have as much respect for him either during the war or since as any man on this floor. But, sir, I believe a limit has been reached in regard to pension legislation.

No government on earth has ever been more liberal in the pension laws which it has enacted. No government, either as to the class of its pensioners or as to the amounts which have been voted to them, has ever approached the liberality of the Government of the United States. As a Democrat and as a Southern man, I say that I approve all the legislation on that subject, save the act of 1890. I believe that the dependent-pension act of 1890 ought never to have been enacted. And to propose to extend the limit beyond the act of 1890, as is sought by this committee, is asking of this country more than I think ought to be yielded to the greatest patriots and the bravest soldiers.

The gentleman says that this bill does not embrace the widow who marries a second time and whose second husband dies. That is true, Mr. Chairman; but it ought to embrace such a case. It ought to have expressed the utmost limit or boundary to which it is intended to go. The purpose seems to be to extend this boundary or limit piecemeal; and the question might just as well be encountered here as anywhere else on earth. For myself I stand prepared to say that within the limit of the legislation already enacted I propose to give the various pension laws my sincere support; but to extend that legislation one jot or tittle farther would be, in my judgment, to do injustice to the generation of men, North and South, who have come into this world since the war terminated.

Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to say that because a person who is the child of a man who was in the war has become imposed for his support upon the community in which he lives by reason of his disability, the burden ought to be lifted from the shoulders of that community and transferred to the General Government. What is the proposition of this bill? It is that if a man who ended his career as a soldier when the war closed, marries thirty years after the termination of that service, his children upon his death should be entitled to pensions notwithstanding his death bears no relation to the service in which he was engaged from 1861 to 1865. What connection or relation does such a child sustain to the General Government?

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. HUTCHESON. With very great pleasure. I would like to be enlightened.

Mr. LACEY. I am very much interested in the question which the gentleman is discussing; but he will allow me to call his attention to the fact that the amendment which he proposes would not change the bill, because the bill covers only children who were over 16 years of age on the 27th of June, 1890.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I do not understand the point of the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman's amendment proposes, as I understand, to strike out on the third page the words "27th day of June, 1890," and insert "13th day of April, 1865," the date of the surrender. Now, any child born prior to that date in 1865 would already be covered by the bill with the gentleman's proposed amendment, and those who were under 16 years of age on the 27th of June, 1890, are already covered by the act of 1890. Consequently the gentleman's amendment would not have any effect at all, or at least very little.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Does the gentleman mean my amendment would destroy the effect of the bill?

Mr. LACEY. No; it would not affect it in any way.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Why put that into the bill? What is the purpose of it?

Mr. LACEY. Let me state the reason. The act of 1890 provides that all children under the age of 16 at the date of the passage of the act and permanently helpless should go or remain on the rolls at $2 a month with the widow, or without the widow at such rates as children under 16 years of age would be entitled to; and that their pension should continue notwithstanding their subsequent attainment of the age of 16 years.

But the amendment which the gentleman proposes would not accomplish the purpose he has in view, because children under 16 at the date named (June 27, 1890) are already covered by the bill, and those who were born prior to 1865 would be covered by the bill, even amended as the gentleman proposes. Therefore the amendment would affect but few children. Those born prior to 1865 would be covered by the amended bill and those born within sixteen years of June 27, 1890, are covered by the act of 1890 as it now stands, so that but few children would be affected by the proposed amendment.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Well, I am not after remedying your bill. I am opposed to it altogether.

Mr. LACEY. But your amendment does not affect anybody who would be a beneficiary under the bill.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Then you would have no objection to the adoption of the amendment?

Mr. LACEY. It would make no difference whether adopted or not.

Mr. HUTCHESON. You have no objection to it, then?

Mr. LACEY. Personally I have not, because it would not hurt anybody.

Mr. HUTCHESON. But, Mr. Chairman, I am contending that the whole purpose and object of extending the pension rolls, and the policy of the Government in that direction, ought to have an end; that it has gone far enough; that there should be no claim for its further extension, and that it ought not to be extended under any circumstances and to meet anybody's desires one jot or one tittle further. The people of this country have done enough in that direction, and it is time to call a halt.

Now, addressing myself to the particular beneficiaries of the proposed bill. Who are they? They are people defined in the bill as "lunatics, idiots, or persons permanently helpless." I take it, sir, that this bill would not be enacted into a law, or proposed here at all, unless it was expected to cover a large class of such people. I take it that there must be a general necessity for it in the North and in the East and in the West or it would not be presented here; that there must be a great many people who are either lunatics, idiots, or helpless, to whom it would apply. How far are they helpless?

Why, a great many people are born in this country helpless, and are never anything else but helpless all through their lifetime. Do you propose to pension all of them? Helpless because they are born tired; because born like the Coxeyite, indisposed to do anything, and therefore incapable of doing anything? Is that your policy? The purpose of this bill is to transfer what legitimately belongs to every State, county, and locality in the Union, the care of its own infirm, and make the people of the whole country take that care off of your shoulders and impose it upon their own. Is it just or right?

Do you feel that it is either just or right or proper to ask such a thing? Have you a case in mind where you believe that a man, a boy, or a girl bears any relation to this Government by virtue of which that child morally or properly ought to be a pensioner on its bounty? If you do, it is because you have become accustomed to believe that every infirmity of any man which imposes a public burden on any part of the community, ought to be transferred from their shoulders to the General Government. I do not believe in such a doctrine. If you have that conception, it is wrong. It is not a righteous conception; it is not a just conception, and such men should turn their faces from it forever.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that from the statistics I have at hand from Maine, which are compiled in this book before me, there is no necessity for such a bill, and the same is true of Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, and the whole East. They are being depopulated and there is no necessity for such a bill. They are coming to our country.

They have no children 16 years of age among them. They are all coming South to our country, and to grow up with it, and we will take care of them; the idiots, the incompetent, the permanently helpless, the impotent men, women, and children shall have our care alike, and we will not ask the Federal Government to take them off our hands and grant them pensions at the expense of the whole country.

I dislike to encroach any more than the hour to which I am entitled under the rule, and if some gentleman would like a portion of my time I would be willing to transfer it to him, reserving the remainder.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to submit a few remarks in this connection.

Mr. HUTCHESON. On my side of the question?

Mr. BLAIR. Well, no, not exactly. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUTCHESON. I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire for ten minutes and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of replying to the suggestions of the gentleman from Texas. Our people are not all going to Texas, I can assure him. He must not assume that they are all lunatics. Perhaps it may be said of those who do go there that they exhibit symptoms in that direction, and if he will extend his charity to them we shall be very glad.

But, sir, this bill only undertakes, as I understand it, to make provision for those helpless and permanently helpless children who by reason of their relations to those who were the defenders and preservers of the country only, to those soldiers who defended the flag and the Union and gave to Texas the opportunity to be something—this bill applies only to the helpless children of such men as that.

But, what I rose for was this: I wish to recall the circumstances under which the act of June 27, 1890, came to be a law. As you know, it is now approaching the period when naturally the soldiers of the late civil war will be placed upon the service pension list. Every man of them under the precedents of our history would now or soon be the recipient of a service pension without regard to disability, whether it existed or not, or if it existed, whether contracted in or out of the service. The great number of those thus likely to be thrown on the Treasury of the country excited some hesitation on the part of men who are interested in the financial situation of the Union, and led to the devising of this law, which is intended to be, and if carried out in its purpose would be, a law to provide for all who actually need assistance from the Treasury of the country, whether the disability was contracted in the service or subsequently thereto.

It is eminently a just law, a law which, so far as it goes, is a substitute for another equally just proposed law—that is to say, a service pension law which would extend its benefits to every man who fought in the Army of the Union and who was honorably discharged therefrom, but which would be more burdensome to the Treasury. This measure of June 27, 1890, should not, for this reason, be looked upon by our people in any part of the country as an increase of expense or an additional imposition beyond what is just, or what might naturally be asked of the people of the land. It is a relief to the Treasury rather than an addition to its proper burdens.

Now, in the construction of this act under the present Administration, there has been a great limitation of the benefits which it was supposed the soldiers of the Union in actual need would receive from it. As you remember, the rating is for a disability therein described, and pensionable under that act, between $6, the minimum, and $12, the highest amount; and by the construction of the Department originally, whenever there was found to be a disability, irrespective of the time of its origin, which would have been pensionable if it had been contracted in the service, and would have amounted, or an aggregate of such disabilities as would have amounted, to $6, the pension was allowed.

That construction of the act I think has virtually and properly been overruled, for the act proposed really to give a pension for any disability which incapacitates for work, for labor, for obtaining a support by manual exertion. That incapacity might be the result of increase of age; it might be the result of a gradual diminution of the vigor of the constitution of the individual; it might be the result of an amputation; it might be the result of an aggregate of disabilities which impair the capacity for earning a support. For such disability this law proposed to give a pension, and it being in its nature a substitute for a service pension, it was the design of those who framed the act and who passed it, as I understood it—and I advocated it from the first, in fact I framed it in its inception—that for any degree of disability, even the lowest, those that needed a pension should receive at least the minimum, which was $6.

Now the construction of the present administration is such that no man gets any pension unless his disability is at least equal to the amount of $6. It is very difficult to tell precisely what the rule which they actually administer is. I am informed that at least one-half the applications are now being rejected. But it was the design of the act that for any disability—the slightest disability—there should be the $6 allowed, and then the rating extended upwards to $12, as the disability increased. Take a man for instance who earned $30 per month, that $30 being necessary for his support, and constituting under the act "a support." If he was disabled in his earning capacity a single dollar, the intention was that he should be entitled to a $6 pension, and the addition of the remaining $6 of disability would have given him the $12 rating under the act.

Now, one would think from the present action of the Department that they began at the other extremity, and taking a man totally disabled from laboring at all, gave him $12, and then rating his disability backward or downward, if a man's disability was $6 less than total disability, then they gave him the $6. In other words, unless he is disabled to the extent of $24, out of the $30 earning capacity necessary for his support, only then does the $6 rating attach, and only in such case can a man receive any pension at all.

I do not think the actual administration of the law is so harsh as that, but absolutely I can find no other principle, I can divine no other principle upon which the Department administers its rules construing the act of June 27, 1890. Now this was not the design of the act by any means, and I desire to offer an amendment which embodies the purpose of the original bill, and the ideas of Congress and of the country in its enactment. I will read it, and then yield the floor, asking that the question be taken upon it when the vote is taken on other amendments. My proposed amendment is as follows:

Amend by adding to the end of the bill the following:

And be it further enacted, That any honorably discharged soldier pensioned under the act to which this is an amendment shall be entitled to the minimum rating of $6 per month for any degree of disability described in said act, and the minimum pension for any disability pensionable under any law shall be $6 per month.

At the time this act and other acts were passed in former Congresses, we had arrived at a state when we looked upon it as discreditable and disgraceful for this country to be distributing among the defenders of the Union two, three, and four dollars per month, an unappreciable assistance, if any assistance at all, in the obtaining of a livelihood. Sometimes a minimum of $4 a month was suggested, never less than that to my knowledge, and by others the minimum limit of $6 was favored, and that was put into this bill. It was supposed that it would be extended to the other pension laws, and that very soon the result would be that no pension would be given to anybody under any law with a less minimum rating than $6. I think the country might well revive itself, might well lift itself up to that degree of liberality and I hope that the House will adopt the amendment.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Before any gentleman takes a part of my time, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question in regard to the action in extending the act of June 27, 1890. Does it change the existing law in regard to marriages?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. No, sir; it does not do that. When the act of June 27, 1890, was passed there was a provision offered that this law should not apply to children of marriages contracted after the passage of the act. The idea of this bill is not to break away from that. It leaves it like it was.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think there is an objection to this bill that all fair-minded men ought to recognize. I know this is a sectional, not a party question. You gentlemen of the North think that whenever gentlemen express any opinion concerning the question of pensions different from yours that that introduces a sectional feeling; and I know you do. I know I shall excite such a feeling, but I shall not, therefore, withhold views I believe most just. Now, let us be fair with each other in the statement of it; let me be fair with you and you be fair with me.

When the soldier was in the army, and up to the very day he ended his connection with the Government, every obligation, every relation between him and the Government up to that time and every debt that the Government owed to him or to his ought to be recognized and provided for.

Now, your bill proposes that after a man's service, after the war, without even being a married man, without having a child, he can create a new relation and impose upon his Government a new condition, a new obligation, which did not exist at the time the compact between him and the Government ended. At the time he was in the service he had neither a wife nor child.

You say to him that he can get married and the Government will take care of him, will take him up in its arms, as well as his wife and children. He now has the privilege of imposing upon this Government the responsibility of taking charge of his newly acquired wife and child.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUTCHESON. Certainly; I should be pleased to.

Mr. PICKLER. The same line of argument would prevent any soldier's widow who married him after the war from receiving a pension after he dies.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I do not think she ought to.

Mr. PICKLER. You think a widow ought not to receive a pension?

Mr. HUTCHESON. I do not think a woman who married a soldier after the war should be pensioned.

Mr. PICKLER. You think the act of June 27, 1890, is wrong?

Mr. HUTCHESON. I do.

Mr. PICKLER. Then what pensions are you in favor of?

Mr. HUTCHESON. I am in favor of pensioning every man who became disabled in the service. I am in favor of taking all the burdens that a man had at that time; but do not tell me that the Government obligated itself to care for that man when he marries a woman and takes a new burden of imposing any number of his family upon the Government, and that this child or that child is likewise to be taken in charge, and thus to take from the community in which he lives the obligation of taking care of his children. The obligation in Indiana, in Massachusetts, in Maine, in any State of this Union is to be transferred from that State and to be imposed upon the entire country.

Now, is that fair? Does any man believe that it was ever contemplated that that was the scope of the employment of the soldier at the termination of his contract with his Government. If that be the obligation of his service, then a man could go on and by the facilities of divorce, have one, two, three, four, or five widows, and one, two, three, four, or five children imposed upon the Government, to be supported by it, and I shall never consent that the boundaries of pensions under the act of July, 1890, shall be extended one jot or tittle beyond where they are to-day. I say then, gentlemen, if you have meritorious individual cases, bring them up and let us consider them upon their individual merits.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not know whether the gentleman is one of those who have been making objections, but that has been the fruitful objection on Friday nights in the consideration of individual bills.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I have never attended one of your night sessions.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman knows that that is one of the objections brought up. Gentlemen say, "Bring in a general bill;" and now, when a general bill is brought in, it seems that the gentleman wants us to discard the general law and go back to the individual cases.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Oh, no; my objection to your general law is, that it is liberal enough now. If you have exceptional cases bring them up. The territory of this law ought not to be extended. I believe there are just men on your side who believe so. Ah, Mr. Chairman, a gentleman of this House, on the other side, this morning, addressing himself to the next bill upon your Calendar, with reference to widows, said to me, "HUTCHESON, that bill is wrong in principle, and if I dare I would vote against it, but I do not think there is sufficient in it to justify me in making a stand."

You feel that way. You feel that it is a question between you and your constituents, that it is a popular move; but for God's sake consider that there is a section of this county where the people are not your constituents, and are entitled to justice. We have been prostrated by war. It was the right of the Government to prostrate us. Our country was the scene of secession. We have suffered and we have not complained. We have gotten up from the grave and have come into this Hall, as we should have done, and we have submitted here to legislation of this kind beyond all reasonable limits.

But there must be some point at which it shall cease. Is not this the point? Appealing to your sense of justice, we ask if this is not the point to make a termination of it? We ask if the mad waves of your pension legislation ought not to cease and must not cease right here?

Mr. PICKLER. Let me remind the gentleman that when these soldiers volunteered they were told that they would be taken care of if they became old and decrepit, and that their widows and children would be taken care of; and in this legislation we are only following up what has been done by the Government for the soldiers of other wars. Now, we on this side think that you would not have any Texas down there by this time, that you would not have any government, that you would not have the honor of representing a great people in this, the greatest popular legislative body in the world, if it had not been for these soldiers and their work.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Well, if that be the case, you have reserved to yourselves in that way the richest jewel in the crown of this nation. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be back in the Union, but I am not glad to be back and to have imposed on our shoulders, simply because we sinned, every obligation and every burden that belongs to other localities. Bear your own burdens, gentlemen, with the same manly fortitude that we bear ours. Do not undertake to lift them from your shoulders and put them upon mine and upon the shoulders of the people whom I represent; do not undertake to put upon us burdens which belong exclusively to you. It is unjust; it is wrong.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow one other question?

Mr. HUTCHESON. With great pleasure.

Mr. PICKLER Is not the gentleman willing to act as well and as fair by the soldiers of the last war as the Government has acted by the soldiers of the Indian war and the Mexican war?

Mr. HUTCHESON. Well, I do not know just how to answer that question. Comparisons are never safe standards of right.

Mr. PICKLER. That is a very easy question.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I will tell you what may be the case—the liberality which you have extended to those soldiers of late years may have been for policy's sake, so as to extend your own line.

Mr. PICKLER. You have always been in favor of those pensions, have you not?

Mr. HUTCHESON. No, sir. I have never been in favor of any of them. I have not been in Congress to vote for them. But my proposition is—and this applies to men in the South as well as to men in the North, without reference to politics or location——

Mr. PICKLER. Your State is receiving a large amount of pensions now.

Mr. HUTCHESON. What are they? As I said awhile ago, the gentleman from Maine has a great many constituents who have gone down into our country because they were starving in their own State. But we are glad of it, and we will take care of them. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I have had some opportunity for observation as to men going down to Texas and "starving." A good many men from Maine have gone down into the gentleman's State to make investments, and many of them have returned in a good deal nearer to a starving condition than they were when they left home. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUTCHESON. You refer now to the carpet-bag crowd. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. No, I do not. I refer to people who took their money down to Texas and who came back without any money. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUTCHESON. Well, I will tell you about that. Your people have been in the habit of having money provided for them, the Government feeding them with a spoon, but our people have been accustomed to make money only by the use of their own strong arms, and your friends were not prepared to labor down there as our people do. There is no spoon-feeding in our State. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman misunderstands me. What I say is that some of our people went down to Texas with their own money, which they had earned in our State by laboring with their arms and with their brains—as I am glad to learn from the gentleman, people do in Texas—and they invested their money in what your people represented to be good for something, but which turned out to be good for nothing, and, as a result, those people came home a good deal more starving than when they left. [Laughter.]

I have had no personal experience, but I have had an opportunity for some very close observation. My own father went down to your State and built some houses down there. He was considered a fairly wealthy man when he left home and I know that he brought nothing back when he returned. He left about all he owned behind him there.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Then it is in Texas now. Well, we will take care of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. It is either there, or else, as the late James Fisk once observed, "it has gone where the woodbine twineth."

Mr. HUTCHESON. Well, we will take care of the property and the woodbine, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. PICKLER. I wish to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Texas as to the amount of pensions that his State receives. Here is the report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, which snows that Texas received $1,025,000.80.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I am glad to know that she is getting a portion of the swag. [Laughter.] But I am opposed to extension of another pension tunnel under the vaults of a depleted Treasury. Now, your own Union soldiers down there are the best investments you have in Texas to-day. And the best investment you can make of your ex-soldiers is to send them to Texas, where they will not require pensions from the Government. We do not have any cases of people there requiring pensions from the Government. We get on without the bounty of the Government, notwithstanding we were cut to the very ground, mown down as hay, and put out in the sun to blister and dry. And the Government Federal soldier down there agrees with me that this thing has gone the full length of decency.

Mr. PICKLER. It was not our fault.

Mr. HUTCHESON. No; it was our sin. But let me tell you, the Saviour of mankind, at the time that He gave a man permission to rise, did not say, "You got down there by reason of your own sin." Magnanimity does not manifest itself in that way.

Mr. PICKLER. We have given you a million dollars a year to help you rise.

Mr. HUTCHESON. And we would be glad to have yon take it back. Give us justice. We scorn your money. We ask simply to be put upon the plane of justice. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. What can we do to restore you? What position do you want us to put you in? And how can we do it?

Mr. HUTCHESON. Take the tariff off of every article. Give us "free trade and sailors' rights;" and then we shall be a glorious country, and there will be no necessity for pensions.

Mr. CURTIS of New York rose.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I gladly yield to the gentleman from New York. I have given way to him in battle, and am ready to do it again.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. My friend speaks of giving way on the tariff. I would like to know whether he is addressing himself to the Republican or the Democratic side of this House.

Mr. REED. To the Executive, of course! What is the use of talking to anybody else on that subject.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I am addressing my remarks entirely to the leader of this House whenever I speak to the Republican side. They all look up to him; he is the only man on that side. [Laughter.] I will hear the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. I think it is rather a shame to waste the time of the House that is desirous of disposing of this pension legislation by a discourse on the tariff, when such discourse should always under a Democratic Administration be addressed to the Executive, either in public or in private. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUTCHESON. Mr. Chairman, if there is any man who ever wasted the time of this House, it is the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. How can the "only man on this side" waste time?

Mr. HUTCHESON. Simply because it is not your time; it is ours.

Mr. CURTIS of New York rose.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I will hear his suggestion.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Your appeal for giving way on the tariff was addressed, as you say, to the gentleman from Maine as the representative of the Republican minority of this House.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I regretted to observe that you had forgotten the eighty-odd majority of the Democratic party in this House, and its majority in the Senate, and its Executive, who are all combining to arrange a tariff that may possibly be satisfactory to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Will you vote for it?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. But we do not expect you to address your appeal to us until you give us an opportunity for another election. Then we will hear your appeals.

Mr. HUTCHESON. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS] has not stated any question, there is nothing for me to answer. But the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] presented a question as to whether or not the House should be further troubled in the way of consumption of time upon a question which ought to be addressed to the Executive. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no man in this House who has consumed its time as the gentleman from Maine has done.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Has he wasted it?

Mr. HUTCHESON. Yes; he has wasted the time of this House, and he has never done it except when exploiting before the House what he did in the Fifty-first Congress. He has spent time before his own mirror portraying to this generation, for fear they should forget them, the glorious feats that he performed in the Fifty-first Congress. While he has thus contemplated himself he has appeared as the greatest hero of modern times. As the consumer of time in this House he has not any equal now or in any past generation.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, his feats have not been equaled since this Congress began.

Mr. HUTCHESON. No; and they will never be excelled until this Government ceases to exist as a government of the people and gives way to government of one man.

Mr. PICKLER. You have confessed during this Congress, by the action of this very House, that he was the greatest man in the country.

Mr. HUTCHESON. May I ask how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has eighteen minutes.

Mr. HUTCHESON. That is as long as I want, but I want every minute of it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to speak to the Democratic members of this House, because I know that they are fully convinced on this subject, and understand the condition of the Treasury. But my friends here on the right, to them I feel that I ought to have an opportunity to say a few things, to have some personal talk with them, just as neighbor to neighbor; no antipathies, no bitterness, no complaints, and nothing but a friendly chat.

I want to know where you think this thing of the extension of pensions ought to end? Is it ever to end? Do you think it ought to end anywhere, except after you have succeeded in putting every man who was in the service of the Government in the late war on the pension rolls?

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir; not until every one of them is there.

Mr. HUTCHESON. That is just what I expected you would say.

Mr. GROUT. Just as was done with regard to the Mexican war veterans——

Mr. HUTCHESON. Certainly.

Mr. GROUT. Perhaps not all of them to-day or at this immediate time, but gradually, a few at a time, until all are cared for.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Precisely; I understand what the gentleman means. It is what we have supposed. We have seen this thing going on year after year, Congress after Congress, step by step, inch by inch, going forward insidiously, but steadily, until you succeed in getting every man on the roll whether he needs it or not, whether he deserves it or not, who was concerned in any way in the late war in the service of the Union, whether actuated by patriotism or bought by bounty.

Mr. MAHON. I will tell you how far we will go.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Very well.

Mr. MAHON. The people of this country have decreed that no Union soldier, his wife, or his child shall ever die in a country poorhouse——

Mr. HUTCHESON. Exactly; you do not intend to take care of your poor.

Mr. MAHON. Nor while he lives shall he or they want the necessaries of life.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Is that your limit?

Mr. MAHON. And when they grow feeble and old that they shall be properly cared for and made comfortable.

Mr. HUTCHESON. That is your limit, then?

Mr. MAHON (continuing). And it does not make any difference whether it costs $150,000,000 or $500,000,000 a year, the people of this country say that they shall have it.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I understand; you do not care anything about the expense, provided somebody else pays it.

Mr. MAHON. No, sir; not at all. Because these people sacrificed everything, and it is owing to their sacrifices that we have a country to-day; and this Government, in view of that fact, should not stop to count the cost.

Mr. HUTCHESON. My opinion is that you can not better unman a people of a country than by such vicious legislation as that. It takes away all spur to individual effort, encourages idleness and dissipation, ending in helplessness.

Mr. MAHON. And that I propose to vote for.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Of course; I understand you. I expected you to do that. The gentleman never spoke more than two or three times on this floor, and each time it has been when he wanted to get his arm into the Treasury of the United States. The first time when I heard him was when the question of mileage came up here. You are a fit type of your party; you want all in the Treasury.

Mr. MAHON. No, sir.

Mr. HUTCHESON (continuing). He has been as silent and and quiet as a jay bird.

Mr. MAHON. I never said a word on the subject of mileage.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Why, we had a little encounter here about it. Do not you remember?

Mr. MAHON. Not about mileage; it was about taking pay when you were absent on private business and drawing salary in violation of the law.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Well, it was on the question of reduction of pay.

Mr. MAHON. And you put your arm in the Treasury then, and I did not put mine in.

Mr. HUTCHESON. But I did not put my hand into the Treasury. You got yours in——

Mr. MAHON. Oh, no; I did not.

Mr. HUTCHESON. And the only time, as I have said, that we ever heard the gentleman grow eloquent and flowers of speech spring from his lips, was when he was trying to get into the Treasury of the United States. He has been a silent man all the time.

Why, I staid in the same house with the gentleman for a long time, took my meals at the same table with him, and I never even heard him ask for anything at breakfast, he was so modest. [Laughter.] Could not speak to the servant girl without blushing. They had to force it on him. I never heard such a silent man in all my life; and on all other public questions he is a grave, silent, and thoughtful man.

I noticed the gentleman when he first came, and I said to myself he has come here to learn and will give us after awhile the effect of his wisdom that he is now storing up as if for a battery to be used hereafter.

I expected to see some splendid portrayal upon some great public question, but the first thing which evoked a remark from the gentleman was the question whether or not he should sign a certificate and get his pay while not being present. He made three eloquent speeches upon that subject.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. HUTCHESON. Let me get through with the gentleman's record.

Mr. PICKLER. His record is all right.

Mr. HUTCHESON. The next time I heard the gentleman was when he had a private bill in here, when he wanted to get $5,000 for somebody, and I believe it got three votes. He made a speech upon that. Certainly it did not get a respectable corporal's guard. He made a splendid speech upon that; and now, when the question of pensions is up—a question of getting a little more money from the Treasury—we now hear from him again. That is his record, and having completed I will yield to the gentleman's question.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] believes it to be the duty of the Government to save the Union soldier, his widow, and his orphan children from going to the poorhouse. As I understand the gentleman from Texas, he wants them to go to the poorhouse.

Mr. HUTCHESON. No; I do not. I will state my position. I want to put the soldier and every member of his family who constituted a part of that family when he was a soldier in such a situation that they shall be cared for, but I do not want——

Mr. PICKLER. We have done a great deal better than that by the Mexican soldiers and their widows.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I understand why you did that. It was a case of "tickle me and I will tickle you."

Mr. PICKLER. You did that.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Certainly not I, but my party did it; you permitted us to do it in response to what you were doing.

Mr. PICKLER. Have not your committee passed a bill increasing——

Mr. HUTCHESON. I have not done anything; am not on that committee.

Mr. PICKLER. A committee composed of a majority of your side of the House have at this session reported a bill to increase the pensions of the widows of Mexican soldiers.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I do not know what they have done.

Mr. PICKLER. You ought to look at the record.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I never voted for one of them, and I never will.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. HUTCHESON. Why, certainly, with the greatest of pleasure. I will take all of these interruptions out of my time, Mr. Chairman. I believe I am entitled to an hour and a quarter.

Mr. MILLIKEN. At the time when the Mexican pension bill passed, we did not succeed in doing anything. We passed the dependent pension bill through Congress. It went through pari passu with the Mexican pension bill, but your President, while he signed the Mexican pension bill, vetoed the other one. So, although you say we were doing one thing in order to get the other through, we did not get the other.

Mr. HUTCHESON. That is not the only time I have differed with my President. If he had taken my views, we should have had free silver. We do not agree entirely.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not true that that Mexican pension bill is confined to soldiers who have reached the age of 62?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, most of the old Union soldiers are getting pretty well along toward 62.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There are lots of them who are not more than 50.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But there has been no proposition by gentlemen on your side to take similar action with reference to Union soldiers.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Then I can not yield for any more interruptions.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I want to ask my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] if he will vote to pension all the Union soldiers when they get to be 62 years old?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am opposed to service pensions for anybody.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then you are opposed to the Mexican pension bill?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I am.

Mr. GROUT. Why do not you introduce a bill to repeal it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the use of doing that?

Mr. HUTCHESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] I will say that there is nobody for whom I have a kindlier feeling than I have for that distinguished gentleman. Not only did his father go to Texas, but his brother lives there——

Mr. MILLIKEN. My cousin.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I knew it was a member of the family. And we have given him one of the fairest flowers of the State, a woman in whose veins the blood of the Cæsars courses. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am sorry that it was not myself instead of my cousin who went to Texas, if what the gentleman from Texas states is correct.

Mr. HUTCHESON. We should be very much delighted to welcome the gentleman, and while I do not know what the gentleman's situation is, and whether he can accept the offer, if he will come down to Texas, we will show him plenty more such women. [Laughter.]

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but we will give the gentlemen women who will not breed boys or girls who are impotent, disqualified, or lunatic, but who will breed such people, male and female, as are capable of taking care of themselves without pension from the Government. These women we will give to you will not raise any such scabs as you say live in your country.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. HUTCHESON. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have no doubt about the beauty and the elegance of the women you have there; but what kind of men have you there to invite us to come?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I ask unanimous consent to answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I am very much indebted to you, gentlemen, for your kind and considerate attention to what I have had to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. GROUT. I hope time will be given the gentleman.

Mr. REED. We would like to pass this bill if we could get the chance.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I hope there will be no objection to my request for unanimous consent to close general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to close general debate. Is there objection?

Mr. HUTCHESON. I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. You have had your hour.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I know I have, but I would think myself to be the most selfish man in the world if I should take the time to the exclusion of others; but if nobody wants the time I shall not object.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Is it in the power of the Committee of the Whole to close general debate on motion?

The CHAIRMAN. Not general debate.

Mr. HUTCHESON. If nobody wants to speak, of course I will withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his objection. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana to close general debate? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. General debate is closed.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Now, I ask that the bill be read for amendments.

The bill was read by sections.

The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, section 3, strike out the word "has" before the word "serve;" in line 23, page 2, strike out the word "enlised" and insert the word "enlisted;" in line 27, after the words "and in," strike out the word "the."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments. If there be no objection, they will be considered as adopted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. If there be no further amendments to offer, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable report.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding to the end of the bill the following:

"And be it further enacted, That any honorably discharged soldier pensioned under the act to which this is an amendment, shall be entitled to the minimum rating of $6 per month for any degree of disability described in said act, and the minimum pension for any disability pensionable under any law shall be $6 per month."

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. On that I raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I think it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not understand the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I raise the point of order that it is not germane to the section we are considering.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The point of order is well taken, too.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. The section relates wholly to widows and children. This is a proposition to go beyond that, and to reach what was intended to be reached and was reached by section 1 of the act. This is an amendment to section 3.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the remarks of the gentleman supporting his point of order that this proposed amendment is not germane. I hardly think it can be subject to that objection. I would say to him that I do not purpose to embarrass the progress of this bill by calling the yeas or developing the absence of a quorum or anything of that sort. The amendment must be germane, I think, because the bill itself is one that purposes to amend the general act of June 27, 1890; and this is a proposition to amend one section, which must be germane to the bill,

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. Well, if the gentleman imagines that it will in any way embarrass his bill I will do so; but I do not see how it can do so.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I think it will do so.

Several MEMBERS. Let the Chair rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment upon the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BLAIR. I prefer to take the sense of the House on the amendment unless it be ruled out of order. I ask the Chair to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill before the committee is an amendment to the act usually described as the act of June 27, 1890. The Chair is in doubt as to this amendment being germane. The proposition of the bill before the committee is to amend a certain section of the law so as to make it apply to insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless children. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire is to fix a minimum for pensions for enlisted men. The Chair will sustain the point of order, though not entirely clear that it ought to be sustained.

Mr. BLAIR. I can appreciate the position of the Chair, and I will not press the amendment.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the ninety days' service required by the said act, approved June 27, 1890, shall be computed from date of enlistment up to and including the day the soldier received his discharge and pay.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MAHON. I do not think the point of order can lie against that amendment, because the bill refers to the ninety days' soldiers, the beneficiaries of this law. The widow or child claiming a pension must establish the fact that the soldier was in the service ninety days, and the amendment seems to be clearly germane.

The CHAIRMAN. At what point in the bill does the amendment come in?

Mr. MAHON. It is intended to be a new section, prescribing how the ninety days referred to in the preceding part of the bill shall be computed. It is simply declaratory. I think that if the Chair will give me his attention for a few minutes I can satisfy him that the amendment is germane and ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment is intended to apply to this bill, the Chair thinks it is not drawn carefully enough to effect that purpose. It seems to the Chair that the amendment is drawn rather so as to amend the original act.

Mr. MAHON. It applies to any soldier's widow, because the widow or the children of any soldier in the service come under this law. I desire to make a brief statement, and then, if there is any serious objection to the amendment, I will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MAHON. There are very few cases that this amendment will cover, but there are some. The act simply says that the soldier shall have been in the service ninety days, but a few cases have been brought before the Department where the discharge had been made out two or three days before the soldier received his pay, and the Department ruled that the ninety days must be computed from the date of the enlistment to the date of the discharge.

For instance, a soldier is off on sea service; his discharge is made out at the headquarters of the regiment and dated on the 28th of June, but the soldier does not receive it until the 6th or 7th of July, so that he is kept in the service doing military duty for more than ninety days, and yet, because of the date of his discharge, his service is computed at, say, eighty-nine days, and his widow and children are debarred from the benefit of the act. Now, the fair construction of the law is that the ninety days shall be computed from the date of the soldier's enlistment until the time when he receives his discharge and pay, for he always receives his pay at the time he is discharged.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I feel like insisting on the point of order, but before doing that I will ask the gentleman to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN], the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, has always been so fair, so kind, and so considerate toward members of the House in connection with legislation of this sort that when he makes a personal appeal like that I can not resist it, and I therefore withdraw the amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I make that motion for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee. Since this bill has been under discussion I have read the third section of the act of June 27, 1890, very carefully. That section contains this proviso:

Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic or otherwise perfectly helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of said child, or during the period of such disability, and this proviso shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted, or hereafter to be granted under this or any former statute, and such pension shall commence from the date of the application therefor after the passage of this act."

Now, comparing that with this bill I have arrived at the conclusion that the only difference between the law as it stands and the law as it will be if amended by this bill is that the law will then allow idiots, insane, and helpless children of soldiers who did not apply for pension before attaining the age of 16 years to make application now.

Under the act of June 27, 1890, all persons who were under 16 years of age when that act was passed and who were insane, idiotic, or otherwise perfectly helpless and who applied for pension before attaining the age of 16 years are continued on the pension rolls, and this bill, as I understand it, merely amends that law so as to allow such persons who did not apply for pensions before they had attained the age of 16 to apply now. Is that the only difference between the old law and the proposed amendment? Are these the only persons who could not apply under the old law but who will be permitted to apply if this bill shall pass?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I think I understand the measure in the way the gentleman suggests.

Mr. JONES. I want to know whether that is the only difference between the old law and the present bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I think so; that is the intention.

Mr. JONES. Has the Committee on Invalid Pensions made any estimate as to how many persons will come within the purview of this bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. No, sir; there is no way of making any such estimate. But from the very small number of private bills that have come before Congress embracing cases of this kind, I think the number will not be at all large.

Mr. JONES. As a matter of fact, I believe private bills of that character coming before Congress have encountered less objection than almost any other class.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Yes; with as little at least.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "prior," in line 39, page 3, strike out "27th day of June, 1890," and insert "19th day of April, 1865."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. HUTCHESON)—ayes 8, noes 114.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I make the point of no quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HUTCHESON and Mr. MARTIN of Indiana were appointed.

The committee proceeded to divide; but before the count by the tellers was concluded,

Mr. HUTCHESON. I withdraw the point.

So the amendment of Mr. HUTCHESON was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now, Shall the bill be laid aside with the amendments to be favorably reported to the House?

The question being taken, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. JONES)—ayes 129, noes 3.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. TRACEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. OUTHWAITE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7574) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pension to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890, and had directed him to report the same back with amendments and with the recommendation that the bill be passed as amended.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I call for the previous question on the amendments and on the bill to its engrossment, third reading, and passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the amendments, they were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSIONS OF NONRESIDENTS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. By direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions I now call up the bill (S. 1138) to repeal so much of a proviso of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes," and approved March 1, 1893, as relates to the payment of pensions to nonresidents who are not citizens of the United States.

I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES. I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Union Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. OUTHWAITE in the chair.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1138) to repeal so much of a proviso of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes," and approved March 1, 1893, as relates to the payment of pensions to nonresidents who are not citizens of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the fourth proviso of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1893, which reads as follows: "That from and after July 1, 1893, no pension shall be paid to a nonresident who is not a citizen of the United States, except for actual disabilities incurred in the service," be and the same is hereby repealed.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report accompanying the bill.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (S. 1138) which passed the Senate December 14, 1893, the purpose of which is to repeal an act prohibiting payment of pensions to certain nonresidents, and submit the following report:

A bill (H. R. 3935) to prohibit payment of pensions to foreigners and nonresidents was considered by the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the Fifty-second Congress and reported adversely in the following words (see Report No. 1509):

"The passage of such a measure would, in the opinion of your committee, work an injustice to a worthy class of persons who, by reason of services rendered and disabilities incurred by themselves or near relatives in the military or naval service of the United States in its time of need, have become entitled under existing laws to the recognition of this Government, but who, because of the reduced expenses of living, or for any other reason, have seen fit to take up their residence abroad. Such residence abroad, for whatever reason, even though permanent, is not, in the opinion of this committee, sufficient to justify the withdrawal of the pension which has been granted, and your committee therefore recommended that the bill do lie on the table."

This adverse report was made on May 27, 1892, but subsequently the proviso which it is now sought to repeal was passed as an amendment to the pension appropriation bill which became a law March 1, 1893. The provision referred to is as follows:

"That from and after July 1, 1893, no pension shall be paid to a nonresident, who is not a citizen of the United States, except for actual disabilities incurred in the service."

The repeal of this provision is recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions in his annual report, in which he makes the following statement:

"I respectfully ask your attention to this clause in the hope that you may recommend its repeal. It causes great trouble and annoyance to the excepted classes, who constitute the great bulk of nonresident pensioners, in compelling them to make proof that they belong to these excepted classes. And the final result is that payments under it are withheld from but few save widows and dependent mothers, who have little else for their maintenance. The saving is too little to offset the suffering inflicted in individual cases. If all nonresidents were refused payments of pensions some plausible argument might be made in support of such policy; but none can be urged in favor of this law, which, while giving annoyance to all, strikes only the most helpless.

"I should not feel warranted in asking attention to this law but for the fact that it entails much work on this Bureau in answering communications, and seems to yield little practical results except annoyance and apparent cruelty. I recognize to the fullest extent that my sole duty is to execute and administer the laws as they are enacted, fairly and honestly interpreted.

"Very respectfully,

"WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner."

In a letter addressed by the Commissioner of Pensions, under date of December 18, 1893, to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, referring to this law, he says:

"It has caused, and is causing, great trouble and annoyance to a large number of pensioners, especially widows and dependents, and the final result is that there are now about 2,000 cases suspended in which it is practically impossible to furnish the testimony necessary to secure a resumption of payment. I have already called attention to the propriety of repealing this act in my annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893. I believe that an early passage of this bill (S. 1138, to repeal said act) will be of inestimable benefit to a most worthy class of pensioners, for the suspension of whose pensions there does not appear to have been any satisfactory reason."

The reasons stated for the repeal of this act appear to be conclusive, and the committee are unanimous in recommending the passage of this bill.

In the report of this committee, as originally printed, it was inadvertently stated this action of repeal was "recommended by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the suggestion of the Commissioner of Pensions." As a matter of fact the report of the Secretary of the Interior is silent on this subject. The repeal is recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions as herein stated, and this report is presented to make this one correction, and does not otherwise differ from the report of the committee as originally printed.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. If no gentleman desires to be heard on this bill, I will ask that general debate be closed

Mr. JONES. I would like to occupy a short time.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Very well; I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. As much time as the gentleman desires.

[Mr. JONES withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I desire to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BLACK] such time as he desires.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], who has just taken his seat, is possessed, as he should be, of all the facts relating to the bill under discussion.

An effort was made some five or six years ago to have an act passed like that which it is now sought to repeal, and at that time I took occasion to find out how many and what class of people would be affected by the passage of such a bill. I made that examination a careful one, and I found—and my information since that time has justified my finding—that the class of people affected by the bill now pending and by the law which it is sought to amend, were largely dependents, the widows and dependents of soldiers who had received their pensions under the general laws, under all of the pension laws in force at the time of my first examination. Within perhaps a year I have received some letters from foreign parts, one of them from a very eminent officer in the consular service of the United States, giving illustrations of the hardship of the law as it stands upon the books.

The law as it stands upon the books affects unfavorably but very few men who were in the service of the United States, but it does affect many of their widows and their children. The amendment which is proposed by the committee to-day does not give a single dollar of pensions to any claimant in the world. It does not enlarge rights previously conferred upon any claimant. It provides that where a pension has been established under the laws of the United States, that pension, now suspended under the operations of the act of 1893, shall be restored the same as though that law had not been enacted.

The cases that have been brought to my attention are some of them exceedingly pitiful, and they arise under circumstances like these: Some men may have served in the Union Army for three or four years. He may have been originally a citizen of foreign birth, but, coming here long before the outbreak of hostilities, when the war came he enlisted.

He met with disabilities incurred in the service, and a pension was granted to him. In time he died from these disabilities, and the law gave a pension to his widow and his children. That widow, in her advancing years, moved by that strong instinct which all of us acknowledge, and especially [addressing Mr. JONES] which no Virginian will deny, the instinct of returning during the years of her sorrow and bereavement to the home of her youth, returned to the old country, where she and her husband were born, where they were married, and from whence they came to share in the struggles and the glory of the young republic.

Moved also probably by another motive than that of seeking sympathy of kindred and of blood, moved by the fact that in the old country the little sum that is paid to a widow will go further towards keeping her and hers in peace and comfort than it will in our more extravagant, bustling, and energetic land, moved by these which are among the strongest of human motives, she returned to her country, and it is to such people, only now numbering in all 2,000, that this bill seeks to afford relief from the hardships of a law which, speaking with due respect, I say was probably not well considered, and which certainly has been unfortunate in its operation. And in taking my seat I beg to recall the fact to my fellow Congressmen that this amendment will not make one just dollar's difference against the Treasury of the United States. It will relieve what the Commissioner of Pensions decribes here as "suspensions," and will do away with the hardship of introducing and making proof which, being made, would entitle these persons to a restoration of pensions.

Mr. JONES. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois, before he takes his seat, to please explain to the committee, if this bill passes, how it is that it will not save a cent.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I say it will not add a single dollar to any pension or give a new pension.

Mr. JONES. It will not put a man on the pension roll who has not already been on the roll?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. No, sir.

Mr. JONES. But it will restore a number who were dropped from the roll under the act approved March 3, 1893; and will not that add largely to our expenditures?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. They were not "dropped," but simply "suspended." They are still pending for restoration, in the way fixed by Department regulations.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman makes a distinction between "dropped" and "suspended."

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. But if this act is not passed, they will stay "suspended" until the gentleman will probably conclude that they are "dropped."

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. They could satisfy that law by returning to this country.

Mr. JONES. And becoming residents.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. And becoming residents, or by expensive proof of citizenship. But of what avail will that be with a poor old soldier or poorer widow? The law does not add to the Treasury charges; and I do not believe that the law we seek to repeal finds favor in the minds of the jurists and statesmen we have represented here, for the reason that it seeks to forfeit in fact without proper action, without trial, a right already given by law.

Mr. JONES. But a great many of these persons who were suspended never were residents of this country, but always resided abroad, except when they came over here to engage in the war, and were never citizens of this country. Was not that the fact?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I may say in reply that the laws gave the right to acquire citizenship from service. I do not know of a single pension that has been granted in the case of a resident who was not a citizen or entitled to become a citizen because of service in the Federal Army.

Mr. JONES. I have always understood that there were a great many.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I have no facts whatever that lead me or authorize me to say that a single pension drawn by a nonresident soldier was not paid to a citizen of United States, and I know it was paid to a soldier of the United States. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. If no one else desires to use any time, I will not detain the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be closed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable report.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JONES. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 20.

Mr. JONES. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN].

The committee divided.

Mr. JONES (pending the count by tellers). Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum with the understanding that the bill is to be withdrawn.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I object to the withdrawal of that bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. What was the vote, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no report made by the tellers.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire first to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to go to the Private Calendar now that we are in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. It will be necessary for the committee to rise and report action on the pending bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Then I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. TRACEY] having resumed the chair, Mr. OUTHWAITE, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (S. 1138) and that after consideration the bill had been withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole reports that they have had under consideration a bill (S. 1138) to repeal so much of a proviso of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes," and approved March 1, 1893, as relates to the payment of pensions to nonresidents who are not citizens of the United States, and that by unanimous consent the bill had been withdrawn.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will please wait a moment. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] asks unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PORT OF ENTRY AT OAKLAND, CAL.

Mr. BARTLETT, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 7181) to make the city of Oakland, county of Alameda, State of California, a port of entry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to this report being presented?

Mr. PICKLER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. What became of the bill that was before the committee when it rose?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That bill was withdrawn.

Mr. PICKLER. That required unanimous consent, did it not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when the bill was withdrawn.

Mr. PICKLER. I objected to the withdrawal of that bill, and I still object. It could not be withdrawn except by unanimous consent. That is the most righteous bill reported to-day, and I do not want it withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report submitted by the gentleman from New York will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent for members of the House to print remarks in the RECORD on pension bills.

Mr. JONES. I object. I do not object to gentlemen who have spoken extending their remarks.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT], who is the author of the bill which passed here a awhile ago, and which I had the honor to contest, have leave to print his remarks in the RECORD. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not object to that.

Mr. JONES. Certainly not.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 56.

The motion of Mr. MARTIN of Indiana was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. OUTHWAITE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MRS. FRANCES CORSE.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions I call up the bill S. 882.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of Mrs. Frances Corse, widow of the late Bvt. Maj. Gen. John M. Corse, at the rate of $100 per month.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCETTRICK].

Mr. JONES. I think we ought to have the report read.

Mr. MCETTRICK. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MCETTRICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 882) granting a pension to Frances Corse, widow of Gen. John M. Corse, have given the matter careful attention and respectfully report:

The services rendered by Gen. Corse during the late war were among the most valuable rendered by any officer of his rank. They were marked both by distinguished personal bravery and by the importance of the results to the country. His popular fame rests largely upon the brilliant defense of Allatoona, which saved Gen. Sherman from the loss of his supplies and made possible, without delay, the celebrated "march to the sea." Gen. Corse's services were not, however, limited to this single action. His first severe wounds were received in an equally courageous defense of Missionary Ridge. Gen. Grant, in his Personal Memoirs (chapter 44, volume 2, pages 77, 78), thus describes Gen. Corse's part in that action:

"Sherman was out as soon as it was light enough to see, and by sunrise his command was in motion. Three brigades held the hill already gained. Morgan L. Smith moved along the east base of Missionary Ridge; Loomis along the west base, supported by two brigades of John E. Smith's division; and Corse, with his brigade, was between the two, moving directly toward the hill to be captured. The ridge is steep and heavily wooded on the east side, where M. L. Smith's troops were advancing, but cleared and with a more gentle slope on the west side. The troops advanced rapidly and carried the extreme end of the rebel works. Morgan L. Smith advanced to a point which cut the enemy off from the railroad bridge and the means of bringing up supplies by rail from Chickamauga, where the main depot was located. The enemy made brave and strenuous efforts to drive out troops from the position we had gained, but without success. The contest lasted for two hours. Corse, a brave and efficient commander, was badly wounded in this assault."

The defense of Allatoona is described by Gen. Grant as follows (Personal Memoirs, chapter 59, volume 2, pages 355, 356):

"On the 5th of October the railroad back from Atlanta was again very badly broken, Hood having got on the track with his army. Sherman saw after night, from a high point, the road burning for miles. The defense of the railroad by our troops was very gallant but they could not hold points between their intrenched positions against Hood's whole army; in fact they made no attempt to do so; but generally the intrenched positions were held, as well as important bridges, and stores located at them. Allatoona, for instance, was defended by a small force of men under the command of Gen. Corse, one of the very able and efficient volunteer officers produced by the war. He, with a small force, was cut off from the remainder of the national army and was attacked with great vigor by many times his own number.

"Sherman from his high position could see the battle raging, with the Confederate troops between him and his subordinates. He sent men, of course, to raise the temporary siege, but the time that would be necessarily consumed in reaching Corse would be so great that all occupying the intrenchments might be dead. Corse was a man who would never surrender. From a high position some of Sherman's signal corps discovered a signal flag waving from a hole in the blockhouse at Allatoona. It was from Corse. He had been shot through the face, but he signaled to his chief a message which left no doubt of his determination to hold his post at all hazards."

How keenly Gen. Sherman himself appreciated the importance of the defense of Allatoona is indicated by the more elaborate statement of the battle and of the dispatches which passed, in his Memoirs, appended to this report.

Gen. Corse's military record, printed with this report, shows that he was in the field, except when confined in hospital for a few weeks by wounds, almost from the beginning to the end of the war. The record also shows that his promotion was remarkably rapid for a volunteer officer who was only 26 years of age when the war began. He was five times wounded. These wounds prevented his taking proper exercise, crippled him for many forms of active exertion, and undoubtedly hastened his death. His restless energy of character, however, led him to continue in business after the close of the war, and made him one of the most efficient postmasters of Boston. He was appointed postmaster by President Cleveland in the autumn of 1886, and his reappointment was asked in 1891 by nearly the entire business community, regardless of party, and was recommended by the two Senators from Massachusetts.

Gen. Corse was always sensitive regarding appeals to the public bounty. He received his education at the Military Academy at West Point, but resigned and studied law soon after completing his term, and only accepted a position again in the public service when the war broke out. He was offered a place as lieutenant-colonel in the regular Army in 1866, but in spite of his wounds, which would have entitled him to early retirement on pay, he refused the place and was mustered out of the service. He never applied for a pension, and refused to consider the suggestion that he was entitled to one. He would have been entitled to a high rate of pension for his wounds from the close of the war to the time of his death, on April 27 last, and would probably have drawn from the Treasury more money than the Government will ever be called upon to pay under the pending bill.

The amount asked in the pending bill is smaller than that given to the widows of many other general officers of the rank of colonel. Among those who have been voted special pensions of $2,000 per annum are the widows of Gen. George H. Thomas, Winfield Scott Hancock, John A. Logan, Frank P. Blair, Philip H. Sheridan, George Crook, George B. McClellan, and John C. Frémont. Pensions of $1,200 per annum have been granted by Congress to widows of Gens. Silas Casey, James A. Mower, George I. Stannard, JohnF. Hartranft, Samuel P. Heintzelman, G. K. Warren, James Shields, Robert Anderson, James B. Ricketts, Lovell H. Rousseau, Walter C. Whitaker, and George A. Custer.

The widow of Gen. Corse, who is niece of President Pierce, was not willing at first to have the question of a pension for herself considered, but consented to have the matter presented by her friends to Congress on behalf of her boy of 9 years. Gen. Corse left little property, the health of the widow is not good, and the pension asked is a positive necessity for the boy's education. It is with the purpose of giving him such an education that the widow is willing to accept the grateful recognition of Congress.

The bill herewith reported has already passed the Senate without opposition, and your committee recommend its passage by the House.

APPENDIX.

[Extracts from Memoirs of Gen. William T. Sherman.]

We crossed the Chattahoochee River during the 3d and 4th of October, rendezvoused at the old battlefield of Smyrna Camp, and the next day reached Marietta and Kenesaw. The telegraph wires had been cut above Marietta, and learning that heavy masses of infantry, artillery, and cavalry had been seen from Kenesaw (marching north), I inferred that Allatoona was their objective point, and on the 4th of October I signaled from Vinings Station to Kenesaw, and from Kenesaw to Allatoona, over the heads of the enemy, a message for Gen. Corse, at Rome, to hurry back to the assistance of the garrison at Allatoona. Allatoona was held by a small brigade, commanded by Lieut. Col. Tourtellotte, my present aide-de-camp. He had two small redoubts on either side of the railroad, overlooking the village of Allatoona, and the warehouses, in which were stored over a million rations of bread.

Reaching Kenesaw Mountain about 8 a. m. of October 5 (a beautiful day), I had a superb view of the vast panorama of the north and west. To the southwest, about Dallas, could be seen the smoke of camp fires, indicating the presence of a large force of the enemy, and the whole line of railroad from Big Shanty up to Allatoona (full 15 miles) was marked by the fires of the burning railroad. We could plainly see the smoke of battle about Allatoona and hear the faint reverberation of the cannon.

From Kenesaw I ordered the Twenty-third Corps (Gen. Cox) to march due west on the Burnt Hickory road and to burn houses or piles of brush as it progressed, to indicate the head of column, hoping to interpose this corps between Hood's main army at Dallas and the detachment then assailing Allatoona. The rest of the army was directed straight for Allatoona, northwest, distant 18 miles. The signal officer on Kenesaw reported that since daylight he had failed to obtain any answer to his call for Allatoona; but while I was with him he caught a faint glimpse of the telltale flag through an embrasure, and after much time he made out these letters: "C.," "R.," "S.," "E.," "H.," "E.," "R.," and translated the message: "Corse is here." It was a source of great relief, for it gave me the first assurance that Gen. Corse had received his orders and that the place was adequately garrisoned.

I watched, with painful suspense, the indications of the battle raging there, and was dreadfully impatient at the slow progress of the relieving column, whose advance was marked by the smokes which were made according to orders; but about 2 p. m. I noticed with satisfaction that the smoke of battle about Allatoona grew less and less, and ceased altogether about 4 p. m. For a time I attributed this result to the effect of Gen. Cox's march, but later in the afternoon the signal flag announced the welcome tidings that the attack had been fairly repulsed, but that Gen. Corse was wounded. The next day my aid, Col. Dayton, received this characteristic dispatch:

"ALLATOONA, GA., October 6, 1864—2 p. m.

"Capt. L. M. DAYTON, Aid-de-Camp:

"I am short a cheekbone and an ear, but am able to whip all h—l yet. My losses are very heavy. A force moving from Stilesboro to Kingston gives me some anxiety. Tell me where Sherman is.

"JOHN M. CORSE,
"Brigadier-General."

Inasmuch as the enemy had retreated southwest, and would probably next appear at Rome, I answered Gen. Corse with orders to get back to Rome with his troops as quickly as possible.

Gen. Corse's report of this fight at Allatoona is very full and graphic. It is dated Rome, October 27, 1864; recites the fact that he received his orders by signal to go to the assistance of Allatoona on the 4th, when he telegraphed to Kingston for cars, and a train of thirty empty cars was started for him, but about ten of them got off the track and caused delay. By 7 p. m. he had at Rome a train of twenty cars, which he loaded up with Col. Rowett's brigade and part of the Twelfth Illinois Infantry; started at 8 p. m., reaching Allatoona (distant 35 miles) at 1 a. m., on the 5th, and sent the train back for more men; but the road was in bad order and no more men came in time. He found Col. Tourtellotte's garrison composed of 890 men; his reënforcement was 1,054; total for the defense, 1,944. The outposts were already engaged, and as soon as daylight came he drew back the men from the village to the ridge on which the redoubts were built.

The enemy was composed of French's division of three brigades, variously reported from four to five thousand strong. This force gradually surrounded the place by 8 a. m., when Gen. French sent in, by flag of truce, this note:

"AROUND ALLATOONA, October 5, 1864.

"COMMANDING OFFICER, UNITED STATES FORCES, Allatoona:

"I have placed the forces under my command in such positions that you are surrounded, and to avoid a needless effusion of blood I call on you to surrender your forces at once and unconditionally.

"Five minutes will be allowed you to decide. Should you accede to this, you will be treated in the most honorable manner as prisoners of war.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

"S. G. FRENCH,
"Major-General, Commanding Forces Confederate States."

Gen. Corse answered immediately:

"HEADQUARTERS FOURTH DIVISION, FIFTEENTH CORPS,
"Allatoona, Ga., October 5, 1864—8:30 a. m.

"Maj. Gen. S. G. FRENCH, Confederate States, etc.:

"Your communication demanding surrender of my command I acknowledge receipt of, and respectfully reply that we are prepared for the "needless effusion of blood" whenever it is agreeable to you.

"I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"JOHN M. CORSE,
"Brigadier-General, Commanding Forces United States."

Of course the attack began at once, coming from front, flank, and rear. There were two small redoubts, with slight parapets and ditches, one on each side of the deep railroad cut. These redoubts had been located by Col. Poe, United States engineer, at the time of our advance on Kenesaw the previous June. Each redoubt overlooked the storehouses close by the railroad, and each could aid the other defensively by catching in flank the attacking force of the other. Our troops at first endeavored to hold some ground outside the redoubts, were soon driven inside, when the enemy made repeated assaults, but were always driven back.

About 11 a. m. Col. Redfield, of the Thirty-ninth Iowa, was killed and Col. Rowett was wounded, but never ceased to fight and encourage his men. Col. Tourtellotte was shot through the hips, but continued to command. Gen. Corse was, at 1 p. m., shot across the face, the ball cutting his ear, which stunned him, but he continued to encourage his men and to give orders. The enemy (about 1:30 p. m.) made a last and desperate effort to carry one of the redoubts, but was badly cut to pieces by the artillery and infantry fire from the other, when he began to draw off, leaving his dead and wounded on the ground.

Before finally withdrawing, Gen. French converged a heavy fire of his cannon on the blockhouse of Allatoona Creek, about 2 miles from the depot, set it on fire, and captured its garrison, consisting of 4 officers and 85 men. By 4 p. m. he was in full retreat south on the Dallas road, and got by before the head of Gen. Cox's column had reached it; still several ambulances and stragglers were picked up by this command on that road. Gen. Corse reported 231 rebel dead, 411 prisoners, 3 regimental colors, and 800 muskets captured.

Among the prisoners was a Brig. Gen. Young, who thought that French's aggregate loss would reach 2,000. Col. Tourtellotte says that for days after Gen. Corse had returned to Rome his men found and buried at least a hundred more dead rebels, who had, doubtless, been wounded, and died in the woods near Allatoona. I know that when I reached Allatoona on the 9th I saw a good many dead men, which had been collected for burial.

Corse's entire loss, officially reported, was:

Garrison.	Killed.	Wounded.	Missing.	Total.
Officers	6	23	6	35
Men	136	330	206	672
Total	142	353	212	707

I esteemed this defense of Allatoona so handsome and important that I made it a subject of a general order, viz, No. 86, of October 7, 1864:

"The general commanding avails himself of the opportunity in the handsome defense made of Allatoona to illustrate the most important principle in war, that fortified posts should be defended to the last, regardless of the relative numbers of the party attacking and attacked. * * * The thanks of this army are due and are hereby accorded to Gen. Corse, Col. Tourtellotte, Col. Rowett, officers and men, for their determined and gallant defense of Allatoona, and it is made an example to illustrate the importance of preparing in time and meeting the danger, when present, boldly, manfully, and well.

"Commanders and garrisons of the posts along our railroad are hereby instructed that they must hold their posts to the last minute, sure that the time gained is valuable and necessary to their comrades at the front

"By order of Maj. Gen. W. T. Sherman.

"L. M. DAYTON, Aide-de-Camp."

SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 26, 1894.

Prayer by Rev. ISAAC W. CANTER, of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, for the consideration of Congress, a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, submitting an estimate for an appropriation of $200, to be embodied in the sundry civil appropriation bill under the head of "Engraving and printing," for the rent of office for the agent of the Post-Office Department to supervise the distribution of stamps by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, citing a list of property owned by the United States as the custom-house sites at Astoria, Oregon, and other places, which is now unoccupied, and recommending that provision be made by Congress for proper authority to sell and dispose of the same; which the Secretary proceeded to read.

Mr. DOLPH. Does the communication come in response to a resolution, or is it submitted without a request for information?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication does not appear to be in response to a Senate resolution.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that it may lie on the table. I think I shall have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For the present the communication will lie on the table.

Mr. DOLPH subsequently said: A few moments ago I asked that a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to unoccupied and unimproved custom-house sites be laid on the table for the time being. I have examined it and I find that it embraces such sites in several States. My attention was directed to it from the fact that it refers to a lot in Astoria, Oregon. I think the communication should go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I have consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and he does not think that it should be referred directly to that committee. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a concurrent resolution of the Senate of June 20, 1894, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, submitting a copy of a report of Capt. Thomas W. Symons, Corps of Engineers, estimating the cost of dredging the bar at Everett, in the State of Washington, at $372,000; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, calling attention to section 2 of the Indian appropriation bill, which authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to place upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the several Indian tribes interested therein the face value of certain nonpaying State bonds, etc., and recommending that authority be given the Secretary of the Treasury to sell or dispose of said bonds, and also submitting a form of amendment to section 2, for the consideration of the committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, without being printed. An order to print can be made hereafter.

The motion was agreed to.

A bill (S. 1076) to release a certain limitation existing in an act of Congress touching the Episcopal Church at St. Augustine, Fla.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the United States, remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented memorials of Sanford H. Johnson and 220 other citizens of Newburyport; of O. P. Fales and 30 other citizens of Boston, and of Frederick H. Williams and 235 citizens of Haverhill, all in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PEFFER presented the memorial of Rev. F. R. Henry and sundry other citizens of Wilsey, Kans., remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of J. N. Mills, president of the Lessee Union Association, of Tecumseh, Okla., praying for the enactment of legislation protecting rights of lessees on Indian reservations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented the petition of W. N. Allen, chairman, Local Assembly No. 1562, Knights of Labor, of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation restricting immigration by taxing immigrants $50 apiece; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration

Mr. McMILLAN presented memorials of O. A. Garfield and sundry other citizens of Durand; of C. J. Silsbee and sundry other citizens of Arbela; of G. A. Lark and sundry other citizens of Wisner Township; of Rev. John Meritt and sundry other citizens of Tuscola County, and of George N. Hosack and sundry other citizens of Sanilac Center, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PERKINS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Redlands and Riverside, Cal., remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Academy of Sciences of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against any reduction of the size of Government reservations; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HAWLEY. I present memorials of Eugene Smith and 26 other citizens of Connecticut; of George T. Kellogg and 76 other citizens of Hartford, Conn., and of J. W. Sypher, jr., and 18 other citizens of Connecticut, remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.

I observe that similar memorials have been ordered to lie on the table. It seems to me well to send them to the Committee on Indian Affairs, because there is another Indian appropriation bill to come next winter. I do not know what becomes of the memorials when they are ordered to lie on the table; I suppose that they pass out of sight forever in the files of the Senate. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WASHBURN. Do I understand the motion to include all memorials which have been presented on this subject heretofore? There have been a very large number of them presented which are now lying on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the motion of the Senator from Connecticut reach the memorials heretofore presented and now lying on the table?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think I will move that all these memorials be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The subject will come up next December.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a memorial of 60 citizens of South Omaha, Nebr., remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of 1,000 citizens of Chicago, Ill., praying for an immediate settlement of the tariff question; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented sundry memorials of citizens of Manca, Broadlands, and Galesburg, and of sundry citizens of Mason County, all in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the violation of the American principle of separation of church and state; which is involved in making appropriations for or contracts with agents of sectarian institutions for Indian education, etc.; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

WASHINGTON NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I present a very important memorial. A long series of months has been occupied in the consideration of the subject of the memorial. It is signed by some of the most important, in fact the most important, scientific societies in the United States—the National Geographic Society; the American Association for the Advancement of Science; the Geological Society of America; the Sierra Club; the Appalachian Mountain Club.

I notice among the names of those constituting the committees appointed by these several societies within the past year to prepare the memorial those of the following widely known persons and distinguished scientists:

Dr. David T. Day, Mr. S. F. Emmons, Mr. Bailey Willis, of the Geological Society of America.

Maj. J. W. Powell, Prof. Joseph Le Conte, Prof. I. C. Russell, Mr. B. E. Fernow, Dr. C. H. Merriam, of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Hon. Gardiner G. Hubbard, Mr. John W. Thompson, Miss Mary F. Waite, Miss Eliza R. Scidmore, of the National Geographic Society.

Mr. John Muir, President D. S. Jordan, Mr. R. M. Johnson, Mr. George B. Bayley, Mr. P. B. Van Trump, of the Sierra Club of San Francisco.

Mr. John Ritchie, jr., Rev. E. C. Smith, Dr. Charles E. Fay of the Appalachian Mountain Club of Boston.

This project has been carefully considered not only as to its general outlines but as to its details, including such knowledge of the surveys of the lands as have enabled definite opinions to be formed by those conversant with such subjects. The weight of influence is very great and freely given in favor of the establishment of a carefully defined national park in the State of Washington, which, as described, though not large in extent, shall include the most wonderful scenery to be found on this continent, as is fully attested.

It especially includes the celebrated Mount Rainier (as it is officially named, although often called Mount Tacoma), which is one of the grandest mountains on the face of the globe, to be named in admiration with such great mountains as Mount St. Elias, Mount Ararat, Mount Fusiyama and the most superb summits of the Alps.

The President of the United States proclaimed the Pacific forest reserve, in the State of Washington, on the 20th day of February, 1893. The western half of this reserve is that portion which it is proposed shall be made a national park. The eastern boundary to follow the crest of the range, but it is recommended that the westerly line of the park shall extend one survey range beyond the limit of the Pacific forest reserve for the purpose of including within the limits of the national park all the great glacier formations, of which there are eight.

The Pacific forest reserve is traversed through the middle from north to south by the crest of the Cascade range, varying from 5,300 feet to 6,800 feet in height. Mount Rainier is an isolated volcanic peak, 12 miles west of the Divide, from which it is separated by a deep valley. Mount Rainier is 14,400 feet high. It is superb in its boldness, rising from one canyon 11,000 feet in 7 miles. On this mountain there is a colony of Arctic animals and plants as effectually isolated from other animals and plants as are shipwrecked sailors upon an island in mid-ocean separated from the rest of humanity. It is important to preserve this rare colony of Arctic fauna and flora. The proposed national park has magnificent forests which, like all those of the Puget Sound region, are world-renowned for the magnificence and beauty of their hemlocks, cedars, and firs, trees colossal in size and valuable as regulators of floods; as under their protection snows melt slowly, and thus prevent devastation of valleys. They are valuable as water preserves for the irrigation of the plains below.

The boundaries of the proposed national park are so drawn as to exclude from its area lands in which coal, gold, and other minerals are supposed to exist, and they conform to the purpose that the park shall include all features of scenic beauty without encroaching on the rights of miners or settlers.

This mountain might form a valuable site for a weather station, which, in view of the controlling influence exerted by Mount Rainier on the moisture-laden winds of the Pacific, would be important in relation to local weather predictions.

I desire to read an extract in connection with this subject from a report made by Prof. Zittel, a well-known German geologist, and Prof. James Bryce, member of Parliament and author of the American Commonwealth, as follows:

> The scenery of Mount Rainier is of rare and varied beauty. The peak itself is as noble a mountain as we have ever seen in its lines and structure. The glaciers which descend from its snow fields present all the characteristic features of those of the Alps, and though less extensive than the ice streams of the Mont Blanc or Monte Rosa groups, are in their crevasses and serracs equally striking and equally worthy of close study. We have seen nothing more beautiful in Switzerland or Tyrol, in Norway or in the Pyrenees, than the Carbon River glaciers and the great Puyallup glaciers; indeed, the ice in the latter is unusually pure, and the crevasses unusually fine. The combination of ice scenery with woodland scenery of the grandest type is to be found nowhere in the Old World, unless it be in the Himalayas, and so far as we know, nowhere else on the American continent.

These eminent and experienced observers further say:

> We may, perhaps, be permitted to express a hope that the suggestion will at no distant date be made to Congress that Mont Rainier should, like the Yosemite Valley and the Geyser region of the Upper Yellowstone, be reserved by the Federal Government and treated as a national park.

If this park be established I am convinced that no resort in the United States will be so much sought after when people come to know its wonderful attractions in point of majestic scenery and the health-giving qualities of the climate which prevails in the region in which it is situated.

Ex-Senator George F. Edmunds, who visited this region a few years ago, in honor of whom one of the great glaciers was named, wrote an article descriptive of his trip which was published in the Portland Oregonian, from which I will read the following extracts:

I never believed there was anything in America comparable in grandeur to the scenery.

He speaks enthusiastically of the glaciers, and says:

No Alpine glacier excels the one which is the least in point of size of all that have been discovered on this mountain.

He adds:

I can not help saying that I am thoroughly convinced that no resort in the United States will be so much sought after as this when once people come to know that what men cross the Atlantic to see can be seen in equal splendor, if not surpassed, at home.

I have been through the Swiss mountains, and I am compelled to own that, incredible as the assertion may appear, there is absolutely no comparison between the finest effects that are exhibited there and what is seen in approaching this grand isolated mountain. I would be willing to go 500 miles again to see that scene. This continent is yet in ignorance of the existence of what will be one of the grandest show places, as well as a sanitarium.

Mr. President, I am convinced that the establishment of the proposed park would confer a great boon upon the people of the United States. Its educational advantages would be of unspeakable value; and as a resort for seekers of health and pleasure it would be unsurpassed. The State of Washington, although a recent addition to our galaxy of American commonwealths, is destined to become within a few years one of the greatest. It will be the home of millions of prosperous and worthy citizens.

Now, when we can easily provide, not only for ourselves but for future generations, such a magnificent pleasure ground, sanitarium, and educational object-lesson, shall we let the opportunity pass, particularly when all this can be secured with comparatively little expense? The outlay of money required for the establishment of the park is very small. Concessions can be leased for hotels, stage routes and stopping places; the proceeds of which will provide for maintenance of the park; while the guarding can be done by details of soldiers from Vancouver barracks, or other army posts located in the State of Washington within easy reach.

The value of the timber is very great, commercially speaking; and it ought not to be destroyed. When unprotected, in the dry season, it is subject to the ravages of fire, started, perhaps, by careless tourists or campers. This is the most important danger to be guarded against. The valleys of the White River, the Puyallup River, and the Nisqually River are exceedingly fertile; they are subject to floods during the rapid melting of the snow on Mount Rainier in the limited area above the timber line. It is stated that in the broader area below the timber line, but above 3,000 feet in elevation, the depth of snow in the winter of 1883 was 9 to 15 feet. Protected by the dense canopy of fir and hemlock trees, this snow melts slowly and the the rivers are high from March to June. These eminent scientists, the memorialists, say:

But let the forests be once destroyed by fire or lumbermen, and the snows of each winter melting in early spring will annually overwhelm the Puyallup Valley and transform it into a gravelly waste. The same is true of the White River and the Nisqually.

Hence the great importance of preserving these forests for the sake of protecting the rich agricultural lands below them from destruction.

Mr. President, this view of the case strongly affects the farming interests of my State. The National Government owns this mountain region of unsurpassed grandeur, scenic beauty, and scientific value. Its forests are valuable for commerce, but ought not to be destroyed. The high mountain and glacial lands are totally unfit for cultivation. The Government alone can protect the rich lower lands from ruin if it acts promptly. I have introduced a bill, in accordance with this memorial, to create a national park.

I know there is a prejudice in the minds of some Senators against the creation of more national parks on account of the additional expense thereby entailed upon the National Government. This should be an exception. I have explained that the expense in the present instance need be very little, if any, that will not be contemporaneously reimbursed.

Let this national park be created now; afterward, if it be thought best, let the park be turned over to the State of Washington, to be owned and maintained by that Commonwealth.

I will not detain the Senate with further remarks. I ask that the petition, which is accompanied by a map, having had the consideration of the most eminent scientists in the United States, having been a subject of careful attention for many months, and as it is deserving of great attention on the part of Congress, be printed as a document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington desire a reference of the petition?

Mr. SQUIRE. I ask its reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Washington does not desire that the document be printed in the RECORD, I believe, but simply that it be printed as a document.

Mr. SQUIRE. I ask that it be printed as a document, including the accompanying map. If it were not for the map, which can not be produced, I would prefer to have the memorial go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that to be the request. The Senator from Washington asks that the petition just presented be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. In the absence of objection it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. DOLPH. It is only two or three lines long. The Senator will see that there can be no objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the Order of Business on the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is at this moment reported from the Committee on Commerce. It will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the ship Astoria, purchased and owned by George Grall, and repaired in American ports and converted into a schooner barge, to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

Y., to report it without amendment. This bill was introduced by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. It is somewhat similar to the bill which I have just reported and which has been passed, and I ask for its present consideration. It is to grant a register to a vessel wrecked under similar circumstances.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The concurrent resolution was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish the House with an estimate of the probable cost of completing the improvement of Saugatuck Harbor, Michigan, under the project of 1867, as modified in 1869, 1870, 1875, 1882, and the improvements recommended in the report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1893.

It will take but a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks for an indefinite leave of absence from the Senate after to-day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

LOCATION OF MILITARY BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is concluded, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CAREY. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 679) to provide for the location and satisfaction of outstanding military bounty land warrants and certificates of location under section 3 of the act approved June 2, 1858.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in addition to the benefits now given thereto by law, all unsatisfied military bounty land warrants under any act of Congress, and unsatisfied indemnity certificates of location under the act of Congress approved June 2, 1858, whether heretofore or hereafter issued, shall be receivable at the rate of $1.25 per acre in payment or part payment for any lands entered under the desert-land law of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories," and the amendments thereto, the timber-culture law of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on the Western prairies," and the amendments thereto; the timber and stone law of June 3, 1878, entitled "An act for the sale of timber lands in the States of California, Oregon, Nebraska, and Washington Territory," and the amendments thereto, or for lands which may be sold at public auction, except such lands as shall have been purchased from any Indian tribe within ten years last past.

The amendment was agreed to.

MATES IN THE NAVY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 38) relating to the payment and retirement of mates in the United States Navy.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to so construe the law regulating the retirement of warrant officers in the Navy as to apply to the twenty-eight officers now serving as mates in the Navy, and that they shall be entitled to receive annual pay at the rates following: When at sea, $1,200; on shore duty, $900; on leave or waiting orders, $700; but provides that nothing therein contained shall be so construed as to authorize any increase of pay for any time prior to the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. LOUIS BRIDGE BETWEEN WISCONSIN AND MINNESOTA.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2151) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, approved April 24, 1894.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 3, before the word "two," to strike out "section" and insert "sections," and after the word "two" to insert "and three;" so as to read:

That sections 2 and 3 of said act be amended so as to read, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the bill, to insert:

And in addition thereto, and before the putting in place of the draw spans of the bridge to be built under this act, the company or persons owning or holding such bridge shall be required, under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of War, or of such officer as he shall designate, to dredge out to a minimum depth of 21 feet below low-water datum the two triangular spaces above and below the proposed site of the bridge, included in the interior angles formed by the crossing of the two ship channels at "the gate," to such an extent as to create a basin, the easterly and westerly limits of which shall be respectively at not less than 1,000 feet from the axis of the bridge and shall be parallel thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARACAS AWARDS.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senate to take up for present consideration the bill (S. 756) for the application of the accretions of the Caracas awards of 1868 to the new awards made in 1889 and 1890. The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. I think the bill will explain and commend itself to the Senate.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations to strike out the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to make disposition of the accretions upon the fund received by the Government of the United States upon the account of the payment of the Caracas awards of 1868, and to apply said accretions to the payment of the new awards made in 1889 and 1890 under the Washington commission."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint William H. Hugo, a first lieutenant of cavalry in the Army of the United States, and thereupon to place him on the retired list of the Army, with the pay and emoluments of a retired officer with the rank of a first lieutenant, without regard and in addition to the retired list now authorized by law.

Mr. MILLS. Has the bill been reported by a committee?

Mr. MANDERSON. It has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrosed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLOSING OF AN ALLEY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2217) to provide for the closing of a part of an alley in square 185 in the city of Washington, D. C.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Has the bill been reported by a committee?

Mr. McMILLAN. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MILLS. I should like to have some one state what is the object of closing the alley. I do not believe in closing streets and alleys if it can be prevented, unless there is some good reason for so doing.

Mr. McMILLAN. This is a part of an alley laid out twenty-five years ago. It never has been used at all. Another alley has been opened in the rear, which is used by all the property owners, and this alley is of no actual use, being built upon. The bill is simply intended to clear the title.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REAR-ADMIRAL GEORGE BROWN, UNITED STATES NAVY, AND OTHERS.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask the consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2034) authorizing the persons herein named to accept of certain decorations and testimonials from the Hawaiian Government.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes Rear Admiral George Brown, Ensign George P. Blow, Lieut. George S. Dyer, Frank Laviere, Capt. George C. Remey, and Medical Inspector George W. Woods, all of the United States Navy, to accept certain decorations of the Royal Order of Kalakaua.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. POTEET.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 6969) for the relief of Benjamin F. Poteet, and that it be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments—in line 5, before the word "cents," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty-eight," and in line 6, after the word "Treasury," to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "to the credit of the Sac and Fox Indians;" so as to make the bill read:

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PACIFIC STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1295) to reimburse the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada for moneys by them expended in the suppression of the rebellion.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to inquire from what committee that bill came?

Mr. WHITE. I will state that the bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and that there is a printed report numbered 287. The bill has passed the Senate heretofore, and was once passed upon a sundry civil appropriation bill. The report of the committee is elaborate, and I do not think any one questions the justice of the claim. It is based on exactly the same principles as similar bills which have been passed regarding other States.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not prepared to raise any objection or criticism upon the report of the bill, but it is a very important bill and involves very large sums of money.

Mr. WHITE. The bill certainly received the Senator's vote when it was passed before.

Mr. HARRIS. That is very probably so, and it will probably receive my vote again; but I suggest to the Senator from California that it is now only a half hour until the morning hour expires, and a bill of this magnitude ought not to be hurriedly considered in the few minutes which remain of the morning hour. While I do not intend to interpose a positive objection to the bill, I would greatly prefer that it should be made the special order for some particular time when we can have a full Senate.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Tennessee will permit me, I will call his attention to the report of the committee, simply that he may investigate it. The report, as I have stated, is numbered 287, and I think is very satisfactory. Of course, in view of the statement of the Senator from Tennessee, I shall not press the bill at this time.

Mr. HARRIS. I should be glad that it should go over this morning.

Mr. WHITE. To save time hereafter, there is an amendment which I desire to have inserted at the end of the bill, simply providing that the money shall be paid directly to the State treasuries.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the proposed amendment be printed.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the amendment be printed and that the bill be made a special order for 1 o'clock to-morrow, in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed. The Senator from California asks that the bill be made a special order for 1 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WORK AND WAGES OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Mr. BATE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 94) providing for an investigation relative to the work and wages of women and children. I will state that the joint resolution will take no time, and it is of some importance that it should be promptly acted upon. It appropriates no money.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It directs the Commissioner of Labor to investigate and make report upon the conditions attending the employment of women and children; their wages, earnings, sanitary surroundings, and cost of living; the effect of various employments upon their health and longevity; what measures are taken to protect their physical condition and to protect them from accidents; the rates of wages paid them in comparison with the rates paid men; and the effect, if any, their employment has had upon the wages and employment of men, and that the investigation shall be carried out under the regular appropriations made for the Department of Labor.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the joint resolution is passed, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee from what committee it comes?

Mr. BATE. The resolution was reported unanimously by the Committee on Education and Labor, and was unanimously passed by the House of Representatives. It appropriates no money whatever, and it only gives directions to the Commissioner of Labor to make the investigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. The explanation is satisfactory to me.

The joint resolution was passed.

P. S. CORBETT.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 103) for the relief of P. S. Corbett.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the accounts of P. S. Corbett, formerly United States marshal of the State of Nevada, be readjusted by the Treasury Department, and that the services rendered and expenses incurred by said Corbett in his various attempts to arrest George E. Spencer, and for attempting to arrest persons charged with selling liquor to Indians, be allowed under the head of "Extraordinary expense account;" and also that the said Corbett be credited with full mileage, as provided in section 837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States applicable to the marshals of Oregon and Nevada, from the place of arrest to the place of commitment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES L. TOWNSEND.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1468) for the relief of James L. Townsend, which passed the Senate in the last Congress, but failed to receive consideration in the House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to correct the military record of James L. Townsend, late captain of Company B, Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATOR OF HENRY FITZHUGH.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1824) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims, and for the relief of Samuel Fitzhugh, administrator of Henry Fitzhugh.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The preamble recites that in the case of Samuel Fitzhugh, administrator of Henry Fitzhugh, deceased, vs. The United States, in the Court of Claims, the court upon a preliminary inquiry found that Henry Fitzhugh, the person alleged to have furnished supplies or stores to the United States, or from whom the same were alleged to have been taken, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the war; and the court further ascertained that at the time and place alleged in the petition the military forces of the United States for the use of the Army took from Henry Fitzhugh stores and supplies amounting in value at the time of taking to $19,975.

The bill proposes to pay $19,975, to Samuel Fitzhugh, administrator of Henry Fitzhugh, deceased, in full of all stores furnished by and supplies taken from Henry Fitzhugh, by the military forces of the United States during the war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

DONATIONS OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3202) donating condemned cannon to the St. Lawrence State hospital at Ogdensburg, N. Y.

Mr. HAWLEY. From what committee does the bill come?

Mr. HILL. It is reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

I therefore ask, as both Houses have already acted upon identically similar measures, that House bill 6111 be taken from the table for the consideration and action of the Senate.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the proviso; and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same, amended so that the section shall read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the Metropolitan Railroad Company is hereby authorized and required immediately to make reciprocal transfer arrangements with street railroad companies whose lines now connect with its lines, and to furnish such facilities therefor as the public convenience may require. Upon the completion of the underground electric system provided for in this act, the said Metropolitan Railroad Company is hereby further authorized and required to enter into reciprocal trackage arrangements with connecting roads. The schedules and compensation shall be mutually agreed upon between the said Metropolitan Railroad Company and the companies with whose lines its lines connect; and in any case of failure to reach such mutual agreement, the matters in dispute shall be determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia upon petition filed by either party: Provided, That every street railway company in the District of Columbia, whose lines connect or whose lines may hereafter connect with the lines of any other street railway company, is hereby subjected to the same requirements as to transfers and trackage arrangements, and upon similar conditions, as in this section provided in the case of the Metropolitan Railroad Company and the lines connecting therewith."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. QUAY. I desire to withdraw the amendments which I proposed yesterday to the motions of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, on Monday last an extraordinary scene took place in the Senate. A Senator of the United States, of the same party association with the President, felt himself warranted in pursuing a course which I believe is without precedent in our history, or, if there be example for it, the example ought rather to have been shunned than followed. It was a spectacle such as I trust may never again be seen in this Chamber; not the arraignment of the political principles or the measures recommended by the President of the United States, but a personal assault upon his character.

I have hoped, sir, that the remarks which were made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] and other Senators at his request on that day might appear in the RECORD before I felt called upon to say something in reply, but I suppose the engagements and occupations of the Senator from Maryland have prevented him hitherto from reviewing what was said in such manner as he desires before it is finally incorporated with the RECORD. I can well understand that, because my own occupations have been such as to deny me the measure of consideration which I should have been glad to give before addressing any remarks to the Senate upon the subject. But the occasion can not be suffered to pass without something from me regarding the remarkable assault which was made, and I must deal with it as I find it given to the public through the newspaper press.

Mr. President, it is well known that I must speak to this subject from a standpoint not only of a political but a personal friend of that distinguished man who is at the head of the Government. I rejoice, sir, though I have never vaunted it, in the honor of that friendship. It has been continued to me after four years of intimate association with him in his official family, and it is a prize which I have a right to claim. I have often said that of the rewards, few and stinted, which come to laborious public men, one, greatest to me and in my estimation, was the privilege of participating in the upright, lofty, and faithful councils of that distinguished man in his efforts to render useful public service to his countrymen in his day and generation.

And, in all the time of our association, and I have been so situated that there could be no concealment, if the fact were otherwise, it is my honest testimony to his character that never in any moment, in any trial, in any temptation, political or personal, did I fail to see the pure white light of an upright purpose illuminate and direct his mind.

For such a man, under such circumstances, I feel called upon to say some words, not in defense—he needs no defense—but in correction of the apparent discoloration given to simple and plain facts in the attempt to discredit him with his countrymen.

I shall speak with temperance and moderation, I trust; I certainly mean so to speak. I desire only to make as plain as I can, for the truth of history, the matter of fact, which, being clearly understood, judgment may be safely risked without words of mine. I speak in the calmness of perception that it is the simple truth which ought to be clearly known.

Mr. President, what were the points of accusation in the attack to which I have alluded? (I regret that the distinguished Senator from Maryland is not in his seat. I trust he soon will be.) They were three, if I can correctly analyze what appears in the press and what I listened to.

It was first said, or argued if the word was not used, that the President was open to the charge of duplicity in the letter which he addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives; and the specification made, the only specification possible to be made upon the letter, was that the accusation rested upon his expressed desire and urgency that the articles of iron ore and coal should go untaxed in the tariff bill.

The next point of accusation was that by the letter he was chargeable with an executive encroachment upon the legislative branch of the Government.

The third was that he had therein traduced the Senate of the United States.

The first of these accusations is true or false, not as matter of argument, but as a matter of fact, and the question is, what is the evidence to justify and support or to authorize the inference to be drawn that the fact is as stated by the distinguished Senator from Maryland? The evidence on this subject is not in itself open to much criticism. The inference of fact from the evidence appears to me plain and simple.

In respect to that, and indeed the whole matter, I am under an obligation to the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] for his very able and powerful exposition of the subject. I thank him for it. It did him honor; and I am saying what will be responded to by all who heard him, that never did he appear to better advantage or more ably present his views upon any subject than when he addressed the Senate on Tuesday in reference to this.

Let me observe, first, what has been the President's public position in respect to the subject of a duty on raw materials. There is no opportunity for misunderstanding, and I shall not repeat what was presented on that subject by the Senator from New York, except by calling attention to it. When the President, in 1887, challenged the people of this country to agitation of the tariff question, and staked upon his honest purpose in that discussion his own political future, one of the principles he then enunciated in his message was the doctrine of free raw materials in order to encourage manufacturers in this country and to provide the utmost opportunities for the labor of this country to be employed.

Again, sir, in the message of 1893, only last December in opening the present session of Congress, inviting attention to this subject, he repeated with perspicuity and energy his views. Sir, it was by that time no novelty. In the public discussions of his party friends throughout the land this principle had been insisted on. In the convention which nominated him the third time to the American people the doctrine was again presented, and it had his acquiesence in his letter of acceptance. It has been a favorite call to the devotion of Democrats, the great first step to be taken in the enfranchisement of our countrymen from a system of taxation designed to transfer the produce of their labor through tax exactions to the private concerns and parties favored by the Government.

In such a state of opinion on his part, with such declarations openly and continually made, can it be presumed that that distinguished man would lightly lay aside this important principle which he regarded as underlying every initiative of tariff reform? Is that in accord with his firmness and courage?

Next, what is the evidence that was called to prove or produce the impression that there was qualification of that doctrine on his part, or that he was bending it to a necessity? The distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] himself proffered no personal testimony, but he called upon his colleagues to detail private conversations, semiofficial conversations, between the President of the United States and them.

The distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], first called upon, gave no testimony of conversation with the President. He gave testimony only that would be excluded in a court of justice, because hearsay in nature, the statements of another Senator, who was himself present to tell what the fact was, and who told it. I may pass by that testimony then, and turn to the one who had knowledge.

The distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who has labored so hard and earned so much of our gratitude by the effort to frame a bill which would pass the Senate and unify Democratic support, when called upon by the Senator from Maryland, stated as a fact that he had laid before the President the amendments which he proposed to make in order to accomplish the result.

Let me pause right there for a moment. Does anyone suppose, did the Senator from Arkansas mean to intimate—I am sure he did not, and he will correct me if I misunderstand him—that there was laid before the President, or that he took into consideration, all the various details of the amendments proposed? How could it be possible that that thing should be done? Let me put the question here to Senators. How many Senators charged with the very particular duty of considering this measure are able to set forth a complete understanding of all the various amendments which have been engrafted upon the bill and their effect upon the business of the country; or determine the question what would be a revenue duty and what prohibitive protection? Few, indeed, of us could go through the list, though in many particulars we may understand the subject.

No, Mr. President, what must necessarily have been laid before the Chief Magistrate of the country was the general principles only upon which these amendments were based and their general nature. The President expressed the same desire that so many of us have expressed here on this floor, that there should be a tariff bill enacted at the present session for the relief of the country. But, sir, upon this particular point what is the evidence touching the specification of the charge that is made? What is the testimony of the Senator from Arkansas?

I asked him, first, because I knew that the amendments for taxed coal and iron ore were proposed by the Finance Committee prior to preparation of the amendments which he submitted to the Senate, whether that subject was mentioned between him and the President, and he said that it was frequently. There seemed to be on the part of some, who had assembled in readiness to accept accusation, some notion that this proved something. But the next question showed the fact. The Senator from Arkansas told it. I asked him, was there a single conference which he had with the President, in which the President did not express the hope that the outcome would be free coal and free iron ore, and he answered truly.

He said: "On every occasion he expressed his hope that such would be the result;" to which the Senator added, not as the words of the President, but as the fact, "but it was the expression of a hope, and circumstances would not permit the realization;" and so they have not up to this hour.

I put the question with confidence because I knew that never, in all this long struggle, for a single moment has the President ceased to affirm his hope and wish that full expression should be given the Democratic principle in this particular.

Now, Mr. President, is there a man anywhere, fairminded, open, desirous of doing simple justice, who can presume to say of such conferences as must necessarily take place between a Senator and the President, that there was any want of perfect openness on his part in the desire that this bill, before its final perfection, should carry free coal and free iron ore?

Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas doubtless stated the fact truly, and upon that single statement I would be content, perfectly, to rest the certain discharge of that great officer from any imputation of duplicity in speech or conduct. The charge is puerile. The evidence disappointed the Senator from Maryland. It would have been an unbecoming, an extraordinary thing in such a conversation for the President to have interposed a fierce demand that the bill should at once in this process of consideration, when effort was being made to effect unification of Democratic Senatorial opinion, utterly foreclose all differing views from hearing.

Besides, sir, I think the Senator from Arkansas, who does me the honor to listen, would have added, if the question had been addressed to him, that the conference between the Houses was always within view if not always spoken of between them, and that it was always said that the outcome of the bill would not be known, that the result could not be certainly predicted until conference with the other House, as much interested, as much entitled to its voice, in the accomplishment of the legislation as this body.

Therefore, sir, not with any duplicity, but with the openness which always characterizes him, he wrote to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, which had sent the bill with untaxed ore and coal to this body, that he hoped the result might be accomplished in conference; and he had unquestionable right to say it upon the basis of everything that had transpired, as it is disclosed to us.

I remember to have read in the law books, and more than once to have heard good judges say to juries, that testimony of conversations is a species of evidence to be carefully weighed and considered before results are taken; not that the particular statement should be doubted when a witness of perfect credibility gives it, but that if the other side were heard, other facts impressed on the memory of another not received with the same significance by the hearer as felt perhaps by the utterer, would qualify and change the general inference to be drawn.

But, sir, I do not need to appeal to any supposition that by hearing the other side there would be qualification of the conclusion we may draw from the testimony already produced. I accept it, and I have no difficulty—I think no man can have difficulty—in perceiving that the right of the President to adhere to his convictions, to insist upon them, to urge their accomplishment in legislation by any proper means, was as perfectly open to him after the conversations reported by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas as it would have been before.

So much for this charge and specification upon which it is based. As I said, I wish to make no other comment than to develop the fact, the just inference of fact, from the testimony undisputed which we have before us.

Mr. President, it is next said of this letter that it was an Executive interference with the conduct of business before the Houses of Congress. The President himself has given some explanation of why he felt it to be his duty to write that letter, and I am entitled first to call attention to his own suggestion. Let it be observed it was written as a personal letter to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and the question of the right to write it must be measured by that fact and the circumstances under which it was written. The President begins by saying, the letter bearing date the day before the passage of the bill in the Senate:

MY DEAR SIR: The certainty that a conference will be ordered between the two Houses of Congress for the purpose of adjusting differences on the subject of tariff legislation makes it also certain that you will be again called on to do hard service in the cause of tariff reform.

My public life has been so closely related to the subject I have so longed for its accomplishment, and I have so often promised its realization to my fellow-countrymen, as a result of their trust and confidence in the Democratic party, that I hope no excuse is necessary for my earnest appeal to you that in this crisis you strenuously insist upon party honesty and good faith and a sturdy adherence to Democratic principles.

Is that the language of a man willfully striking beyond the just sphere of his official duty? Is it not the honest outpouring of a genuine Democrat addressing in a private letter his fellow Democrat in support of the great principles of the party which he had carried in the forefront of fight through two such trying campaigns as those of 1888 and 1892? Can any man speak of that expression of one Democrat to another, especially of such a one as the President, as unfair expression of opinion? Why, sir, had he any reason to think he could not speak to the House of Representatives or to a member of that House as well as to the Senate and Senators of the United States? And yet let me read from the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Maryland, who says that after these amendments had been concocted and partly or wholly prepared—I am not certain which—he, as one having responsibility to a greater extent because of official connection with the party organization, said to the members of the Finance Committee as follows:

With the slim majority in the Senate, with the diversity of views, with the excitement in the public mind, which is phenomenal, growing out of the great industrial revolution, it will be impossible to gather together, on the basis which the bill suggests, 43 votes in the Senate to pass it, unless we have the coöperation of the Executive branch of the Government, its hearty good will, and its earnest support of what we are to do.

And thence came those interviews of which the Senator from Arkansas has spoken.

Mr. President, long before this letter was written, it seems to have been the opinion of the Senator from Maryland that he had a right to have the Executive of the United States help him in an effort to qualify in the Senate the enactment of Democratic principles, but that it was all wrong for the President to attempt to support them in their integrity in the House of Representatives. How baseless is now this cry of unauthorized interference! The interference was invited by the very Senator himself who now undertakes to complain.

He was solicitous for an earnest support of his measure, and after he had been so pressed into action, was there not ample justification, was there not a righteous demand upon the President of the United States, when the bill went into conference, where it was expected to be perfected, that he should call the attention of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, which had sent this bill here with untaxed ore and coal, to the necessity of standing by the proposition of the House in order to give effect to this Democratic principle?

Talk of executive interposition! Talk of its being without precedent and without foundation of reason! Sir, in the very first Congress that assembled after the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, when that same great and noble man from whose farewell address to his countrymen words were read the other day was in the executive chair for the first time, who had himself presided over the Constitutional Convention that framed this Constitution of ours, who knew the sentiments upon which it had been constructed and which governed the duty of a magistrate, he came to the Senate of the United States in person, accompanied by his Secretary of War, and took his seat in the President's chair to urge upon the Senate the concurrence of this body in a treaty which he had made; and he brought along, as he said, his Secretary of War to instruct them in the facts, and spoke openly with impatience of their reluctance to proceed according to his wishes.

Mr. President, look at the history of Jackson, not to go down the line and weary the Senate with precedents. Recall the stormy quarrels and troublous times between the Senate and Congress and the President of the United States when that iron-willed but greatly beloved and honest man sat in the executive chair. Is such a temperate communication by personal letter between the President and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in respect to a matter of their common party faith, upon which both recognized they owed so great a duty to their countrymen, to be complained of?

But our distinguished colleague from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who never speaks but with a sweet and winning eloquence that charms all who hear him, says that it was unfair that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House should have had that letter in his pocket to make him rigid in conference with his Senate conferees. Alas, that criticism would have been better urged if it had not also been possible for that very gentleman, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, to state to the House a fact not disputed here, as follows:

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that there would be any great difficulty in coming to a compromise or an agreement upon the vast majority of the six hundred and thirty-four amendments proposed to this bill by the Senate; but there are important amendments proposed by the Senate, which give to this bill in the main a different character from what it had when it went from the House, and on which amendments we seem, up to this time, to be irreconcilably divided. It is because of these amendments and because of the statements made to us in all kindness and courtesy, and I might almost say in sadness, that such was the condition of affairs at the other end of this Capitol that unless this House was willing to accept the Senate bill practically and substantially as it passed the Senate there was to be no tariff legislation at this session of Congress; that we could not agree.

Mr. President, it can hardly be complained of by the managers of the conference on this side that there was an especial rigidity on the part of the conferees of the House, for it was well added by that distinguished gentleman in his report to the House:

We did not feel, Mr. Speaker, representing the House of Representatives, that we could without a sacrifice of its dignity and of its equality as a legislative chamber, respond to any such proposition as that. Least of all did we feel that in the great question of taxation, resting by the very theory of free institutions and by the language of the Constitution as a peculiar and original trust on the representatives of the people, we could for one moment entertain and agree to such a proposition.

Mr. President, I am content to pass to the judgment of fair-minded men in this day and generation and in all time to come the question of whether the Chief Magistrate of our country has wantonly or unfairly trampled upon the line that separates the two branches of this Government, executive and legislative, adding, however, that to the judgment I so invoke, I know full well others in other places and in other ways will contribute argument far more effective than mine.

It is said that the Senate has been traduced by this letter. Mr. President, in what respect? Let us look at it. The President goes on to say to his fellow Democrats that he believes these are absolutely necessary conditions to the continuance of Democratic existence:

I can not rid myself of the feeling that this conference will present the best if not the only hope of true Democracy. Indications point to its action as the reliance of those who desire the genuine fruition of Democratic effort, the fulfillment of Democratic pledges, and the redemption of Democratic promises to the people. To reconcile differences in the details comprised within the fixed and well-defined lines of principle will not be the sole task of the conference; but as it seems to me, its members will also have in charge the question whether Democratic principles themselves are to be saved or abandoned.

And he proceeds to then speak of the question of iron ore and coal as significant exponents of the principle of free raw materials upon which he had insisted; and, speaking of it, he says:

Every true Democrat and every sincere tariff reformer knows that this bill in its present form and as it will be submitted to the conference, falls far short of the consummation for which we have long labored, for which we have suffered defeat without discouragement, which in its anticipation gave us a rallying cry in our day of triumph, and which, in its promise of accomplishment is so interwoven with Democratic pledges and Democratic success, that our abandonment of the cause or the principles upon which it rests, means party perfidy and party dishonor.

Is he not right? Can any man say that abandonment of these principles by those who have urged them upon the people, in season and out of season, in every form of argument, be not want of faith to that people whom we have solicited and who have responded with their trust? But is it not obvious that this was simply a form of argumentative appeal to the distinguished gentleman to whom the letter is addressed, not a reflection on others?

Mr. President, can anybody imagine that the President of the United States was aiming a shaft at the Senate of the United States, especially that he was aiming at individual Senators, and particularly at one who does not hold the views he professes? It was only to one he addressed who believes as he believes that he was arguing. He arraigned no man for difference of belief. Why so swift to treat this as it were a personal accusation?

Upon the other hand, am I to regard myself accused of perfidy? Is the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], or other such tariff reformers so accused?

Mr. President, it is, in my opinion, indefensibly unjust to pretend to discern in these remarks, which were but the emphatic expression of adherence to a principle long advocated and professed, an imputation upon anybody.

The President understood the situation in the Senate; the President knew why such distinguished Senators, such long known advocates of tariff reform, such brave and staunch adherents to principle as it contains, of whom I have mentioned the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Delaware, both the Senators from Arkansas; and the junior Senator has especially shown constant impatience and anxiety to promote in every step the progress of this bill on right lines, not less than his colleague rendered great labor. Did not the President know that all Senators, zealous in the faith he holds, have been doing in this Chamber a duty far harder than mere fighting for a cause? Is he to be supposed to have cast reproach on them?

The able and skillful discourse of the Senator from Maryland had, perhaps, a purpose. I shall not impute to it the purpose, although its natural effect was the same as if purposed, to unite the Democratic Senators upon this side of the Chamber in opposition to the House of Representatives, to fix them, if possible, in solid array in support of the views which he maintains, and which he has engrafted on this tariff bill, that ore and coal are proper subjects of taxation. He has a right to his views, and I am not now criticising him in speaking of them, because of them. But it would surely promote them to unify Democratic Senators under an impulse of resentment because they had been trampled upon by the Executive.

There are some facts in respect to this business which are well known, but must be thought of in order to justly understand our position and the views of the President upon it.

Mr. President, the tariff bill came into the Senate on the 2d day of February. It came after that body, in which is reposed the right to originate such legislation, had labored with it during many months. It came here with a general public acclamation of joy that it had been passed; for though tariff reformers criticised it as inadequate to satisfy all their wishes, yet the country at large applauded it as a genuine and great step forward toward enfranchisement and relief.

What happened to it? How fared it in this body? From that date until the 20th of March, forty-six days, that bill lay in the Finance Committee, who worked with an intensity of effort which warrants the praises that have been bestowed upon its members by all the Senators of this side. They had the assistance of the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], by a special detail, because of the illness of one of their number; they heard the demands of every Senator who chose to present any, and at the end of that long period they brought out the bill and laid it again before the Senate.

What further happened? Did it prove of any avail for the Finance Committee to pass laborious judgment on this measure in aid of their fellow Democratic Senators? No, sir, not the least. Great concessions had been proffered, among which duties had been proposed upon iron ore and upon coal. It availed nothing. From the 20th of March to the 7th of May, forty-eight days more, that bill lay here with nothing done, only a certain amount of talk discharged at the bill. Why? Because there was an inert, sullen, resisting mass on our side, through which the current of Democratic thought did not seem to run as it did through the Finance Committee and other members of the party in this Chamber, to which was denied the electrifying enthusiasm that the Democratic hope and aspiration of the country had raised in others. Nothing could be done; no progress made. It was a helpless, hopeless prostration.

Then the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], as has been said so many times, undertook the laborious, if not the thankless task—for we all thank him—of endeavoring to ascertain what it was that lay in the secret recesses of men's minds, which must be accommodated before there could be unity of purpose and unity of action. He studiously engaged in it, and produced what shocked us in the proposal, what had been many times denied, honestly denied, as being in purpose. He produced more than 400 amendments to the bill; and upon that basis, at last, it was agreed that we should attempt to go forward.

Through fifty-seven days more the struggle was carried on. How did it result? Not only those amendments, but numbers of other amendments were fastened upon the bill. I hold in my hand a list of over sixty distinct and important increases of tariff duty now upon that bill beyond those proposed by the Senator from Arkansas when he reported his project on the 7th of May. Some eleven different articles have since been put upon the dutiable list which had been free before.

Under such circumstances what was the attitude of the Democratic Senators in this Chamber, those who did not accept the principles that governed a few, but those who believe in the principles of tariff reform as they have been enunciated by the President? It is due to all that the facts should be stated, and though told before, stated again.

I have longed to live to see the day when reformation of these tariff duties should extend the elements of governmental justice to our laboring countrymen. But I, in common with the remainder of our Democratic friends, recognized certain necessary conditions. In order to pass the bill through the Senate these amendments, or some of them at least, had to be acquiesced in.

Why should we thus yield so much of what we believed? First, we knew the law under which we live to-day, the McKinley act, had so given over the share of taxes which it raises into private corporations and private hands that the Treasury of the United States does not derive from that system of taxation enough revenue to maintain the Government. We knew that our Treasury was threatened with bankruptcy; we knew that some bill must be passed to relieve that condition. Again, we knew that the business interests of this country cried aloud for a determination of this long-depending controversy, and that until it was settled capital could not start forward to employ labor and send again the thrill of comfort which the busy hum of industry gives everywhere to the land.

We knew, besides, that it was a good thing to gain some substantial advantage in the diminution of the tariff duties already imposed, even if we did not succeed in all we felt due to the people of the United States. Finally, we knew that it would be an encouragement and a cheer to the Democratic masses throughout the land to know that at last some step had been taken, even though much less complete than was desired, that turned our course toward that goal to which we had invited them by argument and long agitation.

And we bent our heads, we bent our necks, we put the yoke upon us and labored to pull the burden through; and we were, as we had to be to accomplish the result, silent as the patient ox who swelters with his heavy load on some tedious road in the hot summer day. Meantime under the operation of the rules of the Senate we encountered the taunt of our skillful adversaries on the other side that we were dumb; we who felt that we were gagged and smothered by our anxiety, fuming with chagrin, yet subdued by an overruling necessity; and thus we enjoyed that blessed freedom of debate which our rules secure only to the obstructing minority.

When did it become defamation of the Senate to allude to this condition? Has not the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] repeatedly, in far more vigorous and eloquent language than I can employ, set forth our helpless condition, refraining himself to the utmost possible degree from giving us the pleasure and advantage of his instructive and captivating eloquence on the great subject?

But still more, has it not been from the beginning, during all the period of this weary trial, the understanding of Democrats in the Senate that much of this thing which seemed to be so wrong would find its correction in conference with the other House, for we should be obliged to recognize their right to stand by the principles which they profess, for the measures which they have taken to enact them, not with any want of fidelity or honor on our part, but simply in due acknowledgment of what belongs to a coördinate and coequal branch of the Legislature? Why, then, can not the Senate now deal in that manner in conference with the other House?

Can anybody suppose for an instant that there is such a compulsion, or could be, placed upon Senators by their union of effort to pass the bill through the Senate as to make them reckless of their obligation under the Constitution to another branch of the Legislature? Assuredly not, sir. Nobody in this Chamber would have pretended so to yield up in advance that measure of his duty, his recognized obligation.

Was not this history well known to the President? Has he not often sympathized with the declaration of party loyalty by the distinguished Senator from Missouri, the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and others upon this floor? Was he open to criticism because he sought to save what we all had hoped might in some measure be rescued, to the honor of our party and the benefit of our countrymen, by the conference of the two Houses? Besides, as I have already said, the President could not know all the details of the bill.

He could only deal with it in general respects as to its principle, and therefore he wrote. Not to disparage the Senate, not to traduce a single Senator. A base thought it would have been in him; a gross imputation it is to suggest it. He dealt with facts, not falsehoods. He was not only excused, but justified, and his countrymen will justify him and applaud, as they have already done, his unflinching fidelity to his views.

Mr. President, I would not be thought to have uttered one word here in resentment. I have studiously endeavored to avoid, and I hope I have succeeded, expressions which carry or might seem to carry the idea of resentment. It is not resentment that I feel for the distinguished Senator from Maryland. The consequences to him of this assault upon the Chief Magistrate, in the judgment of his fellow-men, he must endure; for in my humble opinion he has made a mistake. He has made a fearful mistake.

The American people will never tolerate in any man treatment in this nature of their great Chief Magistrate. In his office he stands for their great first citizen, endowed by their suffrages with the majesty of the Republic, the representative of the national honor, the central figure in that system to which attaches all our national pride. To assail him is to strike at the Republic; to insult him is to affront every good citizen; to asperse him is to sting the heart of every true American.

Not only in his official capacity, but now also in his admirable, his wonderful individuality, tried in the sternest ordeal and known to every man of intelligence and strength of mind, Grover Cleveland stands perfectly recognized as himself the full measure of a man worthy of his great office. He is not now for the first time President, but with a peculiar glory, shared by no other hitherto, he is a second time President, after a defeat for reëlection, which all his countrymen know augmented his honor, not diminished it. None as he was ever a third time nominated and a second time elected. None like he ever did right rather than be President, and by his courageous rectitude won the popular confidence and became President again.

It was a confidence based on solid foundation of knowledge, for the people for a certainty have knowledge of his character in the very particular wherein this accusation is raised; his character for straightforwardness, for truth, unswerving and fearless, for courage in the right, bending to none.

Besides, how shockingly inopportune comes this grating accusation against the strength of his character. For he has but just won the applauding admiration, nay more, the devoted respect of the entire people of this land by the fidelity with which he has maintained the Constitution and the laws in a trying emergency; by the tenderness and caution which he at the same time displayed in the use of the nation's mighty power in his hands; and as well by the noble dignity of his figure, as with serene and unruffled composure and justice he ruled that storm which for a time seemed to threaten civil commotion.

I forbear to repeat some words in the distinguished Senator's address which seem alone explanatory of his conduct. The Senator from Maryland I fear must suffer, and I do not wish to add to it, but Grover Cleveland can suffer no impairment of his stature in history from this unjustifiable assault. He will stand, as he deserves to stand, conspicuous in the noble line of illustrious public servants of his country. Long years hence, when the actors of to-day's tempestuous scene shall have passed away, the accessories of our political strife, seemingly always unavoidable, the misunderstandings, the misinterpretations and all uncharitableness will be lost in oblivion or only be recalled as we now in curiosity recall the scenes around other great figures in the story of our national life who suffered in their day from unmerited calumny, and Cleveland's name will rise in growing honor for his noble character, his great and devoted services to his country, supreme above detraction.

"As some tall cliff, that lifts its awful form,
Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm,
Though 'round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head."

Mr. President, I have not discharged as I ought the obligation which justice imposes on me, nor met at all my sense of duty in it, but I must pass on to deal with the matter immediately incumbent upon me, having already delayed the Senate long. Sir, as I believe in every direction of Democratic principles, I addressed a motion to the pending bill after it came back from conference in sincere confidence that its adoption would promote agreement between the two Houses of Congress.

Other Senators declare that that result would not follow the adoption of my motion. The Senator from Maryland, and he ought to know, asserted upon this floor in unqualified terms that to adopt the motion would defeat the bill, that it would prevent the bill from going into conference again. The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], who is present, has made to me, and he authorizes me to repeat it, the same statement; though not as expressing his wish or purpose. He will verify it or qualify it, if need be, as he is present now. The distinguished junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], whom I expected to see at this time in his seat, has made to me a similar declaration, and authorizes me to repeat it. I hoped to have had him sustain it here. He made that statement not alone for himself, as I understand, but for and with knowledge of the opinions of others.

That testimony is complete, and the country will accept it, as I accept it, as proving the fact, however grievous that fact may seem to be to any ardent mind, burning with desire for good result. True it is, it must be granted, that in the honest judgment, the fixed conviction, the fixed purpose, of some upon our side, the claim for special duty in protection of the industry of sugar refining is so overpowering as to demand their resistance of a bill without it, however much to me and to others who think as I do that consummation is devoutly to be wished.

This presents the question whether it is better that the bill should fail than that this thing should be done; at least it presents that question to Senators in the Senate upon the issue of the bill's going back to conference. If it were a single question between the success of the bill here and now, and the granting of such a duty, I can not refrain from saying that I should hesitate in my conduct. There may be, perchance, worse things than the temporary defeat of a righteous cause, even with the suffering that may attend it.

It is far worse in a free country, among a republican people, that disheartenment should ensue in devotion to principle. For we must stand in all our hopes for time to come, not upon the mere exterior appearance of freedom, not upon the self-interest of man, but upon that noble devotion which inspires the highest manhood and bids men go forward into the valley of death rather than yield a principle which underlies this fabric of human liberty. The evils which would ensue upon the failure of the bill would be temporary although severe. As I have already pointed out, they would probably be so severe that they can not be lightly passed by. But the American people have been tried in such a contingency. It is but a few years since when the Democratic party, apparently secure in power, under brave leadership walked, in mere devotion to principle, directly to political defeat.

The lamp which led them was not lost in the obscurity and gloom of the dark valley through which they passed. It soon rose, and it illuminates to-day the very citadel of liberty itself. If we are to be again defeated by devotion to principle, we may still trust the people of the United States. No, sir; there are worse things than failure. There is the decay of virility among free men, far worse than simple defeat.

But, sir, there are some things to comfort us, to cheer the hope that out of the crucible of this conference which will ensue, there will come a measure improved far beyond that which has already passed the Senate. I find that hope, first, in the character of our party conferees; all of them long tried and true Democrats, all of them genuine, sincere tariff reformers, who have labored and borne for the cause. And on this particular matter to which my motion is addressed, our conferees now know the strong current and power of Democratic sentiment, the surely overwhelming voice of this Democratic side, and will give it in their deliberations and efforts its due and proper weight.

Sir, there is also much comfort to be taken in the recognized temper of the body with which we are dealing. It has declared in an unmistakable manner the strength and the enthusiasm of its convictions. I read from the RECORD from the remarks made upon the report of this conference committee to the other House:

If, therefore, the House conferees were prepared to recede from the House position for free sugar and attempt to agree upon some revenue taxation for sugar, they could not, without the mandate of this House, accept such a provision as that which is offered in the senate bill.

And there was loud applause on the Democratic side.

If it be true—

Proceeded the chairman—

as stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOHNSON], of which I have myself seen some affirmations in the press; if it be true that the great American sugar trust has grown so strong and so powerful that it says that no tariff bill can pass the American Congress in which its privileges are not adequately guarded; if, I say, that be true, I hope this House will never consent to adjournment. [Great cheering of the Democratic side.] I hope, whatever the fate of the general tariff bill is, that this House will not consent to an adjournment until it has passed a single bill putting refined sugar on the free list. [Renewed cheers on the Democratic side.]

I join in the sentiment, and I echo the applause, and with this expression of Democratic steadfastness responsive to the popular feeling, I ought not to be unwilling to consent to further efforts to agree, nor to refrain from obstructing conference if such would be the effect of the motion I have made.

Now, sir, moved by these considerations, and because, also, they have governed the judgment, not only of those distinguished colleagues on this side of the House who have been with me in its support, but of all others without dissent, I am obliged to recognize my duty to be different now from what it appeared to me to be when I made the motion which lies upon the table of the Senate.

Besides, sir, I am a strict party man, and I am so especially in the prosecution of measures of party principle, for the reason that only by personal submission to the will of the majority, especially in matters of method and procedure, can the results of principle be achieved. Recognizing that, and intending to make no half-hearted acknowledgment when my duty is clear, with far greater ease, with far greater pleasure than it has seemed to me to be my obligation to consider, and to stand for the time until facts were apparent, I shall vote to send this bill to conference in accord with my Democratic brethren, and I ask the leave of the Senate, in order to carry that purpose into effect, to withdraw the motion which I made on Friday last.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws the motion which on Friday last he submitted to the Senate, as the Senator has a right to do.

Mr. STEWART Mr. President, the President of the United States is Commander-in-Chief of the Navy and of the Army. He possesses the veto power. He has the appointment now of not less than three hundred thousand officers, which enables him to influence a large number of persons. No monarch on earth is endowed with as much power as the President of the United States under the Constitution, and that without usurpation. A monarch with such power will always be lauded, and the voice of laudation will be loud and enthusiastic. The framers of the Constitution undertook to divide the Government into three coordinate departments. They placed the legislative department first and declared that—

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

They conferred upon Congress the power to pass bills and upon the President the power to veto the bills passed by Congress, with the further power in Congress to overrule the veto by a two-thirds vote. They gave the President one other power with regard to the proceedings of Congress. They provided that—

He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

And there his power ends so far as legislation is concerned. So far as treaties are concerned, he has power to make treaties with foreign nations by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It has been stated that Washington came here to give the Senate information with regard to a treaty. That was a very different case from the one before us. Congress has nothing to do with treaties. It is a matter between the Senate and the President alone; and consulting the Senate with regard to making a treaty is very different from interfering with legislation.

It must be borne in mind that the lower House of Congress was established specially to represent the people. Through the lower House it was supposed that the people would have a direct voice.

But in the distribution of power, by giving the President the appointing power, the lower House is not an independent body. We all well know that there are a few men of long service, of high character, of conspicuous ability in the lower House, who can be elected without Executive patronage. We also know that the new members who come here, and enter upon a long session, which is their first session, get away from their homes, and an election comes immediately following the first session of their service, and if the President of the United States, by his patronage, puts a thousand unfriendly officeholders in the district to manage the convention, the member can not be returned as a rule, and it is almost an invariable rule. Consequently the members of the lower House, except the conspicuous and distinguished individuals who have a national reputation, must obey the President or they will fail of reëlection to Congress. That is the condition of public life.

Now, if the President may interfere in legislation, if he may make his will known in an authoritative and peremptory manner, he can, of course, control the lower House with his veto power, exercised on local bills, and with his appointing power until it has become a proverb that no man can enter public life and stay there unless he is in accord with the Administration. Then, whom does the member represent who can not go home, who is dependent upon the officeholders to manage the convention? Does he represent the people or the President?

This Government, that was intended to have three independent departments is fast changing its character. The Executive is assuming all power. The President's unfortunate letter to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is the most direct interference with a measure pending before a legislative body that has taken place for hundreds of years. No king, no President, has undertaken directly to interfere in the conferences between the two Houses. The last conspicuous example was when Charles the First sought to save his friend the Earl of Strafford, who had served him more devotedly than any Senator has yet served the Chief Executive.

The praises and laudations which he bestowed on the king could hardly be surpassed. He had been his devoted friend for a quarter of a century. He was the man on whom the king relied. When the bill of attainder was pending against his friend, after it had passed the lower house of Parliament, the king sent an humble petition to the House of Lords asking for mercy for his friend. Immediately a resolution was passed by Parliament declaring this action to be a breach of privilege, and it was one of the grounds that continued to be charged against him until he lost his head.

Now, the Constitution is very careful to point out how the President may communicate with Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. "Shall."

Mr. STEWART. "Shall." I thank the Senator from Iowa. The Constitution provides that the President "shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient"—not to a conference committee, not to a private individual, not to a party in Congress, but to Congress. He is not to communicate to a person, not to his party friend. The Constitution knows no party. When the President communicates to Congress he communicates as President of the United States and not as a partisan. Here is a partisan letter showing how the proposed legislation will affect a party, and it is sent to the chairman of the conferees on the part of the House to be read to the lower House of Congress and to effect every member of Congress dependent upon him. If this goes on, if he can take an open part in our discussions here, there is no longer an independent department.

This question rises above party. It involves the autonomy of our Government. I verily believe before this Government can be restored to the people some change will have to be made to make the members of Congress independent of and not dependent on the President. They should be dependent on the people and not on the President. But with the power to destroy when he speaks, the President speaks with an authority which can not be disobeyed. In the President's letter there is a plain reflection on the Senate. The Senate appears to be a body which the President feels called upon to suppress.

I was forcibly struck with the language he used towards the Senate when he diverted attention from the laying of the corner-stone of the Capitol and turned to the Senate with these remarks:

> If representatives who are here assembled to make laws for their fellow-countrymen forget the duty of broad and disinterested patriotism, and legislate in prejudice and passion, or in behalf of sectional and selfish interests, the time when the corner-stone of our Capitol was laid, and the circumstances surrounding it, will not be worth commemorating.

This was addressed from the steps of the Capitol to the Senate wing when a measure was pending and which Congress passed in obedience to the demands of the Executive. We now have a tariff bill pending. The Democratic Senators have labored long and hard to perfect a measure upon which the Democrats could agree. It is a bill that I could not vote for when it was put upon its passage, because I thought it unjust to my section. It struck down one of our principal industries. It put wool, which is a great industry, on the free list. I thought that was a great injustice, and I could not vote for the bill. But the bill was put in its shape by long and honest deliberation. It was the best production that the Democratic Senators could make and agree upon.

The President assaults that bill and assaults the independence of the Senate. He goes to the House and denounces the bill, and by implication denounces the Senators who passed the bill. Is not that a blow at the independence of the Senate? The Senate is more independent than the House of Representatives because the terms of the Senators are longer, but, even then, when the fall under the ban of the Administration how difficult is their path? Every old politician understands that. I was told in my youth, "Remember one thing, stay with the Administration if you want to get along in politics."

Senators are placed in this position. They must either uphold the independence of the Senate and stand by their convictions, or submit to the dictation of the Executive by an interference which the Constitution prohibits, at least by implication.

If there is no limit to the importunities, the writings, the advice, and the intimidation of the Executive upon the legislative department, all power is in the Executive. If there is no limit to this power, there is no independent legislative department in this Government; and that is the danger which threatens the existence of this Government and which has destroyed so many others. No government ever failed by the usurpation of the legislative department, but every government which has failed has been destroyed by the one-man power, and that is the danger that now threatens us. This Government needs to get back to its former foundation. More power should be put in the hands of the legislative department or less power in the hands of the President, so that he will not have them at his mercy, and so that when Senators and Representatives come here to transact the public business they will not be compelled to obey him at the risk of being defeated in their nomination and election.

I do not wonder that the President has omnipotent power with his party in the other House. The situation is such that it could not be otherwise, and particularly at this time, when offices are so valuable because there is no business which is profitable. At such a time as this, the President having these offices at his disposal, is omnipotent in the lower House, and the question now is whether the Senate shall be subjected to his will.

I think the independence of the Senate is more important at this juncture than the fate of this or any other bill. These eulogiums upon the President, this laudation of him, is too old and stale in all history to affect anyone. We all appreciate it. No king ever failed to have devoted admirers, and, so long as it was safe to do so, there were plenty of men to sound his praises. That is perfectly safe while he is in power.

But what has the President done to merit laudation? He has had his way from the time he took the oath of office in March, 1893, until this hour. Let the country ask what has he done? Has he helped the people, has he bettered their condition, has he made them happier? I think the verdict will be that at no time in the history of this country has there been so much misery as now. If he is as great and good as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] thinks him to be, if he is a monument of all wisdom, why this universal distress, why this universal bankruptcy, why are millions out of employment, why are there disturbances in the land?

The Senator from Wisconsin eulogized the President as brave for ordering the soldiers to put down the mob. What else could he do? The Senator, however, does not reflect that the President, more than any other man, is responsible for the causes which produce mobs; he is responsible for the desolate homes; he is responsible for the idle factories; he is responsible for the closed mines; he is responsible for universal distress in a time of profound peace and abundant harvests.

Why have all these things occurred if the President is so wise and so great that he is to be lauded of all ages as a great and wise and good and pure man? By his fruits he will be known, as all other rulers always have been known. During his term there has been more misery and distress in this country among the industrial classes than at any other period in our history. His name will be associated with bankruptcy, strikes, distress, ruin, and industrial prostration.

That is what it is, and his name can never be separated from it. Let him be lauded who has accomplished great good; let power be lauded when it is used for a good purpose; but with the results of the exercise of the imperial will of this man we are too familiar to feel that he is entitled to the praise which has been bestowed upon him. The multitude are too familiar with the dire consequences of his policy to believe that he has a feeling heart or an intelligent head. If he is a wise man he is a bad man, for his Administration has produced nothing but evil. He can only be excused for the disaster of this Administration by the plea of want of comprehension of the situation.

Why should the President dictate to the two Houses of Congress when he himself is unable to suggest a remedy for the evils which we now endure? What is the recommendation, what is the great point he has made? It is as to the duty of 40 cents a ton on coal and iron. That is what all this trouble is about. Does anybody believe whether the tariff is on or off these articles it will change the condition of the country from what it is now? Is 40 cents a ton on coal and iron to revolutionize and change conditions? Everybody knows it will not. Everybody knows that the President's contention is puerile; that it does not reach any great question; that it does not in any manner affect any great industries, either to help or destroy them. The duty has been reduced from 75 to 40 cents. The evils from which we are suffering did not come out of the 75 cents duty on coal or iron, and they will not be remedied by taking the duty off.

In view of the general distress throughout the country, the President is appealing to Democrats on so trivial a point as this. After they have spent months in considering the bill; after they have compromised in the best way they could, after they have reduced the duty from 75 to 40 cents, which was in the line they desired, then the President says the hope of this country, Democratic principles, and everything else, depend on having that 40 cents taken off coal and iron. It is trifling with a great subject to have a controversy over so slight a point, after a compromise has been reached and the Senate has presented its bill.

If the President could not present anything more important than he has done; if he were a very wise man he would have kept silent. He would have kept silent anyhow if he had been patriotic; he would have looked at the Constitution, and if he felt it necessary to call the attention of Congress to the subject, he would have sent a message here as commanded by the Constitution; he would not have interfered with the deliberations of the conference between the two Houses; he would not, in other words, have done that which has been condemned for five hundred years in England and in the United States—interfered with measures pending in the two Houses, and particularly as between the two Houses.

I hope Senators will stand for and vindicate the Senate's independence at least, for a little independence now will be one gleam of light in the midst of this darkness which will give us the hope that in one branch of the legislative department freedom of action still exists.

J. A. T. HULL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is: Will the Senate concur in the report of the Committee of Conference?

Mr. MANDERSON. I wish the Senator from Kentucky in charge of the bill would explain to the Senate the exact matters which are agreed upon here, which have been in dispute between the two Houses. I call his attention particularly to the matters pertaining to the decrease in the number of the Medical Corps and the legislation concerning the Signal Corps.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the Senator, and say that the bill as it came from the House of Representatives made a reduction of 35 assistant surgeons, and as reported by the conferees that number is reduced 15, leaving 110 instead of 90 as proposed by the bill as it came from the House.

I do not wish to go into any discussion of the bill at this time, and unless the conference report can be agreed to I should prefer that the report be printed and go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think that would be the better course.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that that shall be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the message from the House of Representatives insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], that the Senate recede from two of its amendments, one of which imposed a duty on coal, and the other of which imposed a duty on iron ore.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first amendment from which the Senator from New York, moves that the Senate recede.

The Secretary read as follows:

109½. Iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore, also the dross or residuum from burnt pyrites, 40 cents per ton.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, will the Senate recede from the amendment just stated?

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when the name of Mr. HARRIS was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. If the Senator from Ohio were present the present occupant of the chair would vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS], and vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], but understanding that, if here, he would vote "nay" upon this question, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORDON. After conversation with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], nothwithstanding my pair with his colleague [Mr. WILSON], I learn that I am privileged to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], which leaves me free to vote. I note "nay."

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. WILSON] is absent on account of illness. If he were here he would vote "nay" on this proposition.

Mr. TURPIE. I announce that my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] is detained at his home in this city by serious indisposition. If he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRICE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]; but as I understand if he were present he would vote "nay," I have voted "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 65; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask leave to withdraw the amendments I have submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to withdraw the amendments he has heretofore proposed, and they are withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], that the Senate recede from an amendment. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Amendment numbered 304, being paragraph 318½ of the bill, in the following words:

Coal, bituminous and shale, 40 cents per ton; coal, slack or culm, such as will pass through a half-inch screen, 15 cents per ton.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am informed that if the Senator with whom I am paired, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], were present he would vote "nay." I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when the name of Mr. HARRIS was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. The present occupant of the chair would vote "nay" if not paired.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], which leaves me free to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TURPIE. I wish to repeat the announcement before made in relation to the absence of my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES], and to state that if he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRICE (after having voted in the negative). On this question, as on the other, I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. Understanding that he would vote "nay," I have voted.

Mr. PUGH (after having voted in the negative). I have transferred my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS]. I have no doubt that if both those Senators were present they would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 64; as follows:

YEAS—6.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move an amendment to the motion of the Senator from Delaware. I send my amendment to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the motion will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the Senate instruct its conferees, when appointed, on House bill 4864 to recede, on behalf of the Senate, from so much of its amendment numbered 156, page 41, House bill 4864, an act to reduce taxation to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, as is contained in the following words beginning with the word "and" in line 10 and ending with the words "ad valorem" in line 14, reading as follows:

"And upon all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color and upon all sugars which have been discolored there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of one-eighth of 1 cent per pound in addition to the said duty of 40 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware will state his point of order.

Mr. GRAY. My point of order is that it is not competent for the Senate to instruct its conferees in a free and full conference, ordered by the Senate, to recede from a particular amendment—much less from a portion of it—or, in other words, that the Senate shall not deprive its conferees of the free and untrammeled opportunity of discussing and conferring with the conferees of the other House upon the various points of disagreement between the two Houses. Otherwise it would be idle, it seems to me, to speak of a full and free conference on the part of those agents of this body who are to be appointed to conduct negotiations and discussion with like conferees appointed by the other House of Congress.

The very object of appointing conferees to conduct a conference of this kind is to avoid a declaration of the unalterable will of the Senate upon any point that is in disagreement between the two Houses, in order that there may be a full and free discussion between them, and a recommendation of some kind, if they can agree upon such, to their respective Houses of a method of reconciling those disagreements.

I do not intend to say more now than to call the attention of the Senator to what I conceive to be in this matter a most important question which seems to me to appeal to the common sense of all, one that is, so far as the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota is concerned, outside of any philosophy I can see which belongs to the matter of a conference between the two Houses for the purpose of reconciling the disagreeing votes of those two Houses.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Delaware a question.

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Delaware will agree, I presume, that the Senate has a perfect right to-day, if it so wills, to recede here and now from every one of the six hundred and odd amendments to the bill adopted by the Senate. The Senator will concede that, of course. That being taken for granted, have we not the right to change our minds here and now in regard to a portion of those amendments and to instruct the managers on the part of the Senate to carry out our will, especially as it is in the direction of receding from an amendment made by the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will suspend for a moment. The Chair holds that the point of order is not debatable. Debate may be indulged in by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the debate proceeding?

Mr. FAULKNER and Mr. TURPIE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is objection.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope there will be no objection interposed. This is a matter of such very grave moment and of such very grave importance that I hope the Senator from Delaware will be permitted to proceed and that argument may be had upon a question so vital to the Senate as is the pending point of order.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state to the Senator from Nebraska that there was an adjudication by the Senate of this point in the Forty-second Congress, and it has never been reversed since.

Mr. MANDERSON. I beg the Senator's pardon; the decision was quite the contrary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask again, for the debate must proceed, if at all, by unanimous consent, is there objection?

Mr. TURPIE and Mr. FAULKNER. I object.

Mr. HUNTON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is objection.

Mr. HILL. As there seems to be a general desire to debate the question I will respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair in order that it may be debated.

Mr. CULLOM. The Chair has made no decision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The only decision the Chair has made is that a point of order is not debatable until the Chair has disposed of it. Does the Senator from New York appeal from that decision?

Mr. HILL. The Chair is entirely right in regard to that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair quite agrees with the Senator from New York.

Mr. HALE. I do not think that on consideration for a minute any Senator on the other side will do what I have never known done in the Senate before on an important question of order, the moment the point is raised to shut off what is fair and reasonable debate upon the project. I have been here some years and have heard all kinds of questions of order raised, and the general practice of the Senate is most generous and liberal. If the objection is insisted upon it will be taken on this side as an indication of a disposition now not to allow fair and reasonable consideration.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will settle the matter by withdrawing my objection.

Mr. GRAY. If an appeal is taken from the decision of the Chair debate is open on the appeal.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from West Virginia has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. HALE. I understand the objection is withdrawn.

Mr. FAULKNER. I withdrew the objection I made in reference to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear suggestions from any Senator who may desire to submit them.

Mr. GRAY. I had the floor when the objection was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true. The Senator from Delaware is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate in opening the discussion, if discussion it is to be, but I agree with Senators on the other side that it is an important question, and one which deserves the calm and careful consideration of the Senate. I submit that all the philosophy of this question is on the side of the point of order I have made.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator advocate the broad proposition that it is out of order at any time and under any circumstances to instruct the Senate conferees?

Mr. GRAY. I hold that it is out of order to instruct the conferees in the matter of a conference asked for as this is asked for in the motion now before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator state when the Senate could instruct its conferees?

Mr. GRAY. There is a conference recognized by parliamentary law, as I read it, known as a simple conference, in which there may be an instruction. I do not know that there is any record in our parliamentary proceedings of a resort to it. The only conference with which I am familiar in our practice is the full and free conference spoken of in the books on parliamentary law. From the inherent necessities which surround such a conference it seems to me to be one that does not admit of an instruction by the body ordering the conference.

As I said a while ago, the very object of appointing a conference is to avoid an expression of the will of the House ordering it, and by its authorized parliamentary agents to bring to the attention of the other House those considerations which the conferees being acquainted with can so urge as to overcome, perhaps, the objections of the other House, and influence the report which the conference committee would make to the two Houses.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the House of Representatives had instructed their conferees or managers, as they could do under their rules, would the Senate then have a right to instruct their conferees?

Mr. GRAY. This is not a question of instruction; it is a question of——

Mr. ALDRICH. The rules of the House of Representatives recognize the right of the House to instruct their conferees, and it is frequently done by the House of Representatives.

Mr. PLATT. It may be done by their rules.

Mr. GRAY. Then all I can say is that so far as the conferees are instructed there can not be that full and free conference contemplated by parliamentary law and by the usage of these two bodies, so far as I am acquainted with them.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then we have never had a full and free conference.

Mr. GRAY. Suppose the Senate on its part appoints conferees and gives them special instructions to insist upon a particular amendment that the Senate has offered to the bill, not the ordinary language of insisting upon the amendment for the purpose of getting a conference, but instructs them, depriving the conferees of all discretion, of all freedom of debate and of conference, and that the House do likewise, as they would have the right to do. We all know what a farce such a conference would be. It seems to me that extreme case illustrates the absolute folly and want of logic in the position taken by the Senator from Minnesota in offering the amendment to my motion.

It seeks to trammel and fetter and control the agents of this House who are appointed, for what purpose? To confer with like agents on the part of the other House to see if perchance there may be some way found in that conference by which the disagreeing votes of the two Houses may be reconciled.

Mr. HALE. Let us reason together for a moment.

Mr. GRAY. I am always glad to reason with the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. The Senator says the object is a full and free conference with the other House. A conference upon what? Upon the subjects on which the two Houses differ. The fewer the subjects are the greater the likelihood of agreement; the fewer the amendments that one body puts on the greater the chance of an agreement. The whole object of a conference is to smooth the way and agree upon propositions where the two Houses are at odds. When the Senate or the House directs its conferees to give way on one provision which is in difference until it is given up, it has simply removed—has it not, I ask the Senator—one of the subjects upon which the conference is at odds? Therefore, is it in any way an abridgement of the free and full conference for the Senate to abandon one of the matters in dispute? Is it not, in short, a full and free conference on the subjects-matter still open to dispute after the two bodies have acted?

Mr. GRAY. That is an exceedingly plausible statement: but——

Mr. MILLS. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to make an additional point of order? I desire to make an additional point of order, and then the Senator can go on with the discussion. My point of order is that the Senate can not recede from a part of its amendment, and if it can not recede from a part of its amendment it can not instruct its conferees to do what it can not do itself.

Mr. GRAY. The point of order raised by the Senator from Texas seems to me absolutely decisive, inasmuch as it is the argument I was just about to make in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota is an amendment which applies to a part, to a fragment, of one of the amendments put upon the bill by the Senate.

Mr. HALE. But it is a divisible amendment, and an amendment upon which, when in the Senate, three separate and distinct votes were taken, because it was divisible. Therefore the point of order does not apply.

Mr. GRAY. When the amendment was in the Senate and was voted upon it was divisible in a parliamentary sense. For the purpose of discussion, consideration, and disposition of the bill it was divisible, but when we come to consider the matters between the two Houses upon which they disagree, one of which is the duty upon sugar, it is the subject-matter about which the conferees, if they are appointed, will have their conference and about which the disagreement between the two Houses will come to the front and be a matter of debate and discussion. So the point made by the Senator from Maine, plausible as it is with reference to the general question, as he put it, that the Senate might recede from one of its amendments and therefore eliminate from the number of disagreements one or more and leave the rest for conference, does not apply where that elimination is only to a part of the amendment.

The practical effect of it would be that the Senate would undertake, after having solemnly passed a bill with certain amendments added, to alter the shape and quality of the bill when it sent it back to another conference with the other House; which, of course, I think the Senator from Maine will agree is not within the competence of the Senate.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator from Delaware take the broad ground that there is no such thing as instruction to a conference committee?

Mr. GRAY. That is the whole of my point of order; in a conference such as is now asked for by my motion—a full and free conference.

Mr. HILL. The Senator would claim, then, that the Senate has no right to limit the time of the conference committee?

Mr. GRAY. I do not understand what the Senator from New York means by "time."

Mr. HILL. To instruct its conferees to report if within ten days there was no agreement. Can not the Senate limit them? Can not the Senate designate a time? Can not the Senate instruct them? In other words, I think with the Senator that if the point of order is well founded it must be, and he is obliged to take that position, that neither as to time, form, nor anything else is there any such thing as instruction to a conference committee.

Mr. GRAY. In reply to the Senator from New York, who, I suppose, is an authority on parliamentary law, having had long experience in presiding over, perhaps, the greatest legislative body in any State in the Union, I would say that, so far as an instruction such as he suggests is concerned, I do not think that it touches the reason of my objection to the competence of the motion made by the Senator from Minnesota. To instruct a committee as to time may or may not be within the competence of the Senate, but clearly, it seems to me, to instruct a committee as to the substance of the disagreement between the two Houses is out of its competence.

Mr. HILL. The limitation of time, of course, prevents in the broadest sense a full and fair conference. In other words, you have endeavored to control the discretion of your conferees by direction of the body which appointed them.

Mr. GRAY. Possibly so. I am not prepared to take issue with the Senator upon that point. The inclination of my mind would be to say that it differs from the question which I have sought to raise here by the point of order I have made. The point of order I have made seems to me to rest upon the very reason of the matter, on that common sense which must lie at the bottom of all law and all parliamentary rule and practice. After all, it comes down to that.

Therefore, I repeat, if we are to have what is called technically and really a full and free conference between the parliamentary agents of the Senate and the House, it would be idle and absurd to seek to limit the powers of those parliamentary agents, so as to make it less than a full and free conference. The very object had in view in the appointment of such conferees originally or in the reappointment after the report of a disagreement is that those agents may come together and by all the legitimate arts of argument, persuasion, and representation so influence each other that out of the disagreement may come an agreement which both Houses will ratify and support.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Delaware another question?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not think there is anything in the Senator's point, and there is no more in the point of the Senator from Texas, as I understand it. Suppose the House of Representatives should send us a bill appropriating $500,000 for a certain work. The Senate increases the appropriation to $1,000,000, and the bill goes into conference. There is a disagreement over the $500,000 added by the Senate. The matter comes back here. Have we not a right, I ask the Senator from Delaware, to instruct our managers either to relinquish the whole amendment or to relinquish half of it, and thus to that extent reduce the controversy between the two Houses?

Mr. GRAY. I think the Senate has a right to recede from the whole amendment. We can instruct the conferees to recede.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. We instrct our managers to recede.

Mr. GRAY. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I insist that we can say to them by instruction of the Senate, "You may recede either to the full extent, $500,000, or to the extent of one-half of the amount." You are thus dividing the amendment. That is the point the Senator from Texas makes, that you can not instruct your conferees unless you instruct them as to the whole amendment.

Mr. GRAY. You would be receding from the whole amendment in that case.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I can not see any distinction between that and the case here. The House sends us a bill with certain provisions in regard to sugar. The Senate adds an amendment increasing the duty, both ad valorem and specific, as I understand. The Senator from Minnesota comes in with a motion to instruct our managers to recede as to a portion of the amendment. Now, what is the effect of that motion? It is to reduce the controverted points in issue between the two Houses. It is to eliminate one of the points of controversy. It seems to me there can be no kind of question but that we have a right to do that.

Mr. PALMER. I would be glad to ask the Senator from Delaware a single question.

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. Is there no authority on a point like this, which must have occurred so very often in this body?

Mr. GRAY. I was about to read an authority, a precedent in this very body. I wish to refer to it. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] I understand has an authority that he wishes to bring to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. Cushing, on page 871, in section 2247, lays down the rule that has been universal, that the house which amends a bill, which is the Senate in this case—

> Can not recede from or insist on its own amendment, with an amendment—which is precisely what the Senator from Minnesota proposes to do.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. GORMAN. He insists upon receding from half of an amendment, which is an amendment to an amendment, and the universal law is that that can not be done.

Mr. HALE. That is not the proposition.

Mr. GORMAN. I beg to make, in addition to that, another suggestion, if the Senator from Delaware will permit me.

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. It is that we can not instruct our conferees at this time. We can not instruct a body that does not exist. This question must come up after the passage of the resolution offered by the Senator from Delaware agreeing to the conference and appointing the conferees. When we have reached that stage, and have somebody to instruct, then the question may be raised, but it can not be presented at this time.

Mr. HALE. The trouble would be that when that was done the Senate had agreed to go into conference and had appointed managers for a free and full conference, and the point would be made that it was too late to do it.

Mr. GORMAN. Not at all.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Delaware will allow me——

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. This amendment was put in deliberately in order not to shut out the proposition. It is not what the Senator from Maryland has stated, a proposition to recede from a portion of an amendment that the Senate had put on. That proposition had its paternity in the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] in the amendment that he boldly and defiantly offered the other day, and which has, by some mysterious process which we do not understand, utterly disappeared. We expected to have a vote upon that proposition. That has disappeared. That was technical. There was something in the point that, after the third reading and passage of the bill, it may be that you could not then amend a single proposition in it.

But this is broader than that. It directs our managers. They are not larger than the Senate. They are our creatures. They can follow our direction. They have a full and free conference on everything that the Senate submits to them. When the Senate says, "Your are instructed, Mr. Managers, not to make a controversy with the other House upon this one-eighth proposition and you can make your controversy upon everything else," they are as much the subject of our control at any time before they go into conference as the members of any committee in directions given to it by the Senate.

It is absurd, Mr. President, to advance the proposition here that the Senate is powerless when there is no conference, and when the other House has sent over here a disagreement on all subjects-matter, to say that the Senate must sit here bound hand and foot and can not instruct its conferees in the direction of an agreement, I do not care what the authorities are, and they are not uniform by any means.

Mr. GRAY. I quite agree with the Senator from Maine in so far that we can recede from any amendment that we have made, and, as I said, eliminate one or more points of disagreement from the consideration of the two Houses. But that is a very different proposition from an instruction to recede on a particular point which is only a portion of an amendment. However, that has been sufficiently commented upon. You can not amend an amendment when it comes from conference, and you can not instruct your conferees to recede on one point for the reason which obtains in both cases and is exactly the same, whether it be an instruction or a proposition that we should amend.

Now, I said there was a precedent. In 1873, on a report from a conference committee on the legislative appropriation bill, the motion was made by Senator Wright that the report submitted by the conference committee be recommitted to the committee of conference with instructions to strike out all that was contained in the amendment reported back on the subject of salaries. The question was raised and gave opportunity for a very interesting debate, which extends over several pages of the Congressional Globe, and was participated in by Mr. Trumbull, by Mr. SHERMAN, who supported the point that I now make, Mr. Logan, Mr. Carpenter, Mr. Edmunds, Mr. Bayard, and Mr. Conkling. The question was submitted by the Vice-President—with the instruction to which I have alluded.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to recommit the report—

The question was taken, and by a vote 40 nays to 24 yeas the Senate refused to recommit. The whole question turned in that case, so far as I can discover from the debate, upon the authority of the Senate to do that thing with instructions. The Senate were practically unanimous on the subject-matter of the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I recall the history of that matter, for I was a member of the other body at that time and upon the committee which had charge of the bill there. Unless the Senator has looked, I am not certain but that the report which was sought to be recommitted with instructions was a report of an agreement; that the Senate desired to come into accord with the other House, and therefore voted down a project to recommit a report which reported an agreement and decided to adopt the report; and the whole matter ended there.

Mr. GRAY. The report was an amendment fixing the rate of salary at something less than the Senate had agreed to by its amendment, and the motion was to recommit that report with an instruction. The Senate were practically unanimous that the salary ought to have been at a higher figure, and the question was to recommit, with instructions to the conferees to insist upon the figure first named by the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Did not the conference committee report an agreement, or did they report a disagreement?

Mr. GRAY. They reported an agreement.

Mr. HALE. I so understood. That was my recollection. They reported an agreement, and the Senate desired that the agreement reported by the conference should be adhered to, and therefore voted down the project to instruct.

Mr. GRAY. The argument that was made upon the question thus raised by those who took that side of the question, Mr. Conkling, Mr. Bayard, and Mr. SHERMAN, and some of the others whose names appear here, was that it was not within the competence of the Senate to recommit the report with instructions.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator see the distinction? In that case the conferees had been together and the Senate conferees reported an adjustment of the whole subjects in difference. I would argue myself that under those conditions, where a conference had exhausted its work and had reported an agreement, and the subject was before the Senate, it must either accept or reject the report and can not instruct. If the report was accepted, that ended it. If the Senate did not agree with the report, it would reject the report and the matter would go back to the conference. But I can understand that it might then with great force be argued that that was the only thing for the Senate to do.

Mr. GRAY. There was no way of opposing the motion made by Senator Wright, as it appears from this debate, except upon the ground which I have placed this point of order, that it was not within the competence of the Senate to instruct in a full and free conference. The merit of this question was gone into quite fully. A distinction was made between a conference where an instruction had been given, which has fallen into disuse so far as the practice of these two bodies is concerned, and what is known in our practice as a full and free conference. It was put upon the ground that it would be absurd to order a full and free conference when the conferees were fettered by instructions from the authority which appointed them.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator see a great difference in the conditions? Here we have not got a report agreed upon by conferees and submitted for our acceptance or rejection. We have no conference report. We have a disagreement and a declaration on the part of the other House that they want a new conference, which we have not yet ordered. Now, that is one condition. But suppose the conferees of the Senate had brought in an agreement upon the Senate amendments to the House bill, as they did in the case cited by the Senator, and their report had come up before the Senate, the simple question is, "Will the Senate agree to the report or disagree to it?" That conference is ended. You can not instruct that conference.

Mr. GRAY. Let me ask my friend from Maine a question. It is, as he says, a second conference which is asked for by my motion. My motion is that the conference asked for by the House be granted; that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed, and the amendments of the Senate insisted upon. Does that differ at all, being a new conference, from the first conference that was appointed?

Mr. HALE. It differs in one respect. If the first conference that was appointed had, as in the case cited by the Senator from Delaware, reported an agreement, and their report had been put on the desk of the clerks, the work of that conference is over. You can not instruct that conference. It would be absurd to instruct them.

Mr. GRAY. I ask if there is any difference in the powers of the conference under a second conference from those that belong to the conferees under the first conference?

Mr. HALE. I will answer the Senator that the first conference takes up the bill and amendments on all questions where there are differences. The only interpretation that the Senate managers can then give to the will of the Senate is in the amendments that the Senate has adopted. The conference has not got to the stage of instructions. If the Senate at that time had wanted to instruct its conferees that the eighth of 1 cent should not be in conference, it would not have put it in as an amendment; but the Senate instructed its conferees then, as it had a right to do on every proposition, by putting into the bill the amendment imposing the additional eighth of 1 cent. That was an instruction to the conferees that such was the will of the Senate. Now, at that stage an amendment was in order.

Mr. GRAY. That is the instruction now.

Mr. HALE. At the present stage it is decided by the Senate that it is not in order, and therefore the irresistible difference comes back. The only power that you have over your conferees, while you can not technically amend the proposition, is to instruct them upon it. I am glad the Senator has asked that question.

Mr. GRAY. I asked it because the scope of the conference in both cases, it seems to me, is precisely the same. After the bill is passed a conference is asked for by the House, the Senate appoints it, if it agrees to appoint a conference at all, and it never occurred to anyone to say that the Senate upon the appointment of the conference in the first instance instructed the conferees upon any point.

Mr. MILLS. It is very hot, and I ask the Senator if he will yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. GRAY. In one moment I will give way. It never occurred to anyone so, far as I know, to say in the appointment of that first conference that the Senate would instruct its conferees as to any matter contained in the bill or the amendments which made the points of difference.

Mr. HALE. It does instruct them. It does instruct them by so amending the bill. That is its form of instructing them, and then it instructs them to insist.

Mr. GRAY. But if it was a matter within the proprieties of parliamentary practice, it was quite as right and proper to instruct then as now. The bill is passed with amendments. It goes to the House, and the House after debate refuses to agree to the Senate amendments, and asks for a conference two or three days thereafter. The Senate, if this power exists, could then instruct just as well as now in asking a second conference.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Minnesota suggests another form of inquiry. The House asks——

Mr. MILLS. Will the Senator from Delaware yield to me?

Mr. GRAY. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, July 27, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 26, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. W. E. PARSON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADULTERATION OF FOODS AND DRUGS.

Mr. HATCH. Under instruction from the Committee on Agriculture, I move that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4863) to prevent the adulteration and misbranding of foods and drugs, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. COOMBS. I want to discuss that question a little.

Mr. HATCH. It is not open to debate.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. HATCH. There is no objection to this on the part of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COOMBS. But I think that is the committee which properly has jurisdiction of this subject. I do not believe a measure of this kind should be referred to the wrong committee.

Mr. HATCH. This is not the wrong committee.

Mr. COOMBS. In my opinion it is, as Congress can not take jurisdiction of the question except as a matter of commerce.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides:

Correction in case of error of reference may be made by the House, without debate, and in accordance with Rule XI, on any day immediately after the reading of the Journal, by unanimous consent, or on motion of a committee claiming jurisdiction, or on the report of the committee to which the bill has been erroneously referred.

The Committee on Agriculture claims jurisdiction of this subject, and on behalf of that committee the gentleman from Missouri makes this motion.

The question being taken, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. COOMBS)—ayes 56, noes 25.

Mr. COOMBS. No quorum.

Mr. HATCH. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COOMBS and Mr. HATCH were appointed as tellers to act during the call of yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 75, answered "present" 1, not voting 148; as follows:

CONFEREES ON HOUSE BILL 6080.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution of the Senate; which was read and laid on the table:

Resolved, That Mr. PETTIGREW be excused from service as one of the conferees on the bill (H. R. 6080) granting a certain military reservation to Oklahoma City, Okla., to aid the public free schools thereof, and for other purposes, and Mr. CAREY be appointed in his place.

METROPOLITAN RAILWAY COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to submit a conference report at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Company to change its motive power for the propulsion of the cars of said company, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 10, 12, and 13, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the proviso; and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same amended so that the section shall be read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Metropolitan Railroad Company is hereby authorized and required immediately to make reciprocal transfer arrangements with street railroad companies whose lines now connect with its lines, and to furnish such facilities therefor as the public convenience may require. Upon the completion of the underground electric system provided for in this act the said Metropolitan Railroad Company is hereby further authorized and required to enter into reciprocal trackage arrangements with connecting roads. The schedules and compensation shall be mutually agreed upon between the said Metropolitan Railroad Company and the companies with whose lines its lines connect; and in any case of failure to reach such mutual agreement the matters in dispute shall be determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, upon petition filed by either party

"Provided, That every street railway company in the District of Columbia whose lines connect, or whose lines may hereafter connect with the lines of any other street railway company, is hereby subjected to the same requirements as to transfers and trackage arrangements and upon similar conditions as in this section provided in the case of the Metropolitan Railroad Company and the lines connecting therewith."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN T. HEARD,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
P. S. POST,
Managers on the part of the House.
JAMES McMILLAN,
ISHAM G. HARRIS,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask now for the reading of the accompanying statement, to which I beg to call the particular attention of the House, as it fully explains the report.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

First amendment requires the company to put new cars on its road within ninety days.

Second, third, fourth, eighth, tenth amendments are formal. They do not affect the provisions of the bill.

Thirteenth amendment is a reservation of the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal the bill.

Fifth amendment: The Senate recedes, leaving the provision so as to require an underground electric system.

Sixth and seventh amendments extend the time for completing the east and west line to two years; the north and south line is to be completed in one year.

Ninth amendment provides for an extension from Ninth to Tenth street. The Senate recedes from its requirement that the company shall cease to operate its lines so as to connect with the Brightwood road on Seventh street.

Eleventh amendment requires the Metropolitan and all other companies to make transfer and trackage arrangements with connecting lines, subject to the determination of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in case of disagreements.

Twelfth amendment places an annual tax of $500 on horse cars operated after the dates set for the changes required.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized.

Mr. WARNER. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WARNER. May I ask whether the effect of the agreement or the recommendation of the conferees will leave the company required to adopt an underground electric system?

Mr. HEARD. Absolutely.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HEARD. And no other kind.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, if I may have a few minutes I will explain these amendments briefly. I ask the attention of the House, and will only occupy a few moments' time. I will run through the amendments hurriedly, for there are only about six of them that are of any consequence.

Mr. COOMBS. We want all of them explained.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will state that they are nearly all of them immaterial, except six, but I will mention each one, in order that the House may judge of the materiality for itself.

Mr. COOMBS. I suggest to the gentleman that he state as to each amendment whether it is a House amendment or a Senate amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The House passed the bill, and all the amendments are Senate amendments. The first amendment of the Senate requires the company to put new cars on its road within ninety days. Within ninety days from the passage of this bill the company is required to equip its line from end to end with new cars, under penalty of $25 a car for each day that they run an old car. The House agreed to that amendment.

The second, fourth, eighth, and tenth amendments are formal. They do not affect the provisions of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Does the gentleman prefer to make his complete statement now, or will he submit to a query touching the first amendment?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will, right now, as to the first amendment, if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As I understand it, this horse railway, the Metropolitan line, is to be changed to an electric railway?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, it is not supposed that that change can be made in ninety days, is it?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, not at all; but they are required to put on new cars at an expense of from forty to fifty thousand dollars at least within ninety days while using the present motive power.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Does my friend think it is proper to require a company that are to make a change to electric cars to entirely re-equip their horse line within ninety days and then make another change of equipment later on?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is an amendment of the Senate, and the House conferees have agreed to it. The company say they will do it, and I presume they will use the cars as trailers after they have adopted the new motive power. It is a severe rule to apply, but the company submit to it, and the House conferees were not willing to take out the provision.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Do I understand that the company agree to it?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. They are compelled to agree to it.

Mr. HEARD. They do agree to it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The object of my inquiry was to know whether it was just to compel a company to spend forty or fifty thousand dollars in new equipment, to be thrown away a little later.

Mr. DALZELL. It will not be thrown away.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman that it would not be just if it were not for the fact that they can use these cars as trailers on the electric line.

The second, third, fourth, eighth, and tenth amendments correct the grammar of the bill. The word "their" is substituted for "its," as applicable to the company. The words "the date of" are stricken out. There is nothing at all material in any of these amendments.

The thirteenth amendment is a reservation of the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal the bill. That was not in the House bill, and it was accepted by the conferees.

The Senate recedes from the fifth amendment, leaving the provision so as to require an underground electric system. As the bill was originally introduced, it provided for an underground electric system. When it was reported from the district committee the word "electric" was left out, but on the floor an amendment was offered, to insert the word "electric." This amendment carried, and the bill went to the Senate with the word "electric" in it, providing for an underground electric system.

The Senate struck out the word "electric," but in conference, upon suggestion of members of the House, who insisted on the word going in, the House conferees have had it reinstated. Therefore, the power is the underground electric system.

The sixth and seventh amendments are important. They extend the time for the completion of the east and west line to two years, the north and south line to be completed in one year. As the bill was reported, it gave them one year on the north and south line and three years on the east and west line; but in the House an amendment was adopted which cut the time down to one year. The Senate amended the House provision so as to require the work to be performed on the north and south line—that is the Ninth street line—in one year, and on the east and west line within two years from the passage of this bill.

Mr. COX. What line is that?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is the line that runs over F street and East Capitol street, and on to Georgetown.

Now, Mr. Speaker, upon that there was contention. The House conferees were not willing, under the instructions had from the House, to yield the time, and that contention was made until there was proof presented which demonstrated the fact to them that it could not be done inside of two years on the east and west line. Altogether this line will be 9 or 10 miles long, and double track; and it is thought that two years is as early as the east and west line can be completed.

I have in my hand, which I will not read, but which I will insert in my remarks, a letter from Mr. Upton, who is said to be a competent engineer—he was engineer of the Washington and Georgetown street-railway line, and has had experience in the building of street-car lines in the District of Columbia. He says in this letter that it is not possible for this corporation to complete these two lines inside of two years. He thinks the north and south line can hardly be completed within a year; but the bill requires it to be done within a year. He thinks the east and west line can not be completed inside of two years; and therefore the House conferees yielded to the Senate upon that amendment and fixed the time as the Senate fixed it, being one year for the north and south line and two years for the east and west line.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. You say that in your judgment the north and south line can be completed in one year?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I say this engineer says there is doubt about whether it can be completed in one year, but the bill compels them to do it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why can not they be built concurrently?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not know that I can answer that to the satisfaction of the gentleman. The Budapest system, which they propose to adopt, is something new in this country, and it may be that it is not a success. I do not know how that is. At any rate we thought, and we still think, if they complete the north and south line in one year and the east and west line in two years they will do a good work.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then you are giving them two years for additional experiments?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not at all. I call the gentleman's attention to the twelfth amendment of the Senate, which provides that in the event they do not complete the north and south line in one year and the east and west line within two years, that there shall be a tax of $500 on every horse car operating after that time on their line. I think that means business. I do not think that means further time for experiment.

Mr. HEPBURN. Are you not giving them a year on the east and west line for further experiment?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. What will they be doing in the meantime?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It will take more than a million of dollars for them to build this road, and it can not be done under two years.

Mr. HEPBURN. That does not answer my question.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. BOWERS of California. A great many years ago, away on the plains, away from all appliances, 10 miles of track were laid in one day on the Overland route, and it is a wonder that they can not build a little road of this kind in a year.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Was it an underground electric system?

Mr. BOWERS of California. They could do it in ninety days if they wanted to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; if they had a bonus of about $40,000 a mile and thousands of acres of land for every mile they built; but they have no such bonus as that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I want to understand what is meant by the proviso in your amendment that requires this company and all other companies to make traffic arrangements?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will come to that in a moment. I am taking the amendments as I come to them, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Those are the sixth and seventh amendments. I want to say right here that the conference committee gave most careful attention to this question. It may not be improper to refer to the personnel of that committee. There is no politics in it, at any rate. On the part of the Senate, the committee of conference was composed of two Republicans, Senator MCMILLAN and Senator HANSBROUGH, and one Democrat, Senator HARRIS. The House conferees are the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HEARD, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. POST, and myself, making three of each party on the committee of conference.

The committee gave very close and earnest attention to this matter, and after the fullest investigation came unanimously to the conclusion that the work could not be done more expeditiously than is provided for in this bill.

The next amendment, the ninth, provides for the extension from Ninth to Tenth street. The Senate recedes from it amendment that the company shall cease to operate its line connecting with the Brightwood road on Seventh street. At the head of Ninth street there is a small branch which runs on Boundary street on the line of the U street road from Ninth to Eighth, and on to Seventh and up Seventh about 100 yards to the stables on the Brightwood overhead trolley line.

The Senate struck out so much of the House bill as required this line to run from the head of Ninth street along the Boundary and up Seventh street to the stables, but the House conferees insisted that that provision should be reinstated, and the Senate yielded. So we have put back in the bill the provision which requires this company to make connection on Seventh street with the Brightwood or Takoma Park road.

Mr. COX. Suppose this company should fail to comply with the conditions within the time prescribed?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have just stated that in that case they are to be fined $500 for every horse car they continue to run after the expiration of the two years.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. That is in case they fail on both lines.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. On either line.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The bill does not read that way.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes it does. I have read you simply the statement, and was not reading the bill. I will now read that provision in the bill.

Mr. COX. Suppose they fail on one line and comply with the requirement of the law on the other?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This provision for a penalty in the bill was drawn by Senator MCMILLAN. It reads:

SEC. 6. That on and after one year from the approval of this act the Metropolitan Railway Company shall pay to the District of Columbia, in addition to all other taxes now required to be paid by said company, an annual tax of $500 for each and every car operated by horses on that portion of its lines known as the Ninth Street line; and on and after two years from the approval of this act the said railway company shall pay, in addition to all other taxes now required to be paid by said company, an annual tax of $500 for each and every car operated by horses on any line owned or controlled by the said company.

I have explained the ninth amendment, which provides for making the connection at the head of Ninth street.

The eleventh amendment requires the Metropolitan Company and all other companies to make transfer and trackage arrangements with connecting lines, subject to the determination of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in case of any disagreement between the companies.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Under that provision these suburban roads that are pressing to get into the city can come in on lines already constructed?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. They can.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. So that we will not have to remain in fear of having the streets torn up in front of our houses to oblige speculative gentlemen who may desire to get new street railway franchises in the city of Washington?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman's question answers itself, I think.

Mr. COOMBS. Is this arrangement as to trackage to begin after the completion of the road or immediately?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The transfer arrangement is to begin at once. I will read the amendment, and I ask attention to it because this seems to be about the only matter as to which there is controversy, and I do not think there will be any about this when practical men come to look at it:

SEC. 5. That the Metropolitan Railroad is hereby authorized and required immediately to make reciprocal transfer arrangements with street railroad companies whose lines now connect with its lines and to furnish the facilities therefor as the public convenience may require.

Mr. COOMBS. That refers to transfers.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes. They are required to make immediately reciprocal transfer arrangements with all connecting lines, so as to bring passengers from the suburban lines into the heart of the city. I read further from this section:

Upon the completion of the underground electric system provided for in this act, the said Metropolitan Railway Company is hereby further authorized and required to enter into reciprocal trackage arrangements with connecting roads. The schedules and compensation shall be mutually agreed upon between the said Metropolitan Railroad Company and the companies with whose lines its lines connect; and in any case of failure to reach such mutual agreement the matters in dispute shall be determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia upon petition filed by either party: Provided, That every street railway company in the District of Columbia whose lines connect, or whose lines may hereafter connect, with the lines of any other street railway company, is hereby subjected to the same requirements as to transfers and trackage arrangements and upon similar conditions, as in this section provided in the case of the Metropolitan Railroad Company and the lines connecting therewith.

Mr. COOMBS. I suppose, then, the idea of the committee is that Ninth street shall be made the inlet and outlet for the suburban roads?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, sir; not that idea simply. The idea is that the Metropolitan Railroad Company has the Ninth street line, and has, too, the Connecticut avenue line, which connects with the Rock Creek road at Eighteenth street. Now, this bill provides that there must be immediately on all the street railroads of this city, where they connect, reciprocal arrangements for the transfer of passengers from one line to another without change of cars. That is all the public can ask.

Mr. COOMBS. The suggestion has been made this morning—and I think attention ought to be called to the matter—that the Metropolitan road proposes to adopt a voltage of their own, different from that of the other roads.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will discuss that question in a moment. What has now been said leaves only the question of power——

Mr. HERMANN. Before the gentleman proceeds to discuss that question let me ask him whether "reciprocity" or "reciprocal arrangements", where that language occurs, refers, as the gentleman understands, to a uniformity of rates?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman, as I understand, wishes to know what is meant by the term "reciprocal arrangement." It simply means a mutual arrangement between these railroad companies. Where their lines connect they must make arrangement for the convenience of the public; and in case of a disagreement between them as to the rate of compensation, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, upon the petition of either party, is to settle the question.

Mr. HERMANN. Does it imply that the rate is to be one and the same—that the rate of one road is to be recognized by the other?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, it does not settle the rates; it simply leaves that question open for adjustment between the officers of the companies; and in the event that they can not agree, the supreme court of the District must settle it amicably and equitably.

Mr. HERMANN. And there is to be one rate, I understand, applying to these continuous roads?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. One rate.

The only other question is that with reference to voltage; and when we come to talk about that I confess to some want of knowledge, for I am not an expert in electricity. But there is, I believe, a standard voltage in this country for running street cars; the power must be equal to 500 volts for overhead systems. That is the standard for the overhead trolley, as I understand.

Mr. KILGORE. I suppose the gentleman means 500 strokes of lightning.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, it is worse than lightning—worse than Texas "chain lightning." [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to get through, because we are trespassing upon the time assigned to the special order.

Mr. COOMBS. But this is an important bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is.

Let me say this: The Metropolitan Railroad Company, having been required by Congress to use an underground electric system, has determined, as we are informed, to use what is known as the Budapest system, and I have been told that that can be run with 300 volts. The conferees were informed that in New York City there is an underground system running with 250 volts. I do not know how that is. I understand that the Love system which is being operated in this city requires 500 volts, and that is the standard power of the overhead trolley. But the underground electric system does not require more than 300 volts.

That being the fact, the conferees felt unwilling to prescribe any standard of voltage. I take it such will be the feeling of the House. We did not feel willing to require the Rock Creek road, operating a part of its line by the Love system, to cease to use the 500 volts and restrict itself to 300 volts. On the other hand, I take it, this House would not be willing to require that the Metropolitan Company, which is to use the Budapest system, shall adopt any higher standard than 300 volts. In other words, we require this road, the Metropolitan Railroad, to use the underground electric system; and we leave it to elect from the various systems the one in which it chooses to invest its money. That is all there is of the matter.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that there is a scheme to unite the Metropolitan Line with the Chevy Chase Road, the cars of each running on the tracks of the other. I understand further that the Chevy Chase cars can not be run with 300 volts, but must have as many as 500. Hence if we adopt a limitation of 300 volts, would not that exclude the Chevy Chase Road from any reciprocal relation with the Metropolitan?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It would not; they could not use their motive power on the other line; but they could provide for the transfer of cars and passengers. Their cars could be brought in as trailers.

Mr. KILGORE. But the proposition is to run the cars clear through, for instance, from the Capitol to Chevy Chase, without change and for a single fare.

Mr. HEARD. The bill provides for that.

Mr. KILGORE. That may be; but if you fix the limit of power below that necessary to operate the Chevy Chase cars, then you exclude that road from participation in this arrangement.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, I will ask the gentleman from Texas if this Metropolitan Company, which is to put a million of dollars, more or less, into a system of electric underground motive power, should not be permitted to decide for themselves which one they will select?

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I would not undertake to prevent them——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We say that they shall use an underground electric motor system, and inasmuch as there are quite a number of these systems, all of them involving a great expense, we leave them to decide for themselves which they shall use.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes; but the public interests should have something to say in the matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee (continuing). If they can get a system to operate with 300 volts, let them do it in Heaven's name. Do not force them to take a higher voltage than that when it is not necessary.

Now, in response to the gentleman's further suggestion, we give in this matter to the public all that they want, or all that they can ask, by bringing in the cars of the Rock Creek and all other connecting lines on the Metropolitan road to the center of the city. It is true that if there is a difference in any two systems used they may not bring in their motors, but they bring the cars and the passengers of the company.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, they will have to be operated with some power.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, no; the power of the Metropolitan road will haul their cars.

Mr. WASHINGTON. They will simply hitch on their cars to the Metropolitan motors.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit me, I notice right at this point the provision to which the gentleman has referred; that is, that if these companies can not reach an agreement between themselves as to the interchange or the use of their cars, that it shall be carried, upon petition, to the supreme court.

Now, the gentleman says that the standard voltage of street electric railroad construction and operation is 500 volts——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, no.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois (continuing). This company proposes to use a system requiring only 300 volts, and everybody that understands anything about it understands that the change from 500 volts to 300, or vice versa, can not be made with regard to these motors without very great expense.

Now, does not my friend think, as this matter is to go to the supreme court anyhow, in the event of a disagreement between these companies, that the question of the voltage to be used by the company should also go there if they can not agree about it? In other words, if the Metropolitan road will not agree with the surburban roads on fair terms, let the question of power or voltage be submitted to the supreme court also.

Mr. HEARD. Will my colleague on the committee allow me a moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. I want to ask on what authority the gentleman from Illinois asserts that there is any standard of electro-motive power in use in this country or anywhere else?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I will state to the gentleman that I have had some little information about the matter; that I have taken some interest in the question of motive powers of street railroads, and have acquired some little general knowledge about it, and that information was reënforced by the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee himself that the standard voltage was 500 in this country.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me, I said the standard of the overhead trolley, operated on the Rock Creek line, was about 500 volts; but I distinctly said that the standard for the underground or Budapest system is only 300 volts, and that in New York they were operating a line of railway, an underground electric system, with less than 250 volts.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman state if the Budapest system is operated anywhere in the United States at this time?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am unable to answer the gentleman as to that, but I think not.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then another question: Is it not practical for the Budapest system to use 500 volts instead of 300?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is absolutely impracticable; and I will state to the gentleman that the experts who are informed made that conclusion perfectly clear and unanswerable. The conferees were told by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] that it was absolutely impossible for the Love system, which is in use on the Rock Creek line, to use 300 volts, and equally impossible for the Budapest system, which uses 300 volts, to change to 500 volts. It was said by the experts that it would destroy the batteries and render utterly useless the motive power of the roads.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, my opinion is not that way, and I think I can state with some degree of certainty that the Budapest system can be operated with 500 volts. And whether it can or not, there is another question to be considered here. My friend talks of expending a million dollars by this road for the underground system, and then says to the suburban roads, exceeding many miles the length of the Metropolitan system, that they shall not come into the city where the great travel is unless they come in over the city line of the Metropolitan road, and that they shall not come in then——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not say that. There is no such statement and nothing to warrant it in the conference report.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Ah, but the gentlemen says the suburban systems can not come in on the Metropolitan line, because they use 500 volts, while the Metropolitan road will use but 300 under this system. Now, who is entitled to the greater consideration in this matter, the suburban roads with their long lines, using 500 volts, or the Metropolitan line, which is to put in a new underground system? Should not the entire new road about to be constructed, if it be practical, use the 500 volts, and thereby accommodate the long suburban lines; or will you compel the suburban system, which has but little travel, to throw away their present motors and substitutes new ones to accommodate them to the proposed new system to be adopted by the Metropolitan road?

Is it not more equitable for the new road about to be constructed to have to interchange with the suburban roads already constructed than to require the latter to conform to what may be adopted by the Metropolitan line? Now, it seems to me that in a question of that character, involving as it does so much, that the question of voltage and other questions of disagreement which may arise between these lines, might well and profitably be left to the supreme court on petition or to the Commissioners of the District as we may provide.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield to my colleague [Mr. WASHINGTON].

Mr. WASHINGTON. Do you think the House of Representatives ought to select the particular system that each road should be compelled to adopt, and thereby assume the responsibility of failure, if there is failure?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, no.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is what you propose to do.

Mr. WASHINGTON. That is what you are trying to do, and altogether in the interest of one system of underground transmission of power and one road.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yielded to my friend for a question. I am pressed by other gentlemen, who desire to bring up other matters, and I hope the gentleman will not consume the time of the House needlessly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, well, this matter is not going through without information, in my judgment, and the gentleman yielded to his colleague [Mr. WASHINGTON] to ask me a question, and I wish to reply.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman answer the question and not argue the matter? I will yield to the gentleman for an answer.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will try, but I must have a little time to answer. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] asked if Congress can undertake to say what the exact voltage shall be, whether 300 or 500? That was the effect of his question, and I answer no. But when I answer no I must also state what the fact is. At an expense equal to or exceeding the cost of this proposed change in the Metropolitan line, the Chevy Chase road and the Brightwood and Tacoma Park roads have been built. These have been built with the prevailing standard system of 500 volts.

Mr. HEARD. Overhead.

Mr. WASHINGTON. You will not allow this line to use the overhead system, which I would be willing to do.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will contain his soul in peace.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I am about as peaceful as the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will not consume too much time.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I do not think it is high treason to inquire what the facts are about this report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, not at all.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, having stated so much as to the suburban roads, it is stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, and such is the fact, that these suburban roads do not come into the city now. Congress desires to let them come in. They have been knocking at the doors of Congress for the privilege of getting into the city, and we have regretted that they were not in, so that we could get into the country.

Now, Congress has said, "You shall not come into the city," but Congress turns around and says by this amendment, "You may come into the city, but you must come in over the lines of the Metropolitan road, which we are now providing for, and you must come in with a power that will prohibit you from using your present power, which is 500 voltage."

Mr. HEARD. Will my friend allow an inquiry?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I can not yield the floor all day. I want to get along.

Mr. HEARD. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I simply want to correct the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. He says this will prohibit the Rock Creek road from getting its cars into town. Does not the gentleman know that the provisions of this section will require the Metropolitan road to draw the cars into town in case the Rock Creek or any other connecting road can not use its own power?

The Brightwood road has the same interest. The Tennallytown road and the Rock Creek road and every other road in the suburbs have the same interest.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This amendment provides for all connecting roads.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman makes it that much stronger; and let me say to him that the Metropolitan road should not be allowed to impose terms upon these great suburban systems that their cars shall come in upon that line and be dragged in as trailers.

Now, then, I desire to say that it is confessed by the gentlemen in charge of this bill that the suburban railroads can not come in upon this track on less than 500 voltage, except as their cars are hauled as trailers. Now, then, I desire to say, from the best information I can get, that it is perfectly practicable under the Budapest system, or in any other underground system, to use 500 voltage on that system. Let me read on that point a telegram which has just been handed me, which is conclusive upon that subject:

CHICAGO, ILL., July 25.

FRANCIS J. NEWLANDS,
President Rock Creek Railroad, House of Representatives:
Budapest system as modified for America will work all right 500 volts.
SIEMENS AND HALSK ELECTRIC COMPANY.

Mr. HEPBURN. They are the agents here.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. They are the agents, as I am informed, of that company.

Now, then, I want this conference report voted down, and sent back to conference, to leave this question of voltage open, not according to the wish of the Metropolitan Railroad, not according to the wish of the suburban railways, because they may be either one or the other selfish, but I want it left open for fair adjustment, if it can be adjusted; and if it can not be adjusted, I want them all to have the right to go to the supreme court of the District on petition and let the supreme court say what the voltage shall be and what the terms shall be. It seems to me that it gives equity and fairness, and that is what I believe ought to be done.

It may be the court, on petition, would have that right under the provision as agreed upon in the conference report, but if the conference report is voted down there might be an agreement by another conference expressly authorizing the court to determine the voltage.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Upon the point the gentleman has just made of making it uniform, Congress will have the power to make it uniform, if it can be done, hereafter. The gentleman speaks as if it were a question of the voltage of the Budapest system. The gentleman, if he will think for a moment, will remember, and ought to know, that the apparatus and fixtures used by the Budapest underground system are different from those used by the Love system; and even if they had stored 500 volts they could only attach it and use it by using the same machinery.

Mr. WASHINGTON. They do not use the same trolley.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. They do not use the same trolley. They use the overhead in part, and this is underground; but we do not undertake to say, and I do not believe that this House intends to say, to this Metropolitan Railroad Company, "You shall use an underground electric system, and we shall select it for you;" but that if they are to spend a million dollars in order to carry out this improvement, let them select their own plant and spend their money as they desire. Let them select their own system and expend their own money, and let Congress require the work to be done in a workmanlike manner. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD].

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the attention of the House to the main virtues of this proposition, which are these. It proposes, in a way that is perfectly fair, to give all the people who live in the suburbs the means of getting into the city without change of cars, because if a suburban line has a power which does not admit of being used on the main line, this law compels the main line to draw its cars into the city, and thereby furnishes the accommodation in that direction which the public requires. This applies not only to the Metropolitan and Rock Creek lines, but to any other connecting lines.

But the main advantage of this bill is that it establishes what the people of this District have hoped for for years. It subjects, under reasonable conditions, the main lines to the use of the newer outlying lines to such an extent that it will not be necessary hereafter to appropriate any more of our streets in the heart of the city to railroad purposes in order to get suburban residents into the city. In other words, this measure will enable, and will practically compel, the use of the main street railroad lines of this city by all suburban lines connecting with them, under equitable conditions, and will remove the necessity for giving up the use of any more of our important streets to the occupancy of railroads. And the terms of this proposition are absolutely fair. Any street railroad connecting with another road may make application to the managers of the road with which it so connects for terms for transfers or trackage. If the companies can not agree, then the question goes to the supreme court of the District on the application of either party, and it is there settled just as questions are now settled between these companies where their tracks coincide; and the question of compensation is also thus determined. This adopts the principle of the existing law as it relates to controversies between street railroads, and gives either road the right to make application to the supreme court to fix the terms and conditions upon which the people of the District shall be furnished the transfer accommodation which is necessary or desirable.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to be recognized in my own time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to get through with this matter, and I wish the gentleman would state what time he desires.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want only a reasonable time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have only ten minutes left, and I will yield the gentleman eight.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I will take that, though I want more time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am anxious to get through with this report, because the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is pressing us.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that every amendment of moment adopted and insisted upon by the House has been waived and given away by the conferees.

Mr. HEARD. How about the question of electric power?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We have yielded on but one amendment, and that is as to the time.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the attack that was made upon the bill as it was reported by the committee was, first, because of the extended time that it grantsd to the Metropolitan Company to insist upon carrying out their own purposes, without any regard whatever to the declared will of Congress.

Bear in mind that more than five years ago this railroad company was required by law to adopt some other and more speedy system of motive power than that which it was then using and which it is still using. That law went into effect in March, 1889, and from that day to the present this company has treated it with absolute contempt. They came in here demanding two years additional time, and stated as a reason that they had been experimenting and had expended $400,000 in experiments, which was so much lost to them. That statement was shown to be erroneous, and the House finally gave them a single year. Now the conference committee has given that away. That is one point.

The next important proposition was, that Congress adopted the policy, or it was in the minds of members to adopt the policy, of using this road as a trunk line to bring into the center of the city on its tracks the suburban roads; but not one of those roads, under this amendment, can ever reach the center of the city.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Every one of them can have its passengers brought in for one fare.

Mr. HEPBURN. Not one of them can reach the center of the city. You can compel the hauling of their heavy cars, laden with their machinery; you can compel those companies to pay the expense of having that dead weight hauled by other companies, the suburban roads being powerless to use their own machinery. You can do that, but I undertake to say that that was not the purpose of the House, and there is no railroad in existence that, under the provisions of this amendment, can compel the hauling of its cars except one, because there is only one that now connects with this road.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What line is that?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is the Rock Creek line.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why, the Brightwood line, the Belt line, the Tennallytown line, all connect with this road. The gentleman is not familiar with the subject or he would not make such statements.

Mr. HEPBURN. The Brightwood line connects with it if this company is compelled to continue that part of its line between Ninth and Seventh streets——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And this conference report requires that.

Mr. HEPBURN. But if they are permitted to abandon that, as the Senate amendment proposes, they will then deflect toward Tenth street and be three blocks away from a connection with the Brightwood line.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman must know very well that this conference report requires them to keep up that connection. I know the gentleman does not intend to misstate the matter. The spirit of advocacy should not tempt him to overlook the facts. The bill requires that connection to be kept up; and the same is true in regard to the connection with the Tennallytown road.

Mr. HEPBURN. Where is the connection with that road?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. In Georgetown. I do not know that I can state exactly where.

Mr. WASHINGTON. At High street.

Mr. HEPBURN. Where connections exist, the gentleman may be correct; but under the terms of this amendment, if connections should hereafter be made over intermediate roads, then there will be nothing obligatory with regard to this matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The amendment is drawn to cover all connecting lines.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is not generous for the gentleman, after giving me eight minutes, to consume nearly all my time himself.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman wanders so far away from the facts that I could not refrain from correcting him.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to see this conference report voted down with a view to sending the matter again to conference, so that the question of voltage may be submitted to a proper arbitration. Under the terms of this amendment, as has been stated, this company is permitted to use whatever voltage it may choose. This ought not to be; there ought to be uniformity in this matter among all these roads. If electricity is to be the motive power, then there should be some class of machinery common to all the roads, and there ought to be some power to determine the question of voltage.

Mr. WASHINGTON. How can we have that when the Senate will not permit the overhead trolley system to be introduced this side of the boundary, and when nearly all the roads beyond the boundary are operated by the overhead trolley?

Mr. HEPBURN. The machinery of the overhead trolley can easily be adapted to the underground system. One or the other is to be the rule, I take it. There is no difficulty in settling this matter. Let us give the Commissioners power to determine what the voltage shall be, and what the class of machinery shall be; or if you do not like that, let the supreme court of the District of Columbia determine it.

Let us have some common system and common method, and then there will be a possibility of getting into and out of the city without a multiplication of tracks. I do not believe it is the temper of this House to grant any additional roads in the northeastern part of the city. From all that I have observed I think it is impossible for any new company in that direction to be chartered. Hence I believe it is the policy to use the Metropolitan tracks for the purpose of getting into the central portion of the city. Let us have some provision on this subject which shall be effective.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely impracticable to refer the question of voltage to the courts. If you do that, the work of preparing for and putting in operation this improved motive power must be postponed until that question is settled. Practically it will be an indefinite postponement. Congress proposes to require this road to complete this work within one year on the north and south line, and within two years on the east and west line. If the work is to be postponed indefinitely until this question of voltage can be settled in the courts, it will be a long time before we shall have rapid transit on the Metropolitan line.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois rose.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I can not yield to the gentleman, because I have not the time; and he declined to yield when he had the floor.

Mr. Speaker, the conferees are unanimous. They agree that this report embodies the best that can be done. It is a public necessity that the Metropolitan road should complete its system and introduce rapid transit. As my time is about expiring, I move the previous question and ask the House to adopt the conference report.

Mr. HAINES. Will not the gentleman withdraw the previous question in order to allow me ten minutes?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If I had the time I would; but the gentleman knows I have not.

Mr. HAINES. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has demanded the previous question.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question there were, on a division (called for by Mr. HEPBURN)—ayes 92, noes 19.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum.

Mr. HEARD and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays where ordered.

The SPEAKER named as tellers to act during the roll call Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee and Mr. HEPBURN, both of whom asked to be excused from serving; and Mr. HEARD and Mr. DOOLITTLE were appointed.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 166, nays 40, answering "present," 3, not voting 142; as follows:

Mr. WELLS with Mr. APSLEY.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The report of the conference committee was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WISE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, the Committee on the Public Lands was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7516) granting to the Gila Valley, Globe and Northern Railway Company the right to enter upon the White Mountain Indian Reservation and the Camp Thomas military reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, for the purpose of making a survey of its line; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PORT ANGELES, WASH.

Mr. McRAE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7499) to grant to the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington, certain lands within the town site of Port Angeles, Wash., for cemetery purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. McRAE also, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported in lieu of House bill No. 7733, to grant the right of way through the public lands for tramways, ditches, and canals, and for other purposes, a bill (H. R. 7828) to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramways, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The bill H. R. 7733—the original bill—will be laid on the table.

SETTLEMENT WITH CERTAIN INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. MADDOX, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7810) to authorize the Attorney-General to bring suit in the supreme court of the District of Columbia against the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians, the Comanche, Kiowa, Apache, Choctaw, and Chickasaw tribes, to determine and settle the legal or equitable interest of said Indians in certain lands located between the ninety-eighth and one hundredth degree of west longitude, in Oklahoma Territory, and located within the territory leased from the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes in the year 1855 and ceded in 1866, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS SOUTH CANADIAN RIVER.

Mr. DURBOROW, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (S. 320) to authorize the Purcell Bridge and Transfer Company to construct a bridge over the South Canadian River at or within one mile of the town of Lexington, county of Cleveland, Territory of Oklahoma; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the second morning hour to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WISE. I now call up the special order fixed for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 26th instant, after the second morning hour, be assigned to the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ORGANIZATION OF THE LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill (H. R. 2795) to amend section 5 of an act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to organize the Life Saving Service."

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill called up by the gentleman from Virginia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act of Congress approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to organize the Life Saving Service," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That hereafter the life-saving stations upon the sea and Gulf coasts at which crews are employed shall be manned and the stations opened for active service on the 1st day of August in each year, and so continued until the 1st day of June succeeding; and upon the lake coasts from the opening to the close of navigation, except such stations as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury are not necessary to be manned during the full period specified; and the crews shall reside at the stations during said periods."

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce recommended the following amendment:

In line 8, section 5, strike out the word "sea" and insert the word "Atlantic."

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] is recognized.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not understand the character of the amendment which was offered.

Mr. MALLORY. It is simply to strike out the word "sea" and insert the word "Atlantic."

Mr. WISE. The only amendment proposed by the committee is to strike out the word "sea" and insert the word "Atlantic;" so that it will read "on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts" instead of "sea and Gulf coasts."

Mr. Chairman, I will make the statement that the whole effect of this bill is to have these life stations manned from the 1st day of August until June, instead of from the 1st day of September until May.

Mr. BOUTELLE That is right.

Mr. WISE. The Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service states, in a letter which I have in my hand, that he regards this as absolutely necessary for the preservation of life and property; that in recent years, during the months of August and May, we have had most terrible storms upon our coasts during those two months of May and August, when the life-saving stations are not manned, and he states in this letter which I hold in my hand, and which I will have read, if necessary, that he deems it to be necessary, as I have stated, for the preservation of life and property.

No mention is here made of the Pacific coast, because on that coast he is authorized to have these stations manned whenever he deems it to be necessary. There is no such provision in the law which enables him to have the stations so manned on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, and if this bill is passed it will enable him to have these stations manned on those coasts as they are now on the Pacific coast, for the preservation of life and of property.

This is recommended, I say, not only by the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, but by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I believe that if the members of the House will take the trouble to read his report, they will see the necessity for this legislation. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the portion of the report which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The effect of the bill if enacted into law would be to open and man for active service the life-saving stations on the sea and gulf coasts on the 1st day of August in each year, and to keep them so opened and manned until the 1st day of June succeeding, instead of during the time now authorized by law.

At present the stations on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts are opened on the 1st day of September and closed on the 1st day of May following, under the authority of section 5 of the act of June 18, 1878, which the bill proposes to amend.

Under the provisions of a subsequent act, however (see section 6, act of May 4, 1882, entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service, and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck"), crews may be employed at any of the stations on the Pacific coast during such portion of the year as the General Superintendent of the service may deem necessary. This authority was given in view of the fact that at several dangerous points on the Pacific coast disasters to vessels more frequently occur, as experience has shown, from local causes than from stress of weather, and are about as liable to happen at one season as at another, making it necessary to keep the station open the year around.

The frequency of dangerous tempests along the Atlantic seaboard during the months of May and August, and the special ferocity which has characterized them in recent years, causing widespread destruction of life and property, and which have now come to be expected with the regularity that has been supposed to mark the occurrence of the so-called equinoctial storms, have created an almost universal demand for the protection which it is expected the extension of the active season of the Life-Saving Service to embrace these months would afford.

Mr. WISE. Now, does my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] wish to say anything?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. WISE. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the principle of this bill, but I desire to call the attention of the committee to what was done in the Life-Saving Service in 1892, and to give the reasons, as I am informed, which were stated why that action was had.

In 1892 the salaries of surfmen were increased from $50 to $65 a month. They were generally employed but eight months in the year, and the argument was used that inasmuch as they were employed only for that length of time, and as they could not get employment for the remaining four months, their salaries should be increased from $50 to $65 per month. Now, I desire to read a letter which was handed to me in regard to this matter. It is dated Atlantic City, N. J., June, 1894, and is as follows:

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry as to how the compensation paid by the Government to the surfmen in the life-saving crews compares with the rates obtainable by seafaring men in other pursuits, I would say that the old rate of $50 per month was more than men of that class could get on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts in ordinary maritime pursuits.

Mr. COGSWELL. That is, as common sailors?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

It is understood that subsistence at the stations costs the men less than $10 per month, which left at least $40 per month net, above the cost of subsistence.

That is, when the pay was $50 a month. That left $40 per month net.

The crews of vessels in the coasting trade are paid from $20 to $25 per month net, and men on fishing steamers sometimes in very favorable seasons get as high as $35 per month net, but the exposure and boat work here are very severe.

That is, in the fishing season.

The crews of wrecking steamers and harbor towing vessels average less than $27 per month.

When the rate for surfmen in the Life-Saving Service was raised in 1892 from $50 to $65 per month, much use was made of the argument that they had steady employment for only eight months in the year; but this was not a valid reason for the advance, as, during the summer months, which constitute the off season, there is more call for the employment of competent boatmen than during the rest of the year.

Wrecks are few during the fine weather usually prevailing in May, June, July, and August, and as the captains of the stations are left on duty during these months and the apparatus is constantly available, if a dangerous stranding should occur and the vessel remain intact long enough for ordinary operations, a volunteer crew can be assembled with but little delay to effect the rescue.

Mr. COGSWELL. There have been two wrecks on the shore of my district where volunteer crews could not be assembled quickly enough to save them.

Mr. SAYERS. I thought the gentleman from Massachusetts and I understood each other as to this bill.

Mr. COGSWELL. I guess we do, generally, but I do not agree with the contents of that letter, where it says they can get along at an expense of $10 a month, and so forth.

Mr. SAYERS (reading):

Great promptness in rendering aid is perhaps only necessary during the winter months, when sufferers must be relieved as quickly as possible, not only from the fury of the waves, but from the dangers of cold and exposure.

If more money can now be readily appropriated for the Life-Saving Service, it might be well to give the crews employment for the entire year, but restore the old rate of $50 per month. This would give a surfman $600 per annum, and this is more than can be earned by a seafaring man in any less responsible capacity than as an officer of a vessel.

To leave the rate as high as at present, $65 per month, and extend the period of service to ten months, as suggested, then for reasons of the same nature make it ultimately cover the entire year, will create an employment with so much higher pay than any similar occupation as to bring a demand for these places from those not by any means fitted for this sort of work, and tend to exclude the real seafaring element, which in the past has done such excellent work.

Respectfully, yours,

CAPT. EDWARD WILSON,
Master Mariner and Underwriters' Agent for Egg Harbor, etc.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr WISE. This bill has nothing in the world to do with the question of the rate of compensation of these men. As I understand, the gentleman is debating the question of salary, and the letter he has read is simply as to how much these men ought to be paid per month. The bill which we have offered simply has relation to the time when they shall be employed.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Does it not increase the appropriation?

Mr. WISE. The Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service says that the months of May and August in recent years are the most dangerous months; and during those months we have had more shipwrecks upon the Atlantic and Gulf coasts in recent years than in any other period of the year. He says that he thinks under these circumstances he ought to have authority, as you have given in reference to the Pacific, to have these stations manned during those periods when they are most required.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. How much additional expense does the passage of this bill incur?

Mr. WISE. It will be the additional expense of two months in the year.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. A very small amount, I suppose.

Mr. SAYERS. What do you call a small amount?

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I am asking for information.

Mr. WISE. It will be about $150,000, I suppose.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. WISE. It would be the pay for the two additional months.

Mr. SAYERS. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that this bill contains no appropriation, nor does it provide for any salary; yet there is a law upon the statute book which provides for the salaries.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. SAYERS (continuing). And if you increase the number of months you will have to pay the salaries now authorized by the law for those months, which will be an increase.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Of $150,000?

Mr. SAYERS. Of $150,000.

Mr. WISE. One hundred and sixty thousand.

Mr. SAYERS. One hundred and sixty thousand, the gentleman from Virginia says. Now, we were told in the argument which was used in 1892, when the salaries of these surfmen were increased from $50 to $65 per month, that inasmuch as they were employed only eight months in the year, that during the remaining four months of the year they would be practically unemployed and could not obtain work elsewhere.

Mr. BYNUM. That is correct.

Mr. SAYERS. And that, therefore, Congress ought to give them $65 a month for the eight months. Now, the proposition I have to make is a fair one.

Mr. COGSWELL. Every proposition the gentleman makes is a fair one.

Mr. SAYERS. I am obliged to the gentleman—that is, if the gentleman is sincere in what he says.

Mr. COGSWELL. I am always sincere.

Mr. SAYERS. Thank you. My proposition, Mr. Chairman, is, that where these surfmen are employed more than eight months they shall be allowed a salary of $60 per month, giving them $600 a year.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Instead of $65 a month.

Mr. SAYERS. Instead of giving them $65 a month where they work more than eight months in the year.

Mr. ENGLISH of New Jersey. They got $55 a month.

Mr. SAYERS. The get $65. I propose that the salaries of the eight months' men shall remain at $65 a month, and that the salaries of the ten months' men and over shall be $60 a month. Now, that is a simple proposition.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What would be the difference?

Mr. SAYERS. I can not tell exactly.

Mr. CARUTH. Why do you not put it in writing?

Mr. SAYERS. I will offer an amendment.

Mr. WISE. Put your amendment in writing so that we can see it, and perhaps we may agree upon it. You have no objection to the other part of the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. No.

Mr. WISE. I yield five or ten minutes to my friend from New Jersey.

Mr. ENGLISH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt in my mind as to the propriety of the passage of this bill with or without the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Texas. On our coast, and I speak of my own State, we have during the months of May and August severe storms and great loss of life, which are not to be measured by dollars and cents. In my judgment the Life-Saving Service should be continued during the whole year, and then the amendment of the gentleman from Texas might be accepted.

But it requires a particular class of men to do this service effectually. You can not pick up the ordinary fisherman, you can not pick up untrained men, and get effective service, and the volunteer service is not always apt or ready. During the present year there have been instances where life and property have been lost because it was necessary to depend upon the volunteer service. You want an efficient, trained, and skillful corps of men, and in that light this bill is the least that can be passed by this House and by Congress.

Mr. COGSWELL. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WISE. Yes, sir.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Chairman, in furtherance of the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ENGLISH], who has just preceded me, and in answer to the letter which has just been read by the gentleman from Texas, I want to say a word to this effect: The men in this service are as a class much superior mentally, morally, and physically to the average of those who follow the sea. They have to be physically superior, because their services are required constantly in seasons of storm by day and by night; and, as one acquainted to a great extent with the material that makes up this force, I want to deny the statements contained in the letter which has just been read.

No unfit or incompetent men can get into this service, and any lengthening of the period of service or any increase of the pay of these men will not encourage unfit men to enter the service. The standard is now very high, and there is nothing to be feared such as is suggested by the master mariner from Egg Harbor. Where that is, or who he is, I do not know, but I do know that the statement that these men can live on $10 a month is not true of those gallant, brave, fearless men in my region, whatever may be true of those who live in Egg Harbor.

I hope the contents of that letter will have no influence, either on the passage of this bill or in determining the monthly compensation of these brave men. The man who wrote that letter is probably an unfortunate and discarded applicant who could not get into the service because it admits only fit men.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know anything about the gentleman who wrote this letter——

Mr. COGSWELL. I have no doubt that I have described him correctly, all the same.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know about that. I do not see the member of the House present who gave me the letter, and to whom it was addressed, for the letter was not written to me.

Mr. COGSWELL. I would not wonder if the man was a Mugwump, also. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, the gentleman who gave it to me is a good Democrat.

Mr. COGSWELL. I am talking not about him, but about the man who wrote the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the committee amendments will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SAYERS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read as follows:

Provided, That all such surfmen as serve more than eight months shall receive $60 per month during their entire service.

Mr. COGSWELL. What will be the parliamentary effect of that? As I understand, it does not disturb the eight-months' arrangement.

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, general debate will be considered closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on the amendment. When the measure was before the House increasing the pay of these men, I took considerable interest in the subject, believing that the former wages were too low in view of the fact that the men were practically idle four months in the year. I became personally acquainted with the service during a trip that I made from Virginia Beach to Currituck Sound, passing several life stations and spending a few days on the coast. At that time I visited one of the stations and had a good deal of talk with the men.

The great argument in favor of an increase was that these men could not secure employment for the remaining four months of the year, and, believing that their wages were too low, I earnestly joined with the friends of the measure in advocating an increase of pay and in voting for it. But I think the gentleman from Texas has stated the facts correctly, and I believe that his amendment ought to be adopted. If we extend the time of the employment of these men it is practically an increase of compensation, so I think the amendment ought to be agreed to without controversy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MALLORY. I would like to hear the section read as it will stand if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That hereafter the life-saving stations upon the Atlantic and Gulf coasts at which crews are employed shall be manned and the stations opened for active service on the 1st day of August in each year, and so continued until the 1st day of June succeeding, and upon the lake coasts from the opening to the close of navigation, except such stations as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury are not necessary to be manned during the full period specified; and the crews shall reside at the stations during said periods. Provided that all such surf men as serve more than eight months shall receive $60 per month during their entire service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 2795) to amend section 5 of the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to organize the Life-Saving Service," and had directed him to report the bill as amended to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WISE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOSPITALS FOR LIFE-SAVING CREWS.

Mr. WISE. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 4346) extending the benefits of the Marine Hospitals to the keepers and crews of life-saving stations.

The SPEAKER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WISE. The bill carries no appropriation, nor does it contemplate any increase of expenditure. It simply proposes to extend the benefits of the Marine Hospital Service to the keepers and crews of life-saving stations.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the bill will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privilege of admission to and temporary treatment in the marine hospitals under the control of the Government of the United States be, and is hereby, extended to the keepers and crews of the Life-Saving Service under the same rules and regulations as those governing sailors and seamen, and for the purposes of this act members of the Life-Saving Service shall be considered and treated as seamen.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 3 of the bill, after the word "and," insert the word "temporary."

In line 9 of the bill strike out the words "considered and treated as seamen," and insert in lieu thereof as follows: "Received in said hospitals and treated therein, and in the dispensaries thereof, as are seaman of American registered vessels; but this act shall not be so construed as to compel the establishment of hospitals or dispensaries for the benefit of said keepers and crews, nor as establishing a home for the same when permanently disabled."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WISE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REVENUE CUTTER FOR HARBOR OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. WISE. I call up the bill (H. R. 2669) making an appropriation and providing for the construction of a United States revenue cutter for service in the harbor of San Francisco, State of California.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WISE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. The bill makes no appropriation.

The SPEAKER. But it requires one to be made and is covered by the rule.

Mr. WISE. Yes; the bill if passed will require an appropriation. I ask a vote on my motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2669) making an appropriation and providing for the construction of a United States revenue cutter for service in the harbor of San Francisco, State of California.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of constructing a revenue cutter for service in the harbor of San Francisco, State of California.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to have constructed a revenue cutter for service in the harbor of San Francisco, State of California: Provided, That the cost of said construction shall not exceed the sum of $50,000.

Mr. WISE. As I have stated, although this bill in the form reported makes no direct appropriation, an appropriation will hereafter be required to carry out the measure if it be passed.

Mr. SAYERS. Has the gentleman any information from the Treasury Department as to the probable cost of this vessel?

Mr. MALLORY. Fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. WISE. Yes; $50,000, the amount named in the bill. I need only state that in the harbor of San Francisco this Revenue-Cutter Service has now only a tugboat—nothing more and nothing less.

Mr. GEARY. And an old one.

Mr. WISE. Very old—unsafe and unfit for the service. The vessel which this bill proposes to provide is absolutely necessary. I can state from personal knowledge (for I have been out there), what every member from California will corroborate, that this service has no vessel there which is fit for duty. This bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. So far as I am aware, nobody opposes it. If no gentleman wishes to discuss the measure, I move that the committee rise and report the bill with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2669) making an appropriation and providing for the construction of a United States revenue cutter for service in the harbor of San Francisco, State of California, had directed him to report the same back with amendment and with the recommendation that it be passed as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WISE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FOG SIGNAL AT KEWAUNEE, WIS.

Mr. WISE. I call up the bill (H. R. 4567) establishing a fog signal at Kewaunee, Wis.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYERS. I think it ought to be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WISE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4567) establishing a fog signal at Kewaunee, Wis.

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established a fog signal at Kewaunee, Wis., at a cost not exceeding $5,500.

Mr. WISE. By direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection general debate will be considered as closed.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill:

"And the sum of $5,500 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for that purpose."

Mr. SAYERS. I will say to the gentleman in charge of this bill that this is a departure from the methods heretofore pursued in providing for such structures.

Mr. WISE. If the gentleman from Texas will permit me, I desire first to yield my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRICKNER].

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. All that the gentleman from Wisconsin wants.

Mr. BRICKNER. Mr. Chairman, this is an absolute necessity. I very much regret to be compelled to ask an appropriation at this time for this fog signal; but this a lately established route—only established two years ago. I asked for the appropriation last year, during the short session, but unfortunately was called away, and could not bring it to the attention of the House at the proper time.

This is a through winter route from St. Paul via Frankfort eastward, and a light is absolutely worthless in snowstorms or in heavy weather accompanied with snow, in the winter when this route is being used. It is therefore absolutely necessary that there should be such a signal erected for the safety and protection of vessels passing through that channel. The route is established, and ferry boats that are sufficient in capacity to take on a full train of loaded cars receive their loads there and cross Lake Michigan to Frankfort daily; and for the whole Northwest to the producers of flour and wheat it is a great saving of time and money to be able to run through on this short route to the East.

As to the amount covered, it is small, and I do not see why, in view of the importance of the matter, it should not be appropriated.

I reserve the remainder of the time.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know whether the committee have received any information from the Treasury Department as to the necessity for the construction of this work?

Mr. WISE. That is fully covered by the report.

Mr. BRICKNER. I ask that the report be read, which sets forth the facts.

The report (by Mr. BRICKNER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4567) "establishing a fog signal at Kewaunee, Wis.," report the same back without amendment and with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

A bill similar to this in all respects was favorably reported by this committee to the House in the Fifty-second Congress, and the fog signal then recommended is no less necessary now than then.

A letter from the Treasury Department, dated December 13, 1893, and addressed to this committee, which accompanies this, and which expresses the views of the Department upon the bill, is made a part of this report.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 13, 1893.

SIR: The letter from your committee of December 11, 1893, inclosing H. R. bill No. 4567, authorizing the establishment of a fog signal at Kewaunee, Wis., as to which you asked suggestions touching the merits of the bill, and the propriety of its passage, and especially as to whether what the bill proposes is "indispensable," was, on its reception, referred to the Light-House Board.

In reply I have the honor to say that the Light-House Board states that it recommended the establishment of the fog signal in question in its annual report and in its annual estimates, and that statement was made in its estimates that it considered what the bill proposes as "necessary."

Inclosed is an extract from the Board's annual report, page 129, showing its recommendation as to the establishing of a fog signal at Kewaunee, Wis., and there is also inclosed an extract from the Book of Estimates, showing the Board's recommendation therein as to the amount needed therefor.

Respectfully, yours,

W. E. CURTIS, Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
House of Representatives.

[Extract from the estimates of the Light-House Board for 1894-'95.]

Kewaunee Light and Fog-signal Station, Wisconsin: Establishing a fog signal at or near one of the pierhead lights at Kewaunee, Lake Michigan, Wisconsin (submitted), $5,500.

NOTE.—This is a regular stopping place for the Goodrich transportation steamers. Boats make this port summer and winter, passing between two piers but 200 feet apart, guided by a light on each. As the lights can be seen but dimly, if at all, in fog or snow, a fog signal is needed to supplement the lights.

[Extract from the Annual Report of the Light-House Board for the year ending June 30, 1893.]

1327. Kewaunee Pierhead (rear), Lake Michigan, Wisconsin.—The establishment of a steam fog signal at the entrance to this place was recommended to Congress by the Board, through the proper channels, in February, 1893. The northern terminus of the Toledo, Ann Arbor and Northern Railroad is at Frankfort, Mich., and their large transfer boats ply between there and Kewaunee, Wis., daily, carrying their cars across Lake Michigan, a distance of 65 miles and connecting at Kewaunee with the Kewaunee and Green Bay Railroad for St. Paul and the Northwest.

The Goodrich Transporatation Company's steamers also make this a regular stopping place. Their boats run summer and winter and have to contend with fogs and snowstorms. Kewaunee is a good harbor, and is much used by the smaller class of lake carriers. One of the transfer steamers went ashore last fall in trying to make the harbor in thick weather, thereby causing much delay to travel on this new and important route, and narrowly escaping loss with the attendant destruction of life and property. The Board therefore recommended the establishment of a fog signal at its entrance, at an estimated cost of $5,500. The recommendation is now renewed.

Mr. SAYERS. I will ask the chairman of the committee if in any of the bills he proposes to bring before the House to-day the appropriations for the construction of the works are embodied?

Mr. WISE. You mean carried in the bills themselves?

Mr. SAYERS. In the bills.

Mr. WISE. I think not, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. Because I would not like to make an exception in one case, and if I do it will be just because there is but one appropriation asked. If there are others, however, to be brought up hereafter I want to treat all members exactly alike, and I will have to object to this.

Mr. WISE. I do not think there are any of the others which contain appropriations.

Mr. MALLORY. The next bill proposed to be called up embodies an appropriation, but it is entirely a different matter.

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw the objection to the amendment on the statement made to me by the gentleman from Virginia, that there will be no appropriations asked in the bills which he will hereafter present for the consideration of the House, excepting one.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. WISE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill, with the amendment, to the House with favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4567, had directed him to report the same to the House with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed and read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. BRICKNER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

DEPENDENT RELATIVES, CREW OF STEAMER AMSTERDAM.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6309) for the dependent relatives of the seamen of the Netherlands steamer Amsterdam who lost their lives in the effort to save the crew of the American schooner Maggie E. Wells, and also for the relief of the sole survivor of the rescuing party.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WISE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill called up by the gentleman from Virginia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $5,750 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the following sums of money to the persons herein named, being dependent relatives of the seamen of the Netherlands steamer Amsterdam, who recently lost their lives in a heroic effort to save the master and crew of the shipwrecked American schooner Maggie E. Wells, of Gloucester, Mass., and the sole survivor of the rescuing party: To the widow of First Officer J. Meyer, $500; to each of her two children, $250; to the widow of Boatswain E. Regnard, $500; to the mother of A. J. Oudyn, $500; to each of the two children of F. Eichorn, $250; to the widow of A. Bos, $500; to each of her two children, $250; to the widow of A. Van Vliet, $500; to each of her five children, $250; to A. Van der Wilt, survivor, $500.

Mr. SAYERS. I want an explanation of this bill.

Mr. MALLORY. The bill, Mr. Chairman, simply proposes to appropriate the sum of money named, $5,750, to be distributed amongst the families and dependent relatives of those men who lost their lives in an effort to save the crew of an American fishing smack at sea in last January, and also to pay the sole survivor of the crew.

It seems that the Dutch steamer Amsterdam, while on her way to New York, and during a severe gale of wind in a very rough sea, encountered, on the 14th of last January, the American schooner Maggie E. Wells, flying signals of distress, the weather being very cold and cloudy at the time, the schooner with her sails all gone, the crew lashed to the masts or rigging, and with her lifeboats completely destroyed. In that condition the captain of the steamship Amsterdam called for volunteers to go in a boat to undertake to rescue this crew.

Thirty men volunteered to go, and out of that number he chose these six. Among them was one of the mates, a man by the name of Meyer. They set out from the Amsterdam, but before they reached the Maggie E. Wells the weather was so rough and the wind so violent that their boat was upset, and they were all thrown into the water and drowned with the exception of one, who was finally rescued by the crew of the Amsterdam. As soon as they were upset another crew offered to go in another boat, but the captain thought it was better not to risk any more lives.

This is simply to give an award of a certain sum to each of the parties dependent upon these lost men: to the widow of First Officer J. Meyer, $500; to each of her two children, $250; to the widow of Boatswain E. Regnard, $500; to the mother of A. J. Oudyn, $500; to each of the two children of F. Eichorn, $250; to the widow of A. Bos, $500; to each of her two children, $250; to the widow of A. Van Vliet, $500; to each of her five children, $250; to A. Van der Wilt, survivor, $500.

Mr. SAYERS. He was one of those who went to the rescue of this American vessel.

Mr. MALLORY. Yes; he managed to hold on to the boat until the men on the Amsterdam succeeded in getting a rope to him. I do not think there can be any opposition to this, and I move that the committee rise and report this bill favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6309) for the relief of the dependent relatives of the seamen of the Netherlands steamer Amsterdam, who lost their lives in the effort to save the crew of the American schooner Maggie E. Wells, and also for the relief of the sole survivor of the rescuing party, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MALLORY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIGHT-VESSEL OFF SOUTH PASS OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7124) to establish a light-vessel off the South Pass of the Mississippi River in the Gulf of Mexico, and for this purpose to discontinue the light-vessel off Trinity Shoal in the Gulf of Mexico.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I think that can be considered in the House without going into Committee of the Whole. It is not a proposition to establish a new light-ship, but simply to change it from a place where it is believed to be unnecessary, and to put it at a station where such a light-ship is deemed to be necessary.

Mr. SAYERS. Does it necessitate any expense?

Mr. WISE. It requires no expense whatever, not a dollar. It is simply to change the light-ship from one place to another.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the statement of the gentleman, it is to transfer a light-ship from one point to another. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-vessel be established off the South Pass of the Mississippi River in the Gulf of Mexico.

SEC. 2. That the light-vessel now established off Trinity Shoal in the Gulf of Mexico be discontinued and transferred to a locality off the South Pass of the Mississippi River in the Gulf of Mexico.

The SPEAKER. This is simply for the transfer of a light-ship. Without objection, the Committee of the Whole will be discharged from the consideration of it.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WISE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIGHT-SHIP AND FOG SIGNAL, BOSTON, MASS.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I send up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5312) authorizing the construction of a light-ship, with fog signal, to be established to the eastward of Boston Light, Massachusetts, and for the establishment of range lights in Boston Harbor, Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WISE. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the bill, with Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to construct a light-ship, with fog signal, to be placed about 6 nautical miles to the east by south of Boston Light, Massachusetts, at a cost not to exceed $70,000; and he is hereby further directed to establish range lights in Boston Harbor, at a cost not to exceed $1,000.

Mr. SAYERS. I will ask the gentleman who introduced this bill whether he has received any information from the Treasury Department with regard to the necessity for the construction of this light-ship?

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Yes; and in the Book of Estimates, on page 313, it is put down as "indispensable." The Light-House Board for several years have recommended that it be established.

Mr. WISE. I will also state, in addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. O'NEIL], that accompanying the report of the committee there is a communication from Mr. W. E. Curtis, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, and also other communications, recommending this as indispensible.

Mr. EVERETT. I apprehend there can be no doubt about that.

Mr. WISE. I ask the Clerk to read the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from your committee dated January 20, 1894, inclosing House bill No. 5312, for the construction of a light-ship, with a fog signal, to be established to the eastward of Boston Light, Massachusetts, and for the establishment of range lights in Boston Harbor, and asking for suggestions touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

The bill with your letter was referred to the Light-House Board, which returned them with the statement that in its annual report for 1892 it recommended that appropriations be made for the objects provided for by this bill, and that in its annual estimates and report for 1893 these recommendations are renewed.

As to the necessity for the proposed light-ship, with a fog signal, I have the honor to quote from a preamble and resolutions adopted by the Boston Chamber of Commerce on March 14, 1892, that "Boston is the sixth largest city in the United States and in commercial importance the second, and from records at the Boston custom-house it appears that 4,677 vessels cleared from Boston in 1891; 1,553,600 tons of foreign freight were imported, and 1,278,862 were exported in that year. From records of the steamship companies it appears that 315,000 passengers were carried from Boston to Canadian, Maine, New York, and Southern ports in 1891; and, while it has a commodious and deep harbor, that the approaches to it are dangerous, and the channels, though deep, are narrow and tortuous, with two abrupt turns."

It is further stated that "there is not a lighted aid to navigation from the small or bug light at the Narrows to the Boston wharves." This makes it difficult and sometimes an impossibility to distinguish the turning buoys, even on a moderately dark night. This causes much detention and loss of time to deep-craft vessels, which are compelled not only to wait for daily, but to wait for a favorable tide as well, when, if the approaches were properly lighted, advantage could be taken of a favorable night tide, when much time would be saved.

On March 24, 1892, Mr. J. Malcolm Forbes, commodore of the Eastern Yacht Club, wrote from Boston inclosing a petition asking for the establishment of a light-ship with a steam fog signal off the entrance to Boston Harbor. It was stated in the petition that—

"Such an aid to navigation is indubitably necessary, and the large interests involved warrant its establishment. There is no worse a 'pocket,' or one more dangerous to approach in thick or foggy weather on the whole coast. The well known and admitted difficulty in locating sound in fog or snowstorm, renders the fog signal at Boston light and the bell at Minots Ledge of doubtful utility. Certainly they can not be confidently relied upon, as a mistaken location of their sound would involve an approaching ship in greatest peril, if not in disastrous shipwreck.

"The establishment of the light-ship desired would obviate this serious menace to incoming vessels, for she could be approached and sighted without danger, and the incoming vessel's position thus having been absolutely determined, she could proceed with all confidence and safety to the entrance to the harbor, no matter how threatening the weather."

Copies of the recommendations made by the Light-House Board in its report and estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, are inclosed, together with a copy of H. R. bill No. 5312.

Respectfully, yours,

W. E. CURTIS,
Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY, chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 5312, and had directed him to report it to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LIGHT AT ENTRANCE TO GALVESTON HARBOR, TEXAS.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7107) to establish a light-house and a range light at the entrance to Galveston Harbor, in the county of Galveston, in the State of Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. Let it go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WISE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will now report.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7107) to establish a light-house and a range light at the entrance to Galveston Harbor, in the county of Galveston, in the State of Texas.

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-house and a range light be established at the entrance to Galveston Harbor, at or near the east end of the south jetty, in the county of Galveston, in the State of Texas, at a cost not to exceed $35,000.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

Amend as follows:
Strike out in line 3 the words "and a range light."
Strike out in line 4 the words "east end," and insert in lieu thereof the words "outer end."

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WISE. If the gentleman does not require it, I would suggest that all that is necessary to read is the letter from the Treasury Department addressed to the committee.

The letter was read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 18, 1894.

SIR: The letter from your committee on May 17, 1894, inclosing House bill No. 7109, to establish a light-house and a range light at the entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas, with request for suggestions touching the merits of the bill, and the propriety of its passage, was referred to the Light-House Board.

In reply, I have the honor to inform you that the Board states that it had the matter under consideration at its session of May 7, when the conclusion was reached that the interests of commerce and navigation require the establishment of a new light-house of the third order, with a steam fog signal near the outer end of the South Galveston jetty.

The Board also recommends that the light at Bolivar light-station, which is near by, and with which the proposed light can form a range, be changed from a second-order fixed white light to a five-second flash light.

The Board also proposes to change the position of the Galveston light-ship from time to time, as may be made necessary by these and other proposed changes. It is estimated that these changes, including the new structures, can be made for a sum not exceeding $35,000, and it is recommended that an appropriation of this amount be made therefor.

I have the honor to recommend, therefore, that bill 7109 be thus amended:

Strike out from the third line the words "and a range light."

Strike out from the fourth line the words "the east end" and insert in their place the words "outer end," so that the bill will read thus: "That a light-house be established at the entrance to Galveston Harbor, near the outer end of the south jetty, in the county of Galveston, in the State of Texas, at a cost not to exceed $35,000."

A copy of the bill in question is herewith returned.

Respectfully, yours,

S. WIKE, Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. WISE. If no one wishes to say anything, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that motion will be considered as agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7109) and had directed him to report the same to the House, with amendments, with a favorable recommendation.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the suggestion of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

On motion of Mr. WISE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

On amendment numbered 21: Appropriates $20,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $27,000, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses and maintenance of the ordnance proving ground at Sandy Hook, N. J.

On amendment numbered 22: Appropriates $3,300, as proposed by the Senate, for erection of a brick shed at the Watertown Arsenal, Massachusetts.

On amendment numbered 23: Appropriates $100,000, instead of $125,000, as proposed by the Senate, and $75,000, as proposed by the House, for expenses under the Board of Ordnance and Fortification.

On amendment numbered 24: Requires that the Board of Ordnance and Fortification shall, before expending money in the construction of any gun, carriage, ammunition, or implements, be satisfied, after inquiry, that the Government has a lawful right to use any inventions involved, or that the construction is made at the request of a person having such right.

The bill as agreed upon appropriates $2,427,004, being $409,600 less than as it passed the Senate, $202,350 more than as it passed the House, $216,949 more than the last law, and $307,272 less than the fortification law passed at the first session of the last Congress.

J. E. WASHINGTON,
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
HENRY H. BINGHAM.
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman wants further information than that which is given in the report, I ask for a vote on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WASHINGTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to, was laid on the table.

PIER AT THE MOUTH OF CHICAGO RIVER.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I send up the following bill for consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6038) to repeal House resolution numbered 104, first session Fifty-first Congress, granting to Secretary of War a permit to license to use a pier at mouth of Chicago River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the House resolution numbered 104, first session of the Fifty-first Congress, approved October 1, 1890, entitled "Joint resolution to permit the Secretary of War to grant a revocable license to use a pier as petitioned by vessel owners of Chicago, Ill," be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the property mentioned in the said joint resolution, to wit, the south pier of the Chicago River, shall be excepted from the provisions of an act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease public property in certain cases," approved July 28, 1892, and said pier shall not be subject to be leased by the Secretary of War.

Mr. WISE. It is not necessary to consider this bill in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is on the House Calendar.

Mr. SAYERS. There may be no appropriation, but does it not make a disposition of public property?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is on the House Calendar.

Mr. DURBOROW. I ask to have the amendment reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 14 add the following:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to abrogate the permit already granted by the Secretary of War to the Western Seamen's Friend Society for the use of a part of the said pier."

Mr. DURBOROW. Mr. Speaker, in reference to this bill I would say that it is almost identical with the bill which passed the Fifty-second Congress in the first session to repeal this resolution, which was passed by the Fifty-first Congress, the reason for which is explained in the report, which I will ask the Clerk to read; but before doing so I would like to explain that this was a disposition of public property made by the Fifty-first Congress, and it is sought to repeal that resolution by this bill in order that that property may remain public property, instead of being leased and thus made private property, as it was by that resolution.

Mr. SAYERS. Read the report.

Mr. DURBOROW. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. DURBOROW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6038) to repeal House Resolution No. 104, first session Fifty-first Congress, granting to the Secretary of War a permit to license to use a pier at mouth of Chicago River, report the same back with an amendment, and with the recommendation that the bill as so amended do pass.

This committee favorably reported to the House in the first session of the Fifty-second Congress a bill (H. R. 4330) the purpose of which was similar to the purpose of this bill. Its report is reaffirmed and made a part of this report, and will explain what is sought to be accomplished by this bill and the necessity for it.

The accompanying letter from the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, dated March 7, 1894, which is also made a part of this report is additionally explanatory.

The accompanying letter from the Secretary of War, dated March 13, 1894, which is also made a part of this report, shows the concurrence of the Secretary of War in the passage of the bill as amended by your committee.

[House Report No. 616, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4330) to repeal House Resolution No. 104, first session Fifty-first Congress, granting to Secretary of War a permit to license to use a pier at the mouth of the Chicago River, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The growing needs of commerce have caused a revolution in the method of handling lake shipping and the transfer of freight upon the Great Lakes of this country; the transportation of lake freight at the present time being accomplished by steamships or tugs, with tows of from one to five barges.

The facility with which tows may be made up at this pier is very apparent, whereas if the pier was leased it would be necessary to secure tugs to tow the barges into the lake and make up the tow in unprotected waters and at great cost.

Remonstrances from vessel owners, the Board of Trade of Chicago, and persons, firms, and corporations doing a large business in shipping and receiving grain, lumber, and general merchandise, protesting against the leasing of this pier have been so effective that, up to the present time, the Secretary of War has not leased said pier.

The provision that the license shall be a revocable one was perhaps intended to be a restriction in the interest of the Government, but it is well known that it is almost impossible for the Government to regain possession of valuable property or eject the tenant without great cost and vexatious delays.

The necessity for the repeal of the resolution by the passage of bill H. R. 4330 consists in the fact that a future administration, not conversant with all the details, might execute said lease without notice to interested parties and thereby greatly interfere with shipping interests centering in the port of Chicago.

The committee recomend that the bill H. R. 4330 do pass.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., March 13, 1894.

SIR: In returning herewith House bill 6038, Fifty-third Congress, second session, "To repeal House Resolution No. 104, first session Fifty-first Congress, granting to Secretary of War a permit to license to use a pier at mouth of Chicago River," I have the honor to invite your attention to the inclosed report of the Chief of Engineers, dated the 7th instant, from which it will be seen that there is no objection to the bill if it does not abrogate the permit already granted to the Western Seamen's Friend Society for the use of a part of the pier.

The inclosures which accompanied your communication are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., March 7, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt, by reference to this office for report, of letter of the 1st instant from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, inclosing, with request for War Department views thereon, H. R. 6038, Fifty-third Congress, second session, "A bill to repeal House Resolution No. 104, first session Fifty-first Congress, granting to Secretary of War a permit to license to use a pier at mouth of Chicago River."

The accompanying bill proposes the repeal of "Joint resolution to permit the Secretary of War to grant a revocable license to use a pier, as petitioned by vessel owners of Chicago, Ill.," approved October 1, 1890, and excepts the property mentioned from the provisions of the act of Congress of July 29, 1892, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease public property in certain cases."

Capt. W. L. Marshall, Corps of Engineers, stationed at Chicago, in reporting to this office on the subject of the inclosed bill, states that—

"The pier referred to is supposed to be that portion of the south pier at entrance to Chicago River, 1,225 feet long, approximately, that is in part alongside of one of the Illinois Central Railroad Company's docks. All of the remainder of the south pier is now in use by private individuals and corporations, as heretofore reported.

"The use of a part of the outer 225 feet of this pier, which projects into water beyond the Illinois Central Railroad Company's dock, has been granted to the Western Seamen's Friend Society by the Secretary of War for a sailor's snug harbor, refuge, or home, but not yet used.

"The vesselmen seem opposed to any individual or corporation securing possession of this part of the south pier, as it is somewhat withdrawn (50 feet) from the line of piers west of it, and affords the only safe place not already occupied to tie up vessels in forming tows without encroaching on the available width of the harbor entrance.

"I see no objection to the bill if it does not abrogate the permit already granted by the Secretary of War."

I concur in the views of Capt. Marshall, as expressed above.

The letter of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, with its inclosures, is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers.

Hon. DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word or two on this bill. The original bill authorizing the leasing of the pier in question passed in the Fifty-first Congress. Prior to its passage a kindred measure had been submitted to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors authorizing, in practically the same terms, the leasing of the pier at Buffalo to one of the railroad companies.

The committee, after a very long investigation, in which the vessel owners on the lakes were heard and all the interests concerned were carefully considered, presented to the House an elaborate report not only against the passage of that measure, but in general opposition to everything of the kind, protesting in strong language against the invasion of the interests of water transportation by leases of this character. The bill which was passed later had been pending before the Committee on Commerce—improperly as I believed at the time—and when it came suddenly before the House on a motion of a Representative from the city of Chicago, I challenged the action of the Committee on Commerce and its jurisdiction to consider and report a bill of that kind.

A ruling was made by the Chair at that time, varying very materially from the rulings in the present Congress, and practically holding that the possession of the bill by the committee gave jurisdiction for that purpose, and that it was too late to make the objection which I had raised. Thereupon the Representative to whom I refer made a statement upon the floor of the House that this measure was desired by the Secretary of War—that the Department desired that it should pass in order to relieve some situation which the gentleman spoke of in rather uncertain terms. He stated that he had had an interview with the Secretary of War, and that this was a measure which was entirely satisfactory to the Department and, in fact, was desired by the Department. That put me in a position where I could only say that I protested upon general principles against everything of the kind, but could make no further contest so far as that particular bill was concerned, and thereupon it was passed.

Sometime afterward, perhaps two months later, a very strong protest came to the War Department from interests that were affected at Chicago, and the President, to my knowledge, sent a telegram from a distant city directing the Secretary of War not to proceed under the law. That is all I have to say about the matter. I simply wanted to explain how it became possible for a measure of that kind to come up in a manner so entirely in opposition to the practice of this House, and to get through the House.

Mr. WISE. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for the statement which he has made, and I do not think it is necessary to say anything more, because I agree to everything that the gentleman has said.

Mr. SAYERS. Then it is the opinion of the gentleman from Ohio that this bill, if it becomes a law, will rectify the abuse which was then committed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It will rectify that abuse, and probably put an end to attempts to create other abuses of a similar character.

The amendment of Mr. DURBOROW was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DURBOROW, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LICENSES TO CERTAIN OFFICERS OF PASSENGER STEAMERS.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5979) to provide for licenses to certain officers of seagoing passenger steam vessels, and I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], the author of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MALLORY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5507) entitled "A bill to provide for licenses to certain officers of steam vessels," having considered the same, recommend that the substitute herewith reported in lieu thereof, entitled "A bill to provide for licenses to certain officers of seagoing passenger steam vessels," be adopted and pass.

Inasmuch as the change in existing law is intended to apply only to certain officers of seagoing passenger steam vessels, the committee have thought it best not to undertake to amend the sections of the Revised Statutes that relate to this subject, sections 4438 and 4440, which apply to certain officers of all steam vessels, and for that reason have put the measure in the shape of a separate enactment. The committee is also of opinion, in which the Treasury Department concurs, that there is no occasion to require fourth mates to take out licenses, and have therefore omitted that provision from the substitute proposed by them.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 9, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a report of the Supervising Inspector-General Steamboat Inspection Service upon H. R. bill 5507, Fifty-third Congress, second session, "To provide for licenses to certain officers of steam vessels," referred by your directions to this Department for such suggestions as may be deemed proper "touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage."

Very respectfully,

W. E. CURTIS, Acting Secretary.

Hon. GEO. D. WISE,
Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING INSPECTOR-GENERAL
STEAMBOAT INSPECTION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt (by reference to this office for report) of a communication from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, inclosing H. R. bill 5507, Fifty-third Congress, second session, entitled "A bill to provide for licenses to certain officers of steam vessels," and requesting the Secretary of the Treasury "to furnish the committee with such suggestions as you [he] may deem proper touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage."

I have the honor to report that the object of the bill referred to is to require second, third, and fourth mates of seagoing steam vessels to be licensed the same as are the chief mates of steam vessels under sections 4438 and 4440, Title LII, Revised Statutes.

This office is in favor of the examination and licensing of second and third mates of seagoing steam vessels, but thinks it unnecessary and superfluous to require a fourth mate to be a licensed officer, for the reason that, with the master, and first, second, and third mates duly licensed and qualified as navigators, there will be four such navigators on board, an ample number, in my judgment, to meet all emergencies.

To obtain the objects sought to be accomplished in House bill 5507, I would recommend that the inclosed copy of bill prepared in this office be substituted therefor, in order that the penalties provided in Title LII, Revised Statutes, should directly, instead of by inference, apply in case of nonobservance. This object is accomplished in the substitute bill by amending sections 4438 and 4440 of that title, thereby directly covering the penalties provided therein.

The object in making the substitute bill take effect ninety days after date of approval is in order to give owners and agents of steamers affected by the bill ample time to be prepared for its enforcement, otherwise many ships may be compelled either to violate the law or be detained in port until a sufficient number of qualified officers could be obtained.

The copy of bill is returned herewith.

Very respectfully,

JAS. A. DUMONT,
Supervising Inspector-General.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

[Substitute for H. R. 5507.]

The amendments consist in adding to sections 4438 and 4440, Revised Statutes, the underscored words in the lines as indicated herein:

A bill to amend sections 4438 and 4440 of title LII, Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to licensing mates of steam vessels.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That sections 4438 and 4440 be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4438. The boards of local inspectors shall license and classify the masters, chief, second, and third mates, engineers, and pilots of all steam vessels. It shall be unlawful to employ any person, or for any person to serve as a master, chief, second, or third mate, engineer, or pilot on any steamer who is not licensed by the inspectors; and anyone violating this section shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense.

"SEC. 4440. Whenever any person applies for authority to be employed as chief, second, or third mate of steam vessels the inspectors shall require satisfactory evidence of the knowledge, experience, and skill of the applicant in lading cargo and in handling and stowage of freight, and shall examine him as to his knowledge and ability in navigation and managing such vessels, and all other duties pertaining to his station, and if satisfied of his qualifications and good character they shall grant him a license authorizing him to perform such duties for the term of one year; but such license shall be suspended or revoked upon satisfactory proof of bad conduct, intemperate habits, unskillfulness, or want of knowledge of the duties of his station, or the willful violation of any provision of this title."

This act to take effect ten days from date of approval.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend in line 3, by striking out the words "and third," so that the provision will read, "that second mates of seagoing passenger steam vessels shall be licensed," etc.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the owners of the sea-going passenger steam vessels of the Atlantic coast are opposed to this legislation. Under the existing statute all watch officers of American ships are required to be American citizens and must undergo an examination as to qualifications before they are licensed. This applies to masters who are captains, chief mates who are first mates, engineers, and pilots.

These are indicated as "officers" and must be American citizens. Under a construction of the statute of many years' standing, second mates are officers, who with the captain and first mate are the navigators of the ship. Therefore the Department requires the second mate, under regulation, to be examined the same as the captain and the first mate.

The proposition contained in this bill is to extend this examination to third mates before license is given. It was originally proposed to preclude fourth mates. It is unnecessary to say in the carrying trade, especially the foreign trade, there are also fifth and sixth mates, but these subordinate or junior officers, as they are called, are not "officers" under the statute, and are not subject to the requirement of a certificate, although a certificate is often required at the option of the ownership of the vessel; and they are not ship navigators.

The proposed extension of the statute is to third mates—I have submitted an amendment so as to make it a statutory requirement as to second mates. There is nothing in the fact of American citizenship that will throw around the passenger trade or freight carriage any larger protection to life or property than if the mates were other than American citizens. The bill as submitted will simply secure to American citizens a few positions that are now open to the best men.

This bill does not apply to all steam vessels, but is limited to seagoing passenger steam vessels. Why this discrimination against foreign vessels? Certainly it can not be claimed that an American, native or naturalized, can better care for life because he is an American citizen, and I do not belittle American citizenship when I make this assertion.

No other commercial nation has such a law. England, the greatest maritime nation of to-day, will issue a master's or mate's certificate to any man who has had the necessary experience and can pass satisfactorily their most rigid examination. They make it a question solely of ability.

This is the only nation that requires officers in its mercantile marine to be citizens. I am not going to attack the statute as it exists. I am perfectly willing this requirement which is now embodied in the regulations of the Department be enacted into law as to the second mates.

Great obligations rest upon the owners of vessels as to the wise and safe transportation of their cargoes and passengers; but in view of the examination and certificates now required, I believe the question of citizenship except as to second mates may safely be left as it is now by statute.

Mr. LOUD. What certificate is now required by law?

Mr. BINGHAM. By section 4438 of the Revised Statutes it is required that—

Boards of local inspectors shall license and classify masters—

That is, captains—

Chief-mates, who are first mates.
Engineers and pilots of all steam vessels.

Mr. LOUD. That does not apply to the second officers.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have stated that second officers, under the regulations of the Department, are required to be examined before certificate of fitness or license can be issued, the same as captains and first mates.

Mr. LOUD. That, however, is not a requirement of law.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am perfectly willing to ingraft upon the statute the requirement that second mates shall have the certificate after examination.

Mr. LOUD. You admit that there in no such requirement of law now.

Mr. BINGHAM. It appears to me that is far enough to go, and that as to the officers, junior to second mate, who are not permitted to undertake the navigation of the vessel—only the watch officers, as they are designated—the law should remain as it is. This is as far as the carrying trade of the Atlantic coast desires now to go.

Let me read from a letter recently received:

We protest against the proposed legislation requiring junior officers of seagoing passenger steamers to be American citizens.

Your general statute requires officers of the United States mercantile marine to be American citizens.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the requirement that they pass examination and obtain certificates make them officers?

Mr. BINGHAM. It does.

Mr. MALLORY. In respect to engineers, the Department held that it did not.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is a matter I know nothing about.

Mr. MALLORY. I refer to the action of the last Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BINGHAM (reading):

It seems Congress is determined by every species of ingenuity to make it impossible to run a steamship under the American flag, in competition with foreign flags. Why should Congress attempt this legislation? There is no nation on earth, except the United States, that inquires into the nationality of even the commanders of its mercantile fleet. They look to qualifications only, and this legislation is a relic of barbarism. Even the United States does not require its gunners, the most important men on board of its men-of-war, to be American citizens.

Mr. LOUD. By whom is that letter signed?

Mr. BINGHAM. By Mr. Griscom, president of the International Navigation Company?

Mr. LOUD. The company that owns the steamers City of Paris and City of New York?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir. The letter continues.

The fact is, the United States professes to wish to see its commercial marine extended. It has even passed the postal bill and taken off some of the disabilities of ship-owners. And yet Congress seems disposed to lend a willing ear to trade organizations, who in their turn seem disposed to surround the running of steamships under the American flag with increasing difficulties.

We are making a great effort now to establish and maintain a first-class American line on the North Atlantic. I should think the sympathy of Congress ought to be with us. We intend, also, to make our line thoroughly American, but we must have time to organize and build up.

Now, this legislation will apply to all of the foreign passenger-carrying trade, and only to a limited extent to the coastwise trade, the foreign trade having not only first and second mates, but third, fourth, fifth, and sixth mates.

From the general manager of a great company I have this statement:

If Congress wishes to give any better protection to life and property at sea, let it follow the example of England and pass an act raising the standard of seamanship, to be open to all. Then an American master's or mate's certificate would stand for something, and we would no longer be compelled to exact from our masters and mates (American as well as foreigners) an English board of trade certificate.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish nor do I intend to make any factious opposition to this proposed legislation, but I submit the seagoing passenger carrying trade of the Atlantic coast is positively against its enactment. I am willing we should incorporate into the law, if it must be done, that which is now the regulation of the Department as to second mates; but I claim the fact of citizenship in no wise protects the lives of passengers; the protection comes from the certificate of qualification which is required; and the owners of these seagoing vessels are as much concerned for the safety of the lives of their passengers as they could be under any legislation we might enact.

Mr. STORER. If the gentleman will yield to me a moment, I would like to ask a question, prefacing it with a statement.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STORER. Let us understand the point the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. BINGHAM] makes by way of objection to this bill. As I understand his objection, he construes the bill as compelling second and third mates to be citizens of the United States. He adopts this construction, because, as he says, the second mate being a watch officer, becomes thereby an officer of the ship, and comes under the general statute providing that officers of a ship must be citizens of the United States.

I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this bill does not provide anything more than that the second and third mates shall pass examinations and be certified as qualified for their positions. Nothing is said here about their citizenship.

I will call his attention to another fact in this same connection——

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman mean to signify to this House that in the passage of this legislation, requiring a certificate from the board of local inspectors or examiners for a third mate, the question of American citizenship is entirely eliminated?

Mr. STORER. I say that the ruling of the Department is that even the engineer, who is called an officer and must pass an examination, need not be a citizen of the United States and does not come under that statute. A fortiori, therefore, would be the third mate——

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow a question before he proceeds further? Does he not know it is the statute and regulation of the Department that the captain, first and second mates must be citizens of the United States?

Mr. STORER. I believe that is correct.

Mr. BINGHAM. And if you add, therefore, the third mate, then, by a simple process of reasoning, I ask the gentleman if the Department must not so construe this legislation, placing the third mate in the same category as to citizenship, with the others, according to the rulings heretofore made, unless you unequivocally declare, in the proposition itself, that such is not the intention of the law?

Mr. STORER. The gentleman will not certainly claim that that would follow from the enactment of this provision of law?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the construction that would be naturally placed upon it unless it was otherwise expressly provided.

Mr. STORER. But not as to citizenship.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes.

Mr. STORER. I differ with the gentleman in that regard.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, the president of the International Steamship Company so states, and unqualifiedly.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, as the introducer of a bill of a similar character to this, I would like to say a few words to the House in connection with the matter.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has brought forward some evidence to the House to substantiate the reasons he has given why in his judgment this bill should not become a law. Now, all the evidence the gentleman has brought here emanates from what is known as the American Line of Steamers, the company which has just received at the hands of Congress so large and beneficent a gift—I term it a gift, as no corporation or company in the world has ever received such a privilege without compensation or conditions of any kind.

We passed in this House a bill to admit to American registry two of the finest steamers in the world, and that company now have these two steamers as a nucleus around which they say, at some time in the future, they are going to establish a wholly American line of steamers.

Now, then, immediately after the passage of this bill admitting them to American registry, this company most earnestly protested against what I believed to be a just and proper construction of the law; that is, that the law should have been interpreted to declare that engineers of vessels are officers and should have been American citizens.

But the then Secretary of the Treasury held that under the statute—and I believe it was far-fetched—that engineers were not, under that statute, officers of the vessel, and hence it was not requisite that they should be American citizens.

What a plea for a great company like this to present to Congress, after having received the gift they have, to come here and protest against having the officers of their vessels American citizens! I should say shame upon a company of that kind.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. LOUD. I will in a few moments, if the gentleman will permit me to proceed.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is just in reply to what the gentleman has said and his declaration, "Shame upon such a company." They are under the public statute No. 120—the two vessels—and the wording of the statute is that they shall be "American-built steamships," owned and operated by "American citizens in conformity with existing law."

That is, they request simply the maintenance of existing law, and that is all they have sought and all they have asked.

Mr. LOUD. They used all the power at their disposal to dodge the law——

Mr. GROSVENOR. They complained of the construction of the law.

Mr. LOUD (continuing). Yes, they complained of the construction of the law, and they used all the power they had to dodge it, and I believe they will use every effort hereafter to accomplish their purpose.

What did Congress do after having ascertained that such a construction had been put on the law? We proceeded immediately to amend the law, and now engineers are declared to be officers of the vessel.

Mr. MALLORY. Not yet; that bill has not passed the Senate.

Mr. LOUD. Well, this House has expressed its opinion. Now, I know something about the sea myself. I passed several years of my youth aboard a vessel; I have passed much of my time, during the past twenty-five years, upon the water; I know something about the duties of the officers of a vessel; I know that as a matter of fact the second, third, and fourth officers are watch officers. If a vessel carries but three mates, then the second and third mates are the watch officers. The captain and first mate as a rule are in their rooms asleep at night.

If the vessel carries four mates, the third and fourth mates are watch officers, and have absolute command of that vessel during their 4 hour watches. Now, all we ask in connection with this bill is that the second and third mates be included, and the bill that I introduced included the fourth mate, and I believe the law should be made to include the fourth mate. However, I am willing to forego that. The provision is, that they shall pass an examination to demonstrate that they are fitted to occupy the positions they are about to assume. Now, that is all that we maintain.

If there is upon the statute books now a law requiring officers to be American citizens, I fully coincide with that law. But that is simply an incident to this bill now before the House. Recently a steamship was wrecked upon the Pacific coast while the third officer was in command of the deck; and I beg to say that if any officer who was competent to be a third officer had had command of the deck on that occasion, that steamer would never have been wrecked. He had his course from the first officer, but everybody understands that courses sometimes deviate on account of currents. He was heading for a light. He should have known, if he had known anything about navigation, that he was not compelled to follow the course that he had, but discretion should have told him to keep further off from shore or call the first mate.

Now, we have excepted freight vessels. I believe this should apply to freight vessels. But we have included only passenger vessels, because we desire to protect the lives of those people who embark upon the sea. I do not believe that any just and reasonable person, familiar with the character of sea-going vessels, can object to the passage of this measure.

Mr. GROSVENOR. These passenger ships to which this law applies are subject, are they not, to be utilized by the Government as cruisers?

Mr. LOUD. The vessels belonging to that company.

Mr. BINGHAM. Those two are.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The case might happen, therefore, in the absence of this law, that one of these vessels might be under the command of an alien?

Mr. LOUD. Very probably; yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no; that can not be. What is called the postal subsidy act requires the officers of these vessels to be American citizens, and the officers of these vessels are the captains and the first and second mates.

Mr. GROSVENOR. From the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], who knows more about the matter than I do, these watch officers may be in command.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is it not against the statute for any officer of a vessel to navigate that vessel other than the duly examined first officers, consisting of the captain and the first and second mates?

Mr. LOUD. Yes, I suppose it is. I do not think it extends to the third mate.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the construction of the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, general debate will be considered as closed.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, strike out the words "and third;" so that it will read:
"That the second mates of seagoing passenger steam vessels," etc.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, this bill is recommended by the Department in the form in which it is reported by the committee. In fact the bill was substantially drawn up by the Department. It seems to me that the debate has taken a turn that does not exactly hit the merits of this case. The point that is sought to be attained by this legislation is to have men competent for responsible positions when the lives of people are intrusted to their care.

It is not a question as to whether they shall be citizens or not, although I am inclined to think that the position taken by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] is correct, that inasmuch as engineers have been construed by the Department as not to be within the requirement that they shall be citizens of the United States, that these individuals, the second and third mates, would also be construed as not required to be American citizens.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman signify that that is the construction of his own bill?

Mr. MALLORY. That is mine.

Mr. BINGHAM. That second and third mates are not required to be citizens of the United States?

Mr. MALLORY. It is not my opinion. It is based upon the opinion of Secretary Foster in regard to this other statute, and it was thought on the whole that engineers would not necessarily have to be citizens of the United States. And if I am not mistaken, the very two vessels to which reference has been made are carrying engineers who are not citizens of the United States.

Mr. LOUD. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MALLORY. I was informed six months ago that that was the case.

Mr. BINGHAM. They can not carry these officers unless they are licensed by the Department.

Mr. MALLORY. That is true; but the requirement that they shall be citizens of the United States was held by Secretary Foster not to apply to engineers, and they are ranked in the same class with second mates. Therefore, I say, reasoning by analogy, if that be correct, then they are not officers also. Still I do not think that is material in this matter at all. The point for us to look after is to require that all persons with whom lives are entrusted shall be competent and careful men, not drunkards, men who shall undergo an examination to show that they are capable of taking care of vessels. That is my idea, and that is why I am in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is the gentleman in favor of second and third mates not being citizens of the United States?

Mr. MALLORY. I am not; but in this matter we have the recommendation of the Department.

Mr. BINGHAM. I merely wish to say that it is the recommendation of the Department; but this recommendation never appeared from the Department until inquiry was made, on the submission of the bill introduced by the gentleman from California, with reference to third and fourth mates, and the Department makes this response:

This office is in favor of the examination and licensing of second and third mates of seagoing steam vessels, but thinks it unnecessary and superfluous to require a fourth mate to be made a licensed officer.

They simply signify that they are in favor of it, but never have asked Congress for it.

Mr. MALLORY. They appended a bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Which you did not put in.

Mr. MALLORY. Simply for the reason that its operation applied to all vessels, and this bill seeks to confine the provision to passenger vessels.

Mr. BINGHAM. You take recommendation of the Department when it suits you, and object to it when it does not suit you.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENALTIES, FINES, AND FORFEITURES.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I send up another bill for consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7796) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to remit or mitigate fines, penalties, and forfeitures.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended by the striking out of the words "steam vessels" and the insertion in lieu thereof of the words "vessels, immigration, quarantine, or alien contract labor," so that said section will read as follows:

"SEC. 5294. The Secretary of the Treasury may, upon application therefor, remit or mitigate any fine or penalty provided for in laws relating to vessels, immigration, quarantine, or alien contract labor, or discontinue any prosecution to recover penalties denounced in such laws, excepting the penalty of imprisonment, or of removal from office, upon such terms as he, in his discretion, shall think proper; and all rights granted to informers by such laws shall be held subject to the Secretary's power of remission, except in cases where the claims of any informer to the share of any penalty shall have been determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, prior to the application for the remission of the penalty; and the Secretary shall have authority to ascertain the facts upon all such applications, in such manner and under such regulations as he may deem proper."

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out the words "immigration, quarantine, or alien contract labor," in lines 6 and 7 of the bill, and the same words in lines 11 and 12 of the bill.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTLETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OAKLAND, CAL., A SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. WISE. I now call up the bill (H. R. 7187) to make the city of Oakland, county of Alameda, State of California, a port of entry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Oakland, county of Alameda, State of California, be, and the same is hereby, made a port of entry.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend as follows:
Strike out the word "port," in line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the word "subport."
After the word "entry," in line 4, insert "in the district of San Francisco, with the privileges of section 7 of an act entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' approved June 10, 1880."
Amend the title by striking out "port" and substituting "subport."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. WISE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7518) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The bill was read at length.

An amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Section 3, after the words "Secretary of War," in line 41, insert:

And in addition thereto, and before the putting in place of the draw spans of the bridge to be built under this act, the company or persons owning or holding such bridge shall be required, under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of War, or of such officer as he shall designate, to dredge out to a minimum depth of 21 feet below low-water datum, the two triangular spaces above and below the proposed site of the bridge, included in the interior angles formed by the crossing of the two ship channels at "the gate," to such an extent as to create a basin, the easterly and westerly limits of which shall be, respectively, at not less than 1,000 feet from the axis of the bridge, and shall be parallel thereto.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to that.

The amendment was read as follows:

In lines 47 and 48 strike out the words "below low-water datum."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WISE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. WISE. I call up the bill (H. R. 6577) to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot bridge across the Chattahoochee River at or near Columbia, Ala.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with. It is a bridge bill, in the usual form, and is approved by the War Department.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Several amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time: and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LIFE-SAVING SERVICE, LONG ISLAND.

Mr. WISE. I call up the bill (H. R. 387) to authorize the construction of a life-saving service at or near East Marion, Long Island, N. Y., and making appropriation therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOCKERY). This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WISE. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to construct or cause to be constructed a proper and sufficient life-saving station at or near East Marion, Long Island, N. Y., for the uses and purposes of the Life-Saving Service of the United States; and the sum of ——thousand dollars is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise expended, for such purposes.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I misunderstood the character of this bill, and I must insist that it shall be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WISE. I will say to the gentleman that at the time I made a statement to him about the character of the bills we were going to consider I had forgotten that this one contained an appropriation, and I will therefore withdraw the bill in its present form.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, I trust this bill will not be withdrawn, but that, if the point is insisted upon, the bill will be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WISE. I stated to my friend from Texas that no more measures involving a charge upon the Treasury would be brought forward by the committee to-day, and therefore, in order to keep faith with him, I am compelled to withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the amendment reported by the committee strikes out the appropriation.

Mr. SAYERS. That does not make any difference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE]?

Mr. WISE. As the amendment strikes out the appropriation, let the bill remain before the House.

Mr. SAYERS. I insist, then, that the bill must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WISE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The order that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole will, without objection, be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE].

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. OUTHWAITE in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 387) to authorize the construction of a life-saving service at or near East Marion, Long Island, N. Y., and making an appropriation therefor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to construct or cause to be constructed a proper and sufficient life-saving station at or near Rocky Point or East Marion, Long Island, N. Y., for the uses and purposes of the Life-Saving Service of the United States; and the sum of —— thousand dollars is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise expended, for such purpose.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out at the end of the bill the following:

And the sum of —— thousand dollars is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise expended, for such purpose.

Mr. WISE. I do not care to say anything more than that the clause of the bill making an appropriation for the construction of this work has been stricken out by the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to ask how far distant this proposed station is from the nearest life-saving station already established?

Mr. COVERT. I do not know of any life-saving station within 20 or 25 miles.

Mr. SAYERS. Which is the station nearest to this point?

Mr. COVERT. There is none within 20 or 25 miles.

Mr. SAYERS. At what place is the nearest station?

Mr. COVERT. It is in the eastern section of Long Island. I do not remember the name of the station; I mean by that the local name applied to it.

If this bill needs explanation I wish to say simply that during the last few years eleven disasters to as many different vessels have occurred at this point. Repeated suggestions and applications have been made by the life-saving officers of the district to the Department for the establishment of a life-saving station at this dangerous point. These losses which have occurred in recent years have jeopardized, according to the report of the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service to the Secretary of the Treasury, property valued at more than $615,000; and since the making of this report, and within a comparatively short period of time, other disasters have occurred there, resulting in grievous loss of life as well as of property.

Now, if there be any doubt in the mind of the gentleman from Texas or any other gentleman as to the imperative need of the establishment of this station at the point named, I ask that the communication addressed by the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service to the Secretary of the Treasury be read. Perhaps it is unnecessary to occupy in this way the time of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; we should have this information. We can not be too particular in the matter of public expenditure. Executive officers are not always economical.

Mr. COVERT. I do not know where we are to get information that shall be regarded as official and trustworthy unless from the fountain head—the Department. I ask that the letter of the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service to the Secretary of the Treasury be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE LIFE-SAVING SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your reference of bill H. R. 267, "To authorize the construction of a life-saving service at or near East Marion, Long Island, New York, and making an appropriation therefor," forwarded by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, for suggestions touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

The records of this office show that since the year 1877 eleven disasters to vessels have occurred in the vicinity of East Marion, involving $615,000 in property, of which $83,585 was lost. The neighborhood is a dangerous one, and the fact that these disasters have been unattended with loss of life has been due to good fortune rather than to the absence of danger.

In several instances, as I am informed, there would have been loss of life but for the fortuitous circumstance that in some of them persons competent to render assistance, and the means of doing so, were at hand, while in the others those on board escaped by the merest chance.

Important lines of passenger steamers daily pass this part of the coast, and in my judgment serious loss of life is liable to occur at almost any time during the prevalence of storms or thick weather. Besides the possible rescue of life for which a station here would provide, the saving of property would probably prove considerable. The officers of the service in charge of the third life-saving district have heretofore called attention to the vicinity and recommended the establishment of a station there.

As at present advised, I am in doubt whether a place called Rocky Point, not far distant, would not prove a better location for the station than East Marion, and I would therefore suggest, if the committee should see fit to favorably report the bill, that it be amended in line 5 by inserting after the word "near" the words "Rocky Point or," and that a corresponding change be made in the title of the bill. It is also suggested that the word "service" be stricken out in the title and the word "station" inserted.

Respectfully, yours,

S. I. KIMBALL,
General Superintendent.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. COVERT. Allow me to add that since the sending in of that communication, the prophesy embodied and expressed in it has been very sadly verified. That is to say since this communication was addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, there have been other disasters occurring at this point, resulting in serious loss of life as well as the destruction of a large amount of property.

Mr. SAYERS. I understand from this communication that up to the date when it was written not a single life had been lost, although vessels had been wrecked at that point.

Mr. COVERT. I have stated that since the receipt of this communication disasters have occurred at this very point, involving loss of life as well as of property.

Mr. SAYERS. I was referring simply to the communication of the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service. I would like to know of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce what will be the probable cost of the construction of this life-saving station.

Mr. WISE. Five thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. COVERT. Permit me to suggest a correction of that statement. I have been in communication with the Department; and I thought I had among my papers, but I find I have not, a written communication from the superintendent to the effect that the minimum cost of the construction of an adequate station would be $4,500.

Mr. SAYERS. If that is the "minimum" we may put the maximum at about $15,000.

Mr. COVERT. The gentleman is extravagant in his figures of speech as well as in his arithmetical figures.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, I happen to know something about the cost of these works. Taking the deficiency bills and the sundry civil bills that have passed through Congress, you will find that nine times out of ten the actual cost of constructing a public work largely exceeds the amount estimated when the proposition for beginning the work is submitted.

Now, the gentleman from New York says the minimum cost will be so much. But what we want is the maximum cost——

Mr. COVERT. Well, I can assure the gentleman, from my recollection of the communication in connection with the matter, that it will not exceed $6,000.

Mr. SAYERS. There is another question I would like to ask the gentleman: What will be the cost of the maintenance of the station per annum?

Mr. COVERT. I can only assume that the cost of keeping up the station will be on a par with the cost of keeping up other stations of a similar character.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, what will it be?

Mr. COVERT. Of course, upon that proposition I am not prepared to say. It will be dependent, naturally, upon existing conditions. The gentleman from Texas is as well advised on that proposition as I am, if not better.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, we ought to have information on these points. We have increased the number of months that the Life-Saving Service is to be employed already——

Mr. WISE. And you reduced the compensation at the same time.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, a very little reduction.

Mr. WISE. Well, you reduced it $5 per month for the whole year.

Mr. SAYERS. That is all.

Mr. COVERT. Now, I can not say anything more, even if I had the desire, except simply to summarize what has been already said; that from official sources—not from my own simple unsupported statement, but from official sources—we get the information that this is concededly a dangerous point; that there is no life-saving station there; that repeated losses of vessels and cargoes have occurred in recent years, and that since the coming in of this report, and quite recently, disasters have occurred entailing serious loss of life as well as of property.

Mr. SAYERS. Has the attention of Congress been called to this, let me ask the gentleman, by the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service? Has he ever suggested to Congress at any time to establish a life-saving station at this point, or is it not a fact that it was not until this bill was introduced and referred to him that he made a report concerning the casualties to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. COVERT. Oh, the gentleman's questions involve their own answers. I do not imagine that there has ever been, anywhere in this country, a life-saving station established primarily on the express recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury or the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service. I assume that the gentleman from Texas can not now recall a single instance where any head of a Department ever pointed out to Congress the necessity for the establishment of such a station.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. COVERT. I decline to be interrupted further until I get through with my statement.

Now, the same course has been observed with respect to this bill that has been observed with respect to all measures of a similar character, and, I assume, the course generally pursued since the construction of these stations has been commenced by the Government. Of course there is no suggestion looking to the construction of life-saving stations anywhere, on the part of the Department, until its attention is called to the matter in a proper and legitimate way by the legislative branch of the Government.

The coming in of this bill was in that way. I say very freely and very frankly to the gentleman from Texas that no action was suggested by the Department in this matter until the introduction of this bill. What was done then? Why, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in an orderly, formal, and proper manner, dispatched a letter inquiring as to the necessities and conditions and as to the propriety of the establishment of the station proposed by this bill. The Department promptly replied, and made the statement which I have caused to be read during this discussion. I respectfully submit that this statement, clear and concise as it is, to say nothing of what I have added as to further loss of life and property since the coming in of this statement, ought to be satisfactory to any fair-minded gentleman on the floor of the House. I submit that the proof is ample and more than ample as to the absolute necessity for the establishment of a life-saving station at this dangerous point.

Mr. SAYERS. The statement of the gentleman I think is entirely too broad. If he will refer to the Book of Estimates that is annually submitted to Congress he will find that the attention of Congress is very often called in the estimates to the necessity of the execution of certain public works. I can not recall an instance just now in regard to the Life-Saving Service, but I believe that it was not over two hours ago since the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. O'NEIL] read from the Book of Estimates a statement from the Treasury Department in relation to the construction of a light-ship. This was in advance of any bill that had been introduced at the present session of Congress. So that the gentleman is mistaken in his statement.

The executive officers of the Government—it is made their duty to do so—advise Congress at every session as to what the executive branch thinks ought to be done upon a particular line of service.

Now, we are asked here to establish a life-saving station, and that, too, in the face of the fact that the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service says that no life has ever been lost there. I do not desire to object to the passage of these bills. But my understanding was when the bridge bills were passed it would terminate this session, and yet this bill has been called up just as it was thought the committee was about to rise.

Mr. WISE. I was going to move to rise and adjourn when we got a vote on this bill.

I ask that general debate be considered as closed.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection general debate will be considered as closed.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments recommended by the committee, which the Clerk will report.

The amendments recommended by the committee were again read.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WISE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I hope this bill will not be passed. I shall object to it.

Mr. WISE. I ask a vote on my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] moves that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina) there were—ayes 36, noes 4.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taked the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. OUTHWAITE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 387, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction of a life-saving station at or near Rocky Point or East Marion, Long Island, New York."

A motion to reconsider the motion by which the bill was passed was, on motion of Mr. WISE, laid on the table.

CERTAIN SETTLERS IN THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

By unanimous consent,

Mr. NEILL, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill (H. R. 7834) as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 6136) to protect the rights of certain settlers in the State of California.

To Mr. SHAW, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

And then, on motion of Mr. WISE (at 4 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call up the report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 6373) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the Army appropriation bill. The report was read at length yesterday. Is there objection to its present consideration? The Chair hears none. The report is before the Senate for its action. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. MANDERSON. I hoped that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], in charge of the bill, would this morning make some explanation of the matters of difference between the two Houses which have been agreed upon. Of course we all understand that with the numbers in the conference report it is extremely difficult if not impossible to find what has been surrendered by the Senate conferees and what has been agreed to by the House conferees. I direct the Senator's attention to the matter concerning the surgeons of the Army, of which he gave a little explanation yesterday, and the matter connected with the Signal Service Corps; but the amendment to which I desire particularly to call the attention of the Senator is that concerning inspections under emergency in departments by the order of the department commander.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is provided for.

Mr. MANDERSON. That was agreed to by the House conferees?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am very glad to learn that fact.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state for the information of the Senate that the bill for the support of the Army came to us from the other House carrying $23,586,924.68. As amended by the Senate it carried $23,611,384.68. The increase made by the amendments of the Senate over the bill as it came from the other House was $24,460. As agreed to in conference the deduction amounted to $18,500. The amount appropriated by the bill as agreed to in conference is $23,592,884.68.

The bill as passed by the other House proposed to reduce the surgical corps of the Army by thirty-five assistant surgeons who were not to be dismissed, but the number was to be reduced to ninety, which was a reduction of thirty-five. As they passed out by retirement, death, or resignation, there were to be no vacancies filled until that number was reached. The Senate would not agree to that provision, but the conferees did agree to a reduction of fifteen instead of thirty-five, and that is what is now recommended for adoption in the report.

As to the Signal Corps, of which the Senator from Nebraska inquired, the amendment of the Senate was insisted upon and the House conferees agreed to it, substantially, to this effect, that when the present chief of that corps, Gen. Greely, who holds the rank of brigadier-general, shall go upon the retired list, resign, or die, the force of the Signal Corps hereafter shall consist of a colonel, a lieutenant-colonel, and the majors and captains. The office of brigadier-general expires with the holding of the present incumbent. The Senate conferees thought that they were warranted in insisting upon their amendment in order to perfect the symmetry of that corps, and the House conferees yielded.

As to the other matter of which the Senator inquired, I am sure he will find that the conference report carries his wish. There is but little substantial difference in amounts between the bill as passed and the report of the conference committee submitted here.

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky, in charge of the bill, what became of an amendment which he and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and myself agreed upon; an amendment which I offered relating to the transfer of the Apache Indians?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am obliged to the Senator for his query. It would hardly have been candid upon my part, Mr. President, if I had not stated what I now have the opportunity to state in answer to the Senator's question.

The Senator offered an amendment with reference to the removal of the Apache Indians from Alabama, where they are now quartered as prisoners of war, and have been for many years. That amendment was offered in the Senate, and it was agreed to. A Senate bill having provided for their removal to the Fort Sill Reservation, the Senator was not satisfied with that, and he offered an amendment providing that they should be removed to such reservation as the Secretary of War might select, "not prohibited by existing law." That was agreed to in the Senate. In conference it was determined to strike out those last words, "not prohibited by existing law," and leaving it in the discretion of the Secretary of War to remove these Indians to such reservation or reservations as he might select.

It may not be improper for me to add just here that more than 60 per cent of that tribe of Apaches, now held as prisoners of war in the State of Alabama, have been born in captivity; they have been born as prisoners of war, and it does appear to be an anomaly and an incongruity. They should not be held there in perpetuity. The old chief who bred such consternation in that Northwestern country is now bowed with age; he is three score years and ten and more. I believe he is a justice of the peace. I think he is holding court every day of his life.

The report of the conference committee simply provides that the Secretary of War shall transfer them to such military reservation or reservations, breaking them up into families, as must be done, if we wish to get rid of this monstrosity and anomaly with which we are afflicted.

I am sure the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], who presided over the War Department during the captivity of these people, is in thorough sympathy with the purpose of this bill; and I trust that there will be no objection made to it, as the conference committee's report leaves it absolutely to the discretion of the Secretary of War to transfer the Indians to one military reservation or to any number of military reservations, breaking them up into such small squads as to him may seem best.

Mr. ALLISON. Or to leave them where they are.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Or to leave them where they are.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Kentucky that perhaps it would be better to move these Indians who are now in captivity, but I should like to have the attention of the Senate in regard to the amendment which I offered. Under the bill these Indians might be removed to Oklahoma Territory. They did not come from Oklahoma Territory.

Mr. BLACKBURN. This bill does not provide that.

Mr. DUBOIS. Allow me to continue.

Mr. PLATT. An amendment to the amendment was agreed to. Might we not have the provision read as it has been agreed upon by the conference?

Mr. DUBOIS. It has been stated by the Senator from Kentucky, but perhaps it would be fair if the amendment as agreed upon by the conference committee were reported to the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. I have examined it at the desk.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator will allow me, I will read it.

Mr. DUBOIS. Very well; though I understand it thoroughly.

Mr. PLATT. There are other things in the amendment which were not referred to by the Senator from Kentucky, and I should like to know how it now stands.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator from Idaho will yield to me a moment, I will read it.

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Amendment No. 19, on page 14, of the bill reads:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove to such military reservation as he may select, not prohibited by existing law—

That is the part proposed to be stricken out by the recommendation of the conference committee—

the Indian prisoners of war now confined at Mount Vernon Barracks, Ala., and for the purposes of the erection of buildings, purchase of draft animals, stock, necessary farming tools, seeds, household utensils, and other articles needed for said Indians and generally for their support and civilization, the sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated, in addition to the sums herein appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. PLATT. One word, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Kentucky understands, then, that if this band is broken up into families or several parts, the $15,000 appropriated may also be broken up to care for them where they shall go?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, the amendment which I offered, and which was agreed to by the Senate, provided that these Indians should not be sent to any Territory contrary to existing law. That amendment of mine was designed, as I have said, to prevent these Indians going to Oklahoma. There is now a provision of existing law that these Indians shall not go to Oklahoma Territory, yet there was in this bill a distinct proposition that they should be sent to Oklahoma Territory. Therefore, I offered the amendment that they should go to any military reservation except Oklahoma, because, for very good and substantial reasons, Congress has provided that these Indians should not go to Oklahoma Territory.

Not one of them came from that Territory. You might just as well send them to Kentucky or to Idaho or to Maine as to send them to Oklahoma, and I say that this Territory ought to have the benefit of the provision of law which now exists that these Indians shall not be sent there. It is the design to send these Indians to Oklahoma, and if you take away that provision which says that they shall not be sent to any military reservation against which the law does not now prohibit, they will be sent to Oklahoma. I do not know that the law as it now stands will prevail, which prohibits these Indians being sent to Oklahoma Territory; and therefore I think the amendment which I offered in the Senate, in the first place, and which was accepted by the Senate, should still prevail, and let them be sent to any place else they please except to Oklahoma. It is taking an unfair advantage of that Territory to break down the existing law.

I am willing to stand here and combat their going to Idaho; the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] will combat their going to Montana, and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] will combat their going to Kentucky; but Oklahoma has no representative on this floor. These Indians do not belong to that Territory, and they should not be sent there.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the recommendation of the conference committee. These Indians have held an anomalous position for years, in my opinion, and there ought to have been long ago some provision transferring them to the Interior Department. They have been held as prisoners of war, although many of them were never on the war-path and had served in fact in our Army faithfully and loyally, but they went with the remainder of their band to Mount Vernon. As the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has said, the majority of them have been born there. The anomalous character of their situation can be understood from the fact that for years many of them have been serving in the United States Army, clad in the United States uniform, and yet they are held by the law as prisoners of war.

I do not recollect the provision of law to which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] refers in regard to Oklahoma. It was my impression that there was a provision that these Indians should not be moved west of the Mississippi River. That would practically, of course, cut off any removal. It is my impression that that was the provision.

While I should be glad even to go further, I think that this is a step in the direction of long-delayed justice to this band of Indians. They have made excellent progress. I have visited their schools, and I am sure they will compare favorably with the Indians on any of the Interior Department reservations. I think this matter can safely be left with the War Department. They have the responsibility of caring for these Indians, and there is no danger that they will send them to any place where they can be of any embarrassment or trouble to the people.

Mr MANDERSON. Will the Senator from Vermont state what reservations are "not prohibited by existing law?"

Mr. PROCTOR. I stated that I was not sure about the law, but that it was my impression that there was a provision which prohibited their being moved west of the Mississippi River; that Oklahoma was not named, but it was a prohibition against their being moved west of the Mississippi River.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, if anything was needed to prove the necessity—not the advisability, but the absolute necessity—for a change in the rules of the Senate with reference to conference reports, it is to be found in the pending report. Under the rules of the House of Representatives it is required that the conferees in submitting their report upon a bill shall accompany it with a plain statement, showing exactly what has been agreed to and what has been receded from by the conferees, and there is but little difficulty in the House of Representatives, when a conference report comes in, in those who are interested in the report being able to ascertain for themselves, without any catechism upon the floor, as to what the attitude of the bill is.

There is no member of the Senate who has had long experience in this body who has not felt the embarrassment after Congress has adjourned in ascertaining what are the provisions of law upon appropriation acts. There come to us these conference reports, where agreements are made or amendments are receded from simply by number, and in the hurried closing hours of the session it is impossible to ascertain what has been done, except as we may obtain information from Senators upon the floor who have been upon the conference, and even those Senators frequently display an absence of knowledge, to express it in mild terms, as to what has been done in the conference of which they have been a part.

Mr. President, so far as this particular agreement of the Senate is concerned, I am in full accord with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] in his suggestion that the Senate should not have receded from its amendment in any single particular. There is no reason why these Indians should be sent west of the Missouri River, and if the prohibition in the present law is of that character, the words "not prohibited by existing law" should remain in the amendment. Surely we have Indians enough west of the Missouri River to care for.

I think lands could be found, subject to purchase, upon which these Indians could properly be placed, rather than to send them as a disturbing element into any part of the West, and particularly into the Territory of Oklahoma, which has enough of difficulty and enough of Indian troubles already upon its hands, and certainly should not have more foisted upon it.

I call the particular attention of the Senator from Kentucky to an error into which he has fallen in regard to this bill. Had this debate not been prolonged, I certainly should not have gone to the desk to see this bill to verify the Senator's statement, which I always take as importing absolute verity; but, like all of us, he is liable sometimes to be mistaken.

I find as to amendment numbered 16, in which the Senate inserted, with the full acquiescence and apparently the desire of the Senator in charge of the bill, the words "or are ordered by Army or department commanders in cases of emergency," that the Senate has receded. That certainly should not have been done. Not desiring to waste the time of the Senate when the bill was under discussion, I abstained from argument with reference to the matter, and the mere suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator read the lines immediately preceding? I am sure the Senator means to be fair.

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly, I mean to be fair.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then let the Senator read what precedes these words.

Mr. MANDERSON. I shall; and I am perfectly aware of what precedes them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not think the Senator is aware.

Mr. MANDERSON. While the bill was before the Senate I called the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the words that precede the amendment. They are as follows:

> And hereafter no portion of the appropriation for mileage to officers traveling on duty without troops shall be expended for inspections or investigations, except such as are especially ordered by the Secretary of War, or such as are made by Army and department commanders in visiting their commands.

That confines inspections to those made by the department commander when he visits a frontier post. I called the attention of the Senator from Kentucky when this bill was before the body to the fact that there were frequent cases of emergency where, for instance, at a frontier post there might be an outbreak of some disease, malarial fever, typhoid fever, or what not, and that letters which I had received from department commanders and the medical directors of departments had called my attention to the necessity when at times there would be an emergency requiring an immediate inspection of a post. I might, if I saw fit to take the time of the Senate, mention numerous other cases where an emergency might arise where it would be impossible for the department commander to visit a post, and where perhaps he might not have the technical knowledge which would make his visit of any avail, where he might desire to send the adjutant-general of the department, the inspector-general, or the medical director, and where such an emergency occurred the department commander ought to have the right to order such inspection.

While I was very limited and very feeble in argument upon this question, there was argument enough in my proposition to have convinced the Senator from Kentucky, who agreed to the amendment, and who, as I understood him, believed that that amendment was yet in the bill; but it is evidently stricken from the bill.

Mr. President, it is important to retain that provision for the reason which I have urged. The department commander, who is a brigadier-general of the United States Army, and sometimes a major-general of the Army, certainly should have some discretionary power vested in him as to the inspection of the numerous posts and garrisons which are in his command; and where you throw upon him the duty of declaring that in an emergency he must report to the Secretary of War the basis of his action, the matter is certainly sufficiently guarded.

I am, with everybody else, extremely desirous that these appropriations should be hurried through to a conclusion. We sit here and we hear these conference reports, and it is seldom that we indulge in any comment upon them or ask a question concerning them. Such is our trust, and a well-founded trust, in the conferees composed of members of the Committee on Appropriations who constitute the managers on the part of the Senate.

But I think the Senator of Kentucky could not have been aware, in the haste of consideration of the bill, that those words which it seems to me are words of importance and value were stricken from the bill in conference. Indeed, I understood him to say that his belief was that they were in the bill. I hope they may be inserted. I hope the Senator from Kentucky, who has as one of his many virtues that of great patience, will take the bill again into conference and see whether the fair demands of the Senate upon the two items which have been referred to may not be sustained. I know that if he would bring to it that determined will which is another of his chief characteristics he would be compelled to give nothing to the conferees on the part of the other House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I only hope that I am entitled to some measure of credit for the patience with which the Senator from Nebraska accredits me. I am sure I have had it tested by his speech this morning. I trust the Senate has been instructed, as I am sure it has been entertained, by the lecture which the Senator has delivered to us upon the necessity of amending the rules applying to conference reports. There is nothing in the bill which differs from existing law. There is nothing in the conference report which differs from the bill as it came from the other House to which the attention of the Senate has not been called and of which explanation has not been offered.

In my judgment there is nothing in the objection of the Senator from Nebraska as to amendment numbered 16. The bill as it came from the other House was amply sufficient to cover all those investigations and inspections.

The purpose of the bill as it came to the Senate and the purpose of the Senate committee is to put a stop to an abuse which everybody recognizes in the shape of the allowance of mileage to military officers who are on pleasure bent instead of on duty bound. Where an officer wants to attend a wedding or a ball he gets an order for an inspection tour, and not only has his expenses paid, but collects mileage.

The purpose of the bill is to correct that abuse, and if the Senate will agree to the conference report it will be corrected. It leaves ample power, for it declares that—

> Hereafter no portion of the appropriation for mileage to officers traveling on duty without troops shall be expended for inspections or investigations, except such as are especially ordered by the Secretary of War, or such as are made by army and department commanders in visiting their commands.

Mr. MANDERSON. Personally.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I insist that that is all that is necessary, and whenever you go an inch beyond it you perpetuate an abuse which has grown to be a stigma upon the military service of this country. I care nothing about that.

As to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], he insists that the Territory of Oklahoma shall be exempt from the Apache tribe or band of Indians. He insists that they may be ordered anywhere else among the forty-four States or the Territories of this Union except in that one place. I deny it. The law to-day does not exempt Oklahoma specifically.

Mr. DUBOIS. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that he leave the amendment precisely as it is.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that I will not consent to do that. I propose to leave the Secretary of War untrammeled to exercise his discretion. When the Senator said that unfair advantage is taken or sought to be taken I am sure he said what his deliberate judgment did not approve or warrant. There is no purpose to take any unfair advantage of any Territory, or any State, or any section. The bill as reported back from the conference committee leaves the Secretary of War to exercise his discretion, and authorizes him to quarter those prisoners of war where he pleases, on any reservation or any reservations, whether it be to put them in your State or mine. I am not afraid of these peaceful people. I would sooner fear the shadow of a ghost. It is absurd; it is ridiculous. We are holding in the State of Alabama two hundred and sixty-odd prisoners of war, sixty-odd per cent of whom were born prisoners of war. Many of them have been loyal soldiers, wearing the uniform of our Army. The chief himself is an official of the law. It is absurd.

I shall not consent to have the bill sent back to conference, because the conferees of the two Houses have not hastily, as the Senator from Nebraska intimates, but deliberately, carefully, and painstakingly reached a conclusion. They have made a conference report upon the bill as a whole, and I ask that we may come to a vote upon concurring in that report.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to appeal from the Senator from Kentucky having in hand the conference report to the Senator from Kentucky when he had in hand the bill which was under consideration in the Senate on the 12th day of July. I turn to the RECORD, and I will read for his enlightenment and that of the Senate the colloquy which took place between the Senator from Kentucky and myself. We had reached that point in the bill which has concern with amendment numbered 16, and having reached it, I said:

> The last clause of this paragraph makes a very decided change in Army Regulations and in existing law.

The Senator says it does not, but it is quite apparent that it does.

> I am inclined to think that the purpose desired to be accomplished is a good one, but I fear that the pendulum has swung too far in the other direction. It will be noticed that by this wording no army or department commander can order an inspection of any post or any part of his department.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], interrupting, said:

> Let me ask my friend what amendment he wants.
> Mr. MANDERSON. I shall offer an amendment which I think will commend itself, because it is mild in its terms.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me?

Mr. MANDERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I see, Mr. President, that it is the purpose of the Senator not to allow the appropriation bill to pass, and I, with his consent, will ask that the conference report go over and let us go on with other business.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have no desire to waste time, but I must set myself and my friend from Kentucky right in this matter. I beg to go on for a few minutes longer.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will take care of myself, if the Senator from Nebraska will only do that kindly service for himself.

Mr. MANDERSON. On the 12th day of July the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] said:

> I do not mean to abridge or restrict the powers of a department commander. What is it that the Senator from Nebraska wants?
> Mr. MANDERSON. I propose after the word "commanders," in line 16, to insert:
> "Or are ordered by army and department commanders in cases of emergency."
> Mr. BLACKBURN. I accept the amendment.
> Mr. MANDERSON. It seems to me that is right.
> Mr. BLACKBURN. It is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I say so now.

Mr. MANDERSON. There was no suggestion then that this was the perpetuation of an abuse.

> Mr. BLACKBURN. It is right.
> Mr. MANDERSON. I wish to say a few words in addition to show abundantly the reasons for it. These departments are very large in territory. Many of them contain numerous posts. Frequently there is an absolute necessity for an inspection. For instance, there is an outbreak of malarial fever or some other disease at one of the garrisons. An immediate inspection by the Medical Department is an absolute necessity.
> Mr. BLACKBURN. I agree to that.

No word of criticism, no word of objection, but with that full agreement, that full understanding, apparently the reaching of our minds to one common object, the amendment was agreed to and put in the bill.

I have nothing further to say. I simply wished to show that my friend from Kentucky is very frequently right and that he was right on the 12th day of July.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I desire to sustain heartily what has just been said by the Senator from Nebraska. I can not imagine a reason for making it impossible for army or department commanders to order in an emergency a special inspection. The objection to it could hardly arise from anything but jealousy on the part of the Inspector-General's department. I am sure that such men as Howard and Miles, in case of an unforeseen necessity for a thorough and immediate inspection of a post, either in matters of health or in matters of discipline, are abundantly capable of selecting a good officer and sending him to make the inspection. It must be done in haste frequently.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does not the telegraph answer the purpose in sixty minutes?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know whether it will or not, but I should be perfectly willing to trust the commanding officer of the Eastern department to send a man to New London or to Newport or to Boston without waiting. It might be after business hours, and it might be impossible under twelve or eighteen hours to get an answer. In the mean time the commanding officer is not allowed to send an officer from his own staff to see what is the trouble at a certain post; at least the officer is not allowed to get his traveling expenses. I think the amendment adopted by the Senate, if the Senator will allow me, is simply common sense.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky ask that the conference report go over?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask for a vote upon concurring in the conference report.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the conference committee.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Idaho agree to have the conference report go over? It is evident it will take up considerable time, and I should be glad to call up the message from the House of Representatives on the tariff bill.

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly I shall agree to that course; but I insist, with all due deference, that I should make some remarks in support of the amendment which has been referred to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to the Senator from Idaho having all the time he desires to make remarks on the report, but I prefer that the other matter shall be taken up at this time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well; as I chance by accident to be in charge of the conference report, and as I see very plainly that the other side do not intend to allow appropriation bills to be passed——

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, Mr. President, I protest.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that the report may go over.

Mr. HAWLEY. I protest against that.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not say that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I speak in the face of the record which has been made this morning.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Kentucky knows very well that this is not a matter where the line which divides parties has anything to do with appropriation bills.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am surprised to find that it has been made such a matter.

Mr. HALE. It has not been made such a matter.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that the conference report may go over indefinitely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from from Kentucky, that the conference report shall go over?

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Kentucky must not by implication say that this side is opposing appropriation bills.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Kentucky does not mean to deal in any implication or intimation, but he means to state that the record of this morning shows that the other side of the Chamber is delaying the passage of an appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. Why does the Senator from Kentucky say "the other side," when only two or three Senators on this side have taken part in the discussion? The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has not opposed the report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir; on the contrary, I make my acknowledgment to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HALE. Is it right, then, for the Senator from Kentucky——

Mr. BLACKBURN. And I do not include the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Then do not apply the remark to this side of the Chamber.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do say the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator need not include me. I am perfectly willing that the present session shall close before midnight. I make no opposition to this report except upon a single point, and there I know I am right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that the conference report shall go over?

Mr. MANDERSON. I object for the moment, Mr. President, simply that I may express my amazement——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being objection, the conference report is before the Senate.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

Mr. MANDERSON. Will the Senator from Idaho allow me for one moment?

Mr. DUBOIS. It will only take me one moment.

Mr. MANDERSON. All right; go on.

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to state that I offered an amendment in the Senate which was accepted by the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Maine. The amendment has been stricken out in conference——

Mr. BLACKBURN. A part of it.

Mr. DUBOIS. And then the Senator from Kentucky rises and says that I am delaying the passage of an appropriation bill. I say the Senator had no right to strike out that amendment; and I propose to show——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I say I had a right.

Mr. DUBOIS. I propose to show the Senate that the Senator is breaking down existing law in order to strike out the amendment. It comes with poor grace from the Senator from Kentucky to charge me with delaying the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not the prerogative of the Senator from Idaho to define my rights.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am simply preserving my rights in this Chamber. The Senator had no right to make that intimation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I deny the Senator's right to define my rights as a Senator. It is a piece of impertinence which I resent.

Mr. DUBOIS. No more than I resent the Senator's.

Mr. MANDERSON. Even at the risk of a continuation of this tempest in a teapot I must express my amazement at the slur upon myself couched in the language of the Senator from Kentucky. I am sure that in cooler moments, and when he shall have read the full RECORD as to the appropriation bill, the Senator will regret having made such a statement.

Mr. President, the army appropriation bill is one in which every member of the Committee on Military Affairs has deep interest, and it is his duty to have deep interest in it. In the performance of that which I conceived was not only my right but was my absolute duty, on the 12th day of July, when the bill was hurried through the Senate, I attempted to impose upon it certain amendments. Like the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, the amendments I offered were not only accepted by the Senator from Kentucky, but he gave them his hearty approbation and his full consent. He agreed with me, and now, forsooth, because we see fit to stand up and insist that that which the Senate has placed in the bill shall not be stricken out and appeal to the Senator to stand by the action which the Senate has taken, we are to be slurred with the statement that we are attempting to embarrass business here and prevent action.

I repudiate it. There is no man on the other side of the Chamber, to say nothing of this side, who has wasted less time in debate than I have done. I have frequently put my hand over my mouth when I felt impelled to speak, because I did not wish to waste the time of the Senate and prevent action of which I am heartily in favor; but, Mr. President, I can not allow that my motive shall be impugned, especially by a man whom I hold in such high esteem as I do the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that the conference report shall go over?

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote on concurring in the report.

Mr. GORMAN. Question!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the report of the conference committee?

Mr. MANDERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ALLEN answered to his name.

Mr. DUBOIS. I understand that this conference report——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I object to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds that debate is out of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The yeas and nays are being called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll call will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when the name of Mr. HARRIS was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and would vote "yea" if he were not paired.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. POWER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS], and vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. SHOUP (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have been requested to transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], which I do, and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] is indisposed to-day, and I wish to announce his pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER]. I make this announcement for the day, as he will not be here.

Mr. DIXON. Has the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Mississippi has not voted.

Mr. DIXON. I have a general pair with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTON (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The junior Senator from Maryland has not voted.

Mr. PATTON. Then I withdraw my vote. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. GORMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] that we transfer our pairs, so that he can vote. I have already voted.

Mr. DIXON. That is agreeable to me. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] will stand paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 18; as follows:

PACIFIC STATE CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the special order made yesterday for 1 o'clock to-day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1295) to reimburse the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada for moneys by them expended in the suppression of the rebellion.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4864, being the tariff bill.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Arkansas will permit me, I suggest that the special order, which was made special at my instigation, may go over until some other definite time that will be satisfactory to the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. Until Monday.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the bill be made a special order for Monday immediately after the transaction of the routine morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks that the bill, the title of which has just been read, be made a special order for Monday next, immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. HALE. Not to interfere with the appropriation bills.

Mr. WHITE. That will be satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Subject to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine that it is not to interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INDUSTRIAL TROUBLES IN CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. PUGH. With the permission of the Senator from Arkansas, I wish to enter a motion to reconsider. Yesterday morning during the morning hour a resolution coming over from the day before, introduced by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], calling for certain information from the Attorney-General, was passed by the Senate nem. con. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which that resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Alabama will be entered. Does the Senator from Alabama include with his motion a request for the return of the resolution from the Department of Justice?

Mr. PUGH. I make that request, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so ordered, if there be no objection. It is so ordered.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PLATT. I ask permission of the Senate to withdraw a motion which I entered to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 7335) to grant to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. The bill was passed day before yesterday, and I entered a motion to reconsider, which I wish now to withdraw.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to withdraw a motion that he has heretofore entered to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed to which he has referred. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion to reconsider is withdrawn. The bill stands passed.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the message of the House of Representatives on the House bill 4864.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the message of the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 19, 1894.

Resolved, That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 4864, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. MCMILLIN, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. REED, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. PAYNE be managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. MANDERSON. Do I understand that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] does not desire to take the floor upon the pending question? The Senator from Delaware is, I understand, entitled to the floor.

Mr. GRAY. I do not desire to occupy the floor any further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I rise to address myself to this important question of order with considerable hesitation and very great reluctance, because I realize that the occupant of the chair [Mr. HARRIS], the distinguished President pro tempore of this body, is a parliamentarian of distinction, with that distinction well earned and everywhere recognized. But while recognizing the superiority of his acquirements in parliamentary law and of his great experience in matters pertaining thereto, I realize just as fully that that sense of fairness, of impartiality, that possesses him, will prompt him to weigh with very great care and give full consideration to any argument that may be presented bearing upon a subject so important as this question.

The reluctance I feel in addressing myself to this contention is aggravated because I realize that in the loose parliamentary methods that obtain in this body parliamentary law is frequently declared from party impulse and political passion rather than by calm, dispassionate deliberation. It is what we wish to procure from legislation proposed that usually obtains the victory in our parliamentary discussions. The wish is father to the thought, when it comes to the decision of a question of voting upon an appeal from the decision of the Chair or upon a matter pertaining to parliamentary law or construction of our rules, that is referred by the Chair to the Senate for its consideration and for its final action. Conclusions are warped by party bias and parliamentarians stand amazed at conclusions induced by political interests. Precedents are of little value here, for the Senate never hesitates to overturn them at the sweet will of a partisan majority.

Mr. President, I will state the attitude of this question of order. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] enters a motion that the Senate shall further insist upon its amendments to the tariff bill and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives. To that there is an amendment by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], that that which we know as the one-eighth of a cent differential on sugar contained in paragraph 182½ shall practically be stricken from the bill by way of instruction to the Senate conferees yet to be appointed to recede from that paragraph. The point of order as it is made is, that it is not competent for the Senate to instruct its managers of a conference on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses.

Now, Mr. President, having seen what it is, let us now see what the question is not. It is not a question of the Senate receding from a part only of an amendment that it has heretofore voted upon a bill. There can be no discussion upon that proposition if that were the question. No writer upon parliamentary law, whether he wrote in the elementary works upon that subject or whether he is found among those who have collated the experience of parliamentary bodies, ever disputed the proposition that an amendment such as was proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] was not in order.

In other words, after a bill has passed its third reading and gone beyond the amendment stage, especially after it has passed the Senate, it may only be amended by the Senate itself by a complete recession from an entire amendment and not by the dropping out of a part of it. To amend an amendment voted upon the bill by one or the other of the two Houses by the House placing the amendment upon the bill is not recognized by parliamentary writers as being in order. But that is not this question. The simple question for consideration here and now is whether the Senate has it within its power to instruct its managers of a conference.

Mr. President, what is a conference between the two Houses of Congress and how does it differ from conferences between the Lords and Commons in the British Parliament? It has changed its form somewhat under the American method. By parliamentary law as it was practiced in England there was much more of formality; there was much more of gradual approach toward final action than there is under our system. There is always first a simple and then a free conference had between the two Houses of Parliament. Going back to the early days and to the time of the formation of the Parliament you will find that that which obtained then obtains now in the British Legislature.

First, there being a dispute or disagreement between the two houses, there came what was known as the simple, or what is spoken of by some writers as the bare conference, the conferees meeting with much formality, the Lords always insisting upon precedence over the Commons, sitting, we are told, with their hats on in the conference, the upper house fixing the time and place and assuming much of dictation in immaterial matters. There came first this simple or bare conference that simply meant that the two sets of conferees should say nothing of their own motion or express their personal wishes or manifest their personal conclusions, but practically sitting mute, they presented, usually in writing and not verbally, the insistence of the two houses that they respectively represented.

Following a simple conference which failed of agreement there came yet another simple conference, and there was again the same formality and the same limitation of power. Anyone who has explored in parliamentary law and read of the safeguards thrown about conferences can not but be amazed at the spectacle presented within the last few days with regard to the conference upon this tariff bill. We are told that at the conferences, whether simple or free, had in the olden time between two houses constituting one parliamentary body, the participating entrance of a stranger, or the appearance of a paper that had not been legitimately produced in one of the two houses, broke up the conference, and the fact being reported to the two houses immediately all effort at conference ceased.

This was the practice under the old system, and that is yet the law. Yet we have seen in the conference upon this bill the interference of a stranger, wielding, by virtue of his position, enormous power, and exerting it upon the conferees, and indeed upon one House to defeat the expressed legislative desire of the other—an interference with legislative rights never seen before, and deserving of severest censure.

In British practice, the two simple conferences having been had, and proving ineffectual, then, if the two Houses still further insisted, there came what is known as a free and full conference; and in this country, in Congress and in all our Legislatures, we have that form of conference, and that alone.

Under our system, there being no other conference but that which is called free and full, let us now see what is meant by it.

The only enlargement of the powers of the conferees in a free and full conference over one that is simple or bare is that they have the right to present each one to the other his own view, his own idea of the contention, instead of confining himself to that which has been presented in the two bodies. There is that distinction, and that alone. If authority from elemental writers was needed upon this question I might refer the Presiding Officer to Cushing, where he draws very distinctly this difference in his Manual, showing very clearly wherein a free conference differs from the simple or bare conference that he has already described and that I have referred to. I quote:

In the first place, the duties of the managers at the latter—

Meaning a simple conference—

are confined to the making and receiving a communication which has previously been agreed upon and sanctioned by the House at whose request the conference is held. In a free conference they are at liberty, and it is their duty, to urge their own argument, to offer and combat objections, and, in short, to attempt by personal persuasion and argument to effect an agreement between the two Houses.

I wish here to read an extract from another parliamentary author; one who had more than theoretic study of parliamentary law; one who by the actual practice of it in high place has won a distinction and prominence as a parliamentarian second to no man who has ever lived; one who by reason of his sound parliamentary action was declared to be an overbearing czar, was denounced by political foes as a man who proposed to exercise his own will against the will of the House over which he presided; and yet we have seen the wisdom of this distinguished man's action in parliamentary matters ratified, indorsed, and followed by the very men who attempted to howl him down and drive him from the chair that he so ably filled. During this year there has been issued Reed's Parliamentary Rules, and I read from it the author's idea of what is a free conference. In the extract that I shall read you will find the recognition of that I insist upon, that in a full and free conference it is the right of either House to give instruction of whatever character it may see fit to its conferees:

242. A free conference.—A free conference is one where the conferees meet and present, not only the reasons of each House, but such arguments, and reasons, and persuasions as seem suitable to each member of the committee. Instead of being confined to reasons adopted by either of the Houses, each member may present his own. A conference may therefore be a free conference though each House may have instructed its members and limited them to the terms of agreement.

Mr. President, the language I have read does not import the instruction that follows from the wording of the bill as it has passed the House or Senate. It goes without saying that if that was the sort of instruction referred to by this writer this language would never have been used. No, sir; it means other instruction. It means, for instance, a specific instruction that the conferees shall recede from an amendment in whole or in part, like this at bar, or that they shall do anything else that the sovereign house whose subjects and mere representatives or agents they are may direct them to perform.

Now, Mr. President, if it be true that the Senate of the United States has no control over this, its committee, in what a bad plight we are left as compared with the House of Representatives. In the House of Representatives the proposition that the House may instruct its conferees has never been gainsaid, and that course has always obtained. It is not a matter of rule. It can not be contended that this course, ever pursued, is because of a rule adopted by the House of Representatives, and that the establishment of such a rule shows that the parliamentary practice or law was different and the adoption of the rule was to work a change. It is not a matter of rule, but is simply a matter of parliamentary law insisted upon from the beginning by those who have so carefully and so well guarded the rights of the House of Representatives over its committees of whatsoever character.

What reason is there that the particular committee of the Senate of the United States which we call the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate should be treated differently from any of its numerous committees? Does the Senate of the United States ever hesitate for a moment to instruct any one of its standing or any one of its special committees? Never. At every session and numerous times during every session of Congress we find the Senate instructing these committees as to what they shall do, and that, too, as to matters far more important than some matter of disagreement that may arise between the two Houses over a bill which has been amended in one body or the other.

What possible reason can be urged, then, why this comparatively unimportant committee, a committee that expires by simply making its report, a committee that dies the moment there is a disagreement announced, a committee that must be resurrected and be born again every time there is an insistence—what reason is there that this unimportant committee should be above that which has created it, and be so important that it can not receive instructions from the Senate that it represents, from the creator that has given it being? There can be none urged worthy of consideration. In the precedents in this body where the Senate has voted against instructions to its conferees, or voted against the right to instruct them, it will be found that these votes have always been based upon that which has been referred to by me as frequently obtaining in this Chamber, where the desire to accomplish a fact, usually a political fact, or to bring about a partisan result, has overpowered and overcome the judgment of men upon matters of parliamentary law; and frequently and unfortunately by such action the power of the Senate has been curtailed, its rightful powers have been destroyed, simply for party purposes.

I greatly fear that it is a waste of words to attempt to convince any Democratic Senator here of the correctness of my position, which I propose to fortify by frequent and many authorities taken both from the Journals of the Senate and the House of Representatives, because I believe there lies at the bottom of the consideration and of the decision the Senate will make by its majority a desire to retain in the bill the objectionable differential one-eighth of a cent a pound on sugar, the striking out of which it is feared may defeat the pending tariff bill, a consummation I think devoutly to be wished.

Mr. President, there is no use of mincing words about this matter or attempting to deceive; there is more involved in it than the mere question of order, great and important as that is, and we need not and can not shut our eyes to the fact. In this question is involved the claimed rights of the sugar trust, which was so eloquently denounced as a monster by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] a few days ago, when he made his speech introducing his proposition to recede from the differential one-eighth on sugar, and which he said if voted for by the Democratic party would place upon the neck of that party the collar of a villein of the sugar trust.

It is claimed in this Chamber and out of it that this great and powerful organization has tremendous power over legislation which it exerts at its will, and it seems to me as though it had, for no matter how near we may come to the defeat of the differential one-eighth on sugar, no matter how convinced we may be that at last we have the sugar trust under our feet, there is always found the single vote which will prevent this differential rate from being stricken from the bill, and I apprehend that it will be found present with us to-day. There is always in ambush some one Senator who comes to the front solely for the purpose of saving the rights of this iniquitous and abominable trust that was so boldly denounced by the Senator from Wisconsin a few days ago.

The Senator from Wisconsin, having said that this one-eighth tax was obnoxious to the principles of Democracy, abhorrent to every principle of justice, oppressive to all the people of the United States, unfair, wicked, and unnecessary, has since that statement told us his reason for the withdrawal of his motion to recede from the differential rate, a motion which I admit was not in order had it been objected to, but a motion which very speedily could be made in order by putting it in the form of instructions to the conferees. Does the Senator from Wisconsin, in defense of this withdrawal, tell us that he has had further light upon the subject, and that this much denounced trust is not so black as he had painted it? No. Does he tell us that on sober reflection he has changed his mind, and believes that this measure of protection to the refining industry of this country should be maintained and is of advantage to the people of the United States? No. Manfully, perhaps—and yet I doubt somewhat whether that is a proper term to use as characterizing the action—at least frankly and candidly, he comes to the front taking this position: "No; I still believe this is an obnoxious and iniquitous trust; I still believe that this differential one-eighth is for its benefit and for its benefit alone; that it is abhorrent, obnoxious, and oppressive; I still believe that it should be stricken from the bill; I still think that the great mass of the American people believe that it should not be permitted to remain in this bill as a stigma and a reproach to the Congress of the United States, but the party lash has been applied to my back; I am told by the Democratic caucus that I must withdraw this amendment; I have agreed to the caucus action, and I withdraw the amendment which I really so greatly favor."

Mr. President, now that we have presented to us that which beyond question is a parliamentary method of getting rid of this obnoxious clause, now that we have the parliamentary opportunity to do right, I shall expect the Senator from Wisconsin, and others across the aisle who agree with him, to come to our support and strike from the bill this "obnoxious and abhorrent" feature, even if by such action they destroy the bill, which they themselves say, and all unite in saying, no man either in the Senate or the House of Representatives is in favor of, and all should therefore oppose.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives, I have said, never fails to instruct its conferees, and yet it has never failed to recognize also that it is not within the power of the House parliamentarily to recede from a part of an amendment which it has placed upon a bill. That, it seems to me, very fully and effectually disposes of the point of order suggested to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. There is between these two propositions a distinction that is both apparent and real. We sometimes have refused to instruct in the Senate under circumstances which I have narrated. In what bad plight we should be if different courses of conduct were pursued in the two Houses.

What immensely superior advantage the House of Representatives will have over us in legislation if it can send its conferees into the conference room instructed upon every item of a bill, making constant changes in the instructions with every conference, insisting to-morrow upon what it did not insist upon to-day. In that sort of conference trade I greatly fear the Senate of the United States will in every instance be worsted in the conflicts which shall come between the two Houses on their disagreeing votes.

Mr. President, very early in its history, I say, the House of Representatives insisted upon instructions to its conferees. In the House Journal of the Thirty-eighth Congress, volume 1—I shall not take time now to refer to the particular instance, but simply refer to the precedent—it was decided by the House that "it is competent for the House to instruct a conference committee the same as other committees."

In the Forty-ninth Congress on three different occasions the House of Representatives insisted on instructions to conferees. I quote:

Instructions on the part of both Houses are common in case of previous disagreement on particular items.

In the Forty-ninth Congress, volume 1, pages 2319, 2320, and 2354, it was held:

Instructions when not observed by the conferees is a matter for the House to consider after the report is made.

I also refer to the Forty-ninth Congress, pages 2458, 2459 of the House Journal, which I have here.

It is well to note, in connection with these citations, the fact that in the Thirty-eighth Congress, being the authority first referred to, the question arose on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on a House bill to increase the internal revenue, and Hon. Elihu B. Washburn, being himself one of the conferees on the part of the House, having introduced the resolution insisting on a disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment, embodied in his resolution the proposition to instruct the House conferees upon the matter in dispute between the two Houses. The chairman of the managers on the part of the Senate was Hon. JOHN SHERMAN.

The second authority referred to shows the action of the House of Representatives at the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, in a disagreement that arose on the river and harbor appropriation bill. Hon. Eben F. Stone raised the point of order that it was not competent for the House to instruct a conference committee, thereby curtailing its powers and authority. The Speaker "overruled the point of order, and stated that in accordance with the practice of the House for many years past under decisions of the Chair and the House, a motion to instruct the managers on the part of the House at a conference with respect to any proposition in dispute between the two Houses was in order."

In considering the same river and harbor bill on a second conference, the House instructed its conferees with reference to the appropriation made by the Senate for the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal, and also, on motion of Mr. Hiscock, instructed its conferees to insist upon striking out a part of the amendment of the Senate, providing for the improvement of the Mississippi River. The Speaker held "that instructions to the conferees would be in order at any time before the announcement of their appointment, when the subject was no longer before the House."

Afterwards, in the consideration of the conference report upon the same bill, the Speaker of the House, deciding a question of order, used this language:

It is competent, under the recent practice of the House, to instruct conference committees. Still, the House in that case, as in the other, may ultimately recede from its disagreement to the very amendment in regard to which it had instructed its conferees to insist upon a disagreement.

There are numerous other cases in the House of Representatives which might be cited, but no one will dispute the proposition that in that body there have been no exceptions to the rule that the House might instruct its conferees, and that that course has not been because of rule, but by reason of the unwritten law.

What has been the practice in the Senate of the United States? It was suggested by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] that in no instance had the Senate of the United States ever instructed its conferees. That is a grave mistake. It has frequently held and acted to the contrary. Mr. President, I am fully aware of the fact that sometimes such instructions have been refused, but the political reasons for such refusal I have given. It may be that perhaps those same reasons lie at the foundation of all decisions which have been made either way, but I refer here to one or two cases sustaining our contention. Knowing that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has looked this matter up more fully, and will refer to other cases, I will not take up much of the time of the Senate in their consideration.

In the Journal of the Senate of September 21, 1888, I find that the sundry civil appropriation bill came from the conferees, and there was a disagreement between the two Houses which was reported by Messrs. ALLISON, HALE, and COCKRELL on the part of the Senate, and Messrs. Burns and Ryan on the part of the House, whereupon the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate still further insist upon its one hundred and tenth amendment to the bill upon which the committee was unable to agree, and ask a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be instructed that if the conferees of the two Houses can not agree they should propose that the text of the House bill disagreed to by the Senate be stricken out of the bill.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. COCKRELL.

Mr. President, there is a case squarely in point and on all fours with this, and it is a case which disposes very satisfactorily of the proposition of objection made yesterday by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] that there were yet no conferees, and therefore they could not be instructed. It seems to me that that objection was a little diaphanous.

What is the difference whether conferees are appointed or are not appointed? Can you not raise a committee, and in advance of the members being appointed by the presiding officer of the body, is it not possible to instruct them as to their duties? That objection is hardly worth a moment's breath to combat. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] suggests to me that he doubts very much whether instructions are ever given in any other way except in advance of the appointment of the conferees.

Did I see fit to take up the time of the Senate, I could perhaps with profit call attention to the numerous instances where the Senate has insisted upon its right to instruct its conferees. In a noted debate had upon this subject in 1874, on the request of Senator Edmunds, who held, when President pro tempore of the Senate, as Senator SHERMAN and Senator Ingalls had also held, that it was competent to instruct conferees, sent to the Clerk's desk and had read a compilation of precedents in the Senate, made by the Official Reporter of the Senate, Mr. Murphy, who was recognized by everyone at that time as being one of the best parliamentarians in the country. This compilation is of such value in this connection that I beg leave to insert it in my remarks.

The paper referred to is as follows:

An examination, extending back but a few years, shows two instances in direct opposition to the ruling of the Senate on the 3d of March last.

At the first session of the Thirty-eighth Congress, the committee of conference upon a bill "to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," having reported on the 1st of March, 1864, to the House of Representatives their inability to agree, a resolution was offered by Mr. Washburne of Illinois, as follows:

"Resolved, That the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments to House bill No. 122, and that the House request of the Senate another committee of conference on the said bill; and it is hereby declared to be the judgment of this House that in an adjustment of the differences between the two Houses on the said bill, there should be an additional duty of not less than 20 nor more than 40 cents per gallon imposed on spirits on hand for sale. (Congressional Globe, page 892, part 1, first session Thirty-eighth Congress.)

A question of order being raised, the decision of the Speaker (Mr. Colfax) was as follows:

"The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the House of Representatives has the power to instruct any committee which it authorizes to be appointed. It is a judicious check upon the power of the Speaker in appointing committees. They have a right to instruct a committee of conference as they have a right to instruct a standing or a select committee. The gentleman from Illinois moves this himself as a resolution. It seems, however, susceptible of division, first upon asking another committee of conference, and, secondly, upon the instructions. As to the right to move instructions the Chair has no doubt." (Congressional Globe, part 1, first session Thirty-eighth Congress, page 892.)

The decision of the Speaker was acquiesced in by the House, no appeal being taken, and the resolution of Mr. Washburne was agreed to.

On the following day, the action of the House of Representatives having been communicated to the Senate, the Senator from Ohio, Mr. SHERMAN, offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the conference requested by the House of Representatives be agreed to; and that the conferees heretofore appointed by the Senate be instructed to agree to proper amendments to the Senate amendments disagreed to by the House, providing for a tax of not exceeding 20 cents a gallon on spirits on hand for sale." (Ibid., page 900.)

The late Senator from Maine, Mr. Fessenden, at once suggested a doubt as to the resolution being in order; to which the Senator from Ohio replied as follows:

"I have not examined for precedents, but I think there can be no doubt of the power of the Senate to instruct its conferees on any point. It is a question of discretion. Ordinarily it would not be done; but there have been two conferences on this disagreement, which has all grown up out of one difference. The House of Representatives have now expressed their opinion on that difference, and I think the Senate ought also to do so." (Ibid., page 900.)

Mr. Fessenden then raised the question of order directly for the decision of the Chair, and the Vice-President, who is now Senator from Maine, Mr. Hamlin, gave his decision in the following words:

"The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair can have no doubt that the resolution proposed by the Senator from Ohio is in order. Conference are of two characters—free and simple. A free conference is that which leaves the committee of conference entirely free to pass upon any subject where the two branches have disagreed in their vote, not, however, including any action upon any subject where there has been a concurrent vote of both branches. A simple conference—perhaps it should more properly be termed a strict or a specific conference, though the parliamentary term is 'simple'—is that which confines the committee of conference to the specific instructions of the body appointing it. The Chair therefore rules that the resolution is in order."

In the discussion which ensued the Senator from Ohio said:

"The Senate might very properly object to any action by the Senate conferees which was not strictly within the parliamentary rule, but the Senate itself may, by its instructions, enlarge the power of the committee. There is no doubt about that. There is no limit to the power of the Senate over its committees. It may authorize its conferees to agree to amendments to its amendments, which might not be in order if those amendments to the amendments came directly from the conferees without the action of the Senate. That is the view all the conferees took, although they differed on the question of parliamentary law." (Ibid., page 900.)

In the course of the debate, Mr. Hendricks of Indiana said:

"I agree with the decision of the President of the Senate that it is competent to instruct a committee of conference on the part of the Senate." (Ibid., page 902.)

Again he said:

"In respect to the questions of disagreement, the Senate may instruct its part of the committee, but outside of the questions of disagreement the Senate can not instruct that committee, for the reason that that is not one of the modes of legislation known to parliamentary usages. * * * The Senate may instruct the committee upon all the questions that were referred to that committee, but not upon other questions. (Ibid., pages 902 and 903.)

From this view of parliamentary law no Senator dissented, although the debate on the subject-matter extends over many pages of the Congressional Globe.

The result of the debate, which was quite protracted, was the rejection of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, although no one doubted the right of the Senate to instruct the conferees, and the adoption of the following resolution offered by Mr. Conness, of California:

"Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 1st instant, proposing instructions to the conferees, and ask another free conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 122) to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes." (Ibid., page 907.)

The House of Representatives having agreed to a further free conference, the conferees on again meeting were unable to agree, and the bill was disposed of by the Senate receding from its amendments.

The proceedings in this case, as in that which follows, are recorded in the Journal, but the Congressional Globe is quoted from, because it contains the details of the points raised, with the decisions made and the debate thereon, instead of the Journal, which merely records the votes.

At the first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress an amendment was added by the Senate to the sundry civil expenses appropriation bill increasing the pay of Senators and Representatives and taking effect retroactively from the beginning of that Congress. This amendment was disagreed to by the House of Representatives, but they amended other Senate amendments by the addition of a provision granting bounties to the soldiers of the war of the rebellion. Two committees of conference were unable to agree upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and when the second disagreement was recorded the Globe shows these proceedings occurred:

"Several SENATORS. What shall be done?"

"Mr. SHERMAN. There is but one point of difficulty. The Senate conferees proposed to recede from the amendment in regard to the pay of members, but found that that was not at all in the way; that could be laid out of view; the only difficulty is in regard to the question of bounties. The House insist upon some legislation being had in regard to the bounties, and their conferees submitted a proposition which we did not feel at liberty to accept.

"I will say that the proposition submitted is much more moderate and much more reasonable than any I have yet seen; but we considered that the action of the Senate did not leave us at liberty to accept it." (Congressional Globe, Thirty-ninth Congress, first session, part 5, page 4246.)

And subsequently the Senator from Ohio suggested:

"The Senate may instruct the conferees." (Ibid., page 4247.)

Whereupon Mr. Trumbull, then a Senator from Illinois, moved—

"That the committee of conference be instructed to agree to that proposition of the House." (Ibid., page 4247.)

Meaning the proposition which had been stated in detail by Mr. SHERMAN as having been made by the House conferees.

A modification of the terms of the proposition having been suggested by Mr. Doolittle, Mr. Trumbull said:

"The proper motion, I suppose, would be to recommit the report to the committee with instructions to agree to that proposition." (Ibid., page 4247.)

No point of order was raised, no doubt was suggested by any Senator as to the power of the body to instruct the conferees; and the motion having been stated, amendments to the instructions were moved, and finally, the question recurring on the motion of Mr. Trumbull, it was agreed to by a vote of yeas 28, nays 5. (Ibid., page 4228.) And on the very same page of the Globe it appears that the conferees immediately made a report conformably to the instructions of the Senate, and it was agreed to and the bill disposed of.

Mr. President, I have here several other instances where, in the Senate, conferees have been instructed. I shall not take the time in this intense heat and in view of the impatience which we all have to proceed to final conclusion with this bill, or rather with the proposition to accede to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives, by referring further to them. I can not for the life of me see, as I said a moment ago, why there should be any distinction made between this committee, called the managers of a conference on the part of the Senate, and any other of our committees.

To take that position is most dangerous. It opens up an evil of very great magnitude, and while I know that precedents obtain for little in this body when they pertain to matters of parliamentary law or the construction of our rules, I think we should hesitate a long while before we establish such a precedent in this instance, not only because of the bad results which will flow from the adoption of any such rule or order of procedure, but hesitate because that departure will have been made under threat—I desire particularly to call the attention of Senators on the other side of the aisle to the proposition I am making—under a threat, coming to us from a monstrous trust, that if this differential one-eighth on sugar is not kept in the bill there shall be no legislation upon the subject of the tariff. Can we, dare we, succumb to such demand to execute their will as is made here by the sugar trust?

That is the plain proposition which meets us here, and it might just as well be understood first as last. Should there be an appeal from the decision of the Chair in its ruling against the instruction—and I hope there will not be, for I believe our fair, impartial President pro tempore will see his way clear to the conclusion that I have reached after considerable thought over this subject—a vote to sustain the Chair will be as directly a vote in favor of retaining this differential one-eighth as though that alone were the question involved in this debate. Beware, Senators, how you place yourselves in that position.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not think I ought to apologize for taking a few moments of the time of the Senate in referring the Presiding Officer, who must decide upon this point of order, to the precedents of the House of Representatives and of the Senate upon this question.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] yesterday referred to a single case, which would seem, taken by itself, to go to the point that the Senate could not instruct its conferees. That case was upon the so-called salary-grab or back-pay bill. It will be observed that the Presiding Officer of the Senate, at that time Senator Edmunds, entertained the motion. The Senators who wanted to get the back pay immediately took an appeal, and overruled the decision of the Chair by a vote of 47 to 11.

On one occasion since that time the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], being President pro tempore of the Senate, held, upon the strength of the action of the Senate in 1873, that a motion to instruct conferees was not in order.

I think I may venture to state, without fear of contradiction, that, with the exception of the two cases to which I have now referred, every precedent in both Houses of Congress from the foundation of the Government to the present moment is the other way, and as I shall show, the Senate has directly since that time entertained the motion and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] had voted to instruct conferees.

As a question of parliamentary law, the House of Representatives and the Senate stand alike with reference to the right of the instruction of conferees. There is no specific rule in the House, as I understand, which governs this matter. The House acts in this respect with reference to general parliamentary law. It has never by any presiding officer, so far as I am able to discover, been held that a motion to instruct conferees was not in order. On the other hand, it has repeatedly and without exception entertained that motion whenever it has been made.

There is no reference to this matter in the rules of the Senate; but in the Manual and Digest, containing the rules and practice of the House of Representatives of the United States, it is distinctly stated that—

> Conferees may be instructed by the House, but this course is not usual until they have made their first report, such instructions being only in order when the subject of the conference is before the House.

Then follow the matters which were recited by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

To examine the 1873 decision, which was relied upon by the Senator from Delaware. The matter of back pay came up in the next Congress. On January 6, 1874, it being under discussion, the question of order which was decided in the Senate by overruling the decision of the Chair was again referred to. At that time our chief Official Reporter, Mr. Murphy, whom we all recognize as one of the best parliamentarians that the country has ever afforded, had collated some cases in relation to this matter, which were then read to the Senate by the Senator from Vermont, justifying his ruling on that occasion. Mr. Edmunds said:

> I can not help believing, Mr. President—I am bound to believe in a technical sense, as the Senate was so careful to try the question of order, and was so anxious evidently to have that question of order determined in such a way, if it could be, that we could meet this salary question as to ourselves by itself, and was unable to do so—I am bound to presume that if we could have met it in that way, we should have rejected the increase of our own salary and that of the Cabinet.

That, of course, was sarcasm. He continued:

> I think, Mr. President, that we acted under a grave misapprehension; and I have had a very competent person, whose knowledge of the history of parliamentary law and the course of parliamentary precedents is almost perfect, look back only for a few years to see what our practice had been on that subject. You remember, Mr. President, that the Senate determined, upon an appeal by the then Senator from Illinois [Mr. Trumbull], who has now withdrawn to the quiet of private life and who is no more vexed with questions of this kind, that it was not in our power to instruct our own committee to insist that our salaries should not be increased—that we felt ourselves compelled to follow, and, in spite of our wishes and our will that our salaries should not be increased in that way then and there, we found ourselves compelled by what we then thought to be parliamentary law to vote that they should be increased. That, it turns out from an investigation, was an error; and I ask that the Clerk may read the Congressional history which I send to the desk on that point.

The Chief Clerk then read the compilation of precedents, which had been made by Mr. Murphy, our reporter. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read them, though they are not very numerous; but I shall ask that the paper be inserted in my remarks.

The paper referred to is as follows:

An examination, extending back but a few years, shows two instances in direct opposition to the ruling of the Senate on the 3d of March last.

The decision of the Speaker was acquiesced in by the House, no appeal being taken, and the resolution of Mr. Washburne was agreed to.

On the following day, the action of the House of Representatives having been communicated to the Senate, the Senator from Ohio, Mr. SHERMAN, offered the following resolution:

In the course of the debate, Mr. Hendricks, of Indiana, said:

And subsequently the Senator from Ohio suggested:

"The Senate may instruct the conferees." (Ibid., page 4247.)

Whereupon Mr. Trumbull, then a Senator from Illinois moved

"That the committee of conference be instructed to agree to that proposition of the House." (Ibid., page 4247.)

Meaning the proposition which had been stated in detail by Mr. SHERMAN as having been made by the House conferees.

A modification of the terms of the proposition having been suggested by Mr. Doolittle, Mr. Trumbull said:

"The proper motion, I suppose, would be to recommit the report to the committee with instructions to agree to that proposition." (Ibid., page 4247.)

No point of order was raised, no doubt was suggested by any Senator as to the power of the body to instruct the conferees; and the motion having been stated, amendments to the instructions were moved, and finally, the question recurring on the motion of Mr. Trumbull, it was agreed to by a vote of yeas 28, nays 5. (Ibid., page 4228.) And on the very same page of the Globe it appears that the conferees immediately made a report conformably to the instructions of the Senate, and it was agreed to and the bill disposed of.

I refer to the cases which Mr. Murphy cites. In the Thirty-eighth Congress, in the House of Representatives, a resolution was offered that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments to House bill 122, and that the House request of the Senate another committee of conference, the resolution reciting:

And it is hereby declared to be the judgment of this House that in an adjustment of the differences between the two Houses on the said bill, there should be an additional duty of not less than 20 nor more than 40 cents per gallon imposed on spirits on hand for sale." (Congressional Globe, page 892, part 1, first session Thirty-eighth Congress.)

A question of order being raised, the decision of the Speaker (Mr. Colfax) was as follows:

"The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the House of Representatives has the power to instruct any committee which it authorizes to be appointed," etc.

Speaker Colfax, being one of the best of parliamentarians, decided that conference committees could be instructed. No appeal was taken from the decision.

On the following day, the action of the House of Representatives having been communicated to the Senate, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] offered a resolution agreeing to the conference requested by the House of Representatives and that the conferees heretofore appointed by the Senate be instructed to agree to proper amendments to the Senate amendments disagreed to by the House, providing for a tax of not exceeding 20 cents a gallon on spirits on hand for sale.

That resolution was submitted by the Senator from Ohio. The then Senator from Maine, Mr. Fessenden, suggested a doubt to the Senate as to its being in order to instruct its conferees on any point. The Vice-President, Hannibal Hamlin, gave the decision that it was in order for the Senate to instruct its conferees.

In the first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress an amendment was added by the Senate to the sundry civil expenses appropriation bill increasing the pay of Senators and Representatives. Two committees of conference were unable to agree upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and when the second disagreement was recorded several Senators inquired what should be done.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] said that "there was but one point of difficulty," and so on. Subsequently the Senator from Ohio suggested that "the Senate may instruct the conferees;" whereupon Mr. Trumbull, then a Senator from Illinois, moved that the conferees be instructed to agree to the proposition of the House. The modification was proposed, and then Mr. Trumbull said:

The proper motion, I suppose, would be to recommit the report to the committee with instructions to agree to that proposition.

No point of order was raised, and no suggestion was made that it was not in order.

So in 1874, the precedent established in 1873 in the back-pay act being again discussed, I think it was substantially agreed on the part of the Senate that an error had been made in overruling the decision of the Chair that the conferees could be instructed.

This whole matter came under discussion again in 1883 on the internal-revenue taxation provision, which was part of the tariff bill of 1883. It was then contended by the Senator from Arkansas, Mr. Garland, that the Senate had decided in 1873, by its overruling the decision of the Chair, that it could not instruct its conferees. The question was avoided in that case by the Senator from Kansas, Mr. Ingalls, offering a substitute for the motion to instruct the conferees to the effect:

That it is the opinion of the Senate that the conference on House bill 5538 should be full and free, and that if the Senate conferees become advised that any limitation has been placed by the House upon the action of their conferees, the Senate conferees shall retire and report to the Senate for its consideration.

So that action on the discussion which was had then as to whether the Senate could instruct its conferees was avoided by the passage of the resolution submitted by Mr. Ingalls. The result of it was that the conferees came back with an agreement, and the bill was passed.

But if any Senator will examine the discussion as to the pretended authority established by the Senate in 1873, I think he will be convinced that the Senate at that time did not hold that to be an authority. It was followed in 1887 by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], then being President pro tempore of the Senate, and the only time when it has ever been followed in the Senate. That was upon the interstate-commerce law. There had been a conference and a disagreement reported. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] moved to recommit the report with instructions to the Senate conferees to insist upon striking out certain provisions in the amendment.

The point of order was raised by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] on the motion to recommit, and especially the question of recommitting with instructions. The Senator from Maine contended that a motion to recommit was proper, and also a motion to recommit with instructions. It was argued consistently by Mr. Edmunds that there was nothing in the 1873 decision which reversed the former precedent of the Senate.

But the Senator from Ohio felt himself to be bound by the decision of the Senate made in 1873, and therefore decided that it was not in order to move to recommit with instructions to the conferees. The Senator from Ohio, referring to the decision made in 1873, said:

That question was debated at some length. An appeal was taken from the decision on the question of instructions, and the Senate overruled the decision of the Chair which held that the instructions were in order, by a very large majority, a vote that clearly indicated the purpose of the Senate to adopt that amendment. The Chair feels himself bound by that ruling unless, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, it has been since overruled. The Chair can find no case where the subject has been brought before the Senate since; but the Chair feels bound to regard that as a precedent and therefore is compelled to hold that the instructions are not in order, but a motion to commit is clearly in order.

So we have, as I have said, the overruling of the Chair by the Senate in 1873, and we have the adherence to that precedent by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] in 1887. But as showing what was the real view of the Senator from Ohio in regard to the matter we find him in 1888, in the case cited by the Senator from Nebraska, moving to further insist upon an amendment which the committee of conference had not been able to agree upon and to instruct the conferees with reference to the amendment. That was with regard to the sundry civil bill, as it has been cited by the Senator from Nebraska. On motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] the Senate resolved—

That the Senate still further insist upon its one hundred and tenth amendment to the bill, upon which the committee was unable to agree, and ask a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon—

They had agreed to everything except that amendment. That was the only matter in difference between the two Houses—and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be instructed that if the conferees of the two Houses can not agree, they should propose that the text of the House bill disagreed to by the Senate be stricken out of the bill.

The motion of the Senator from Ohio was entertained and those instructions were given to the conference committee in 1888.

But more recently, in 1890, upon the discussion of the question whether the Senate could instruct its conferees the Chair, the Senator from Kansas, Mr. Ingalls, being President pro tempore, ruled that the Senate could instruct its conferees. The vote was then taken as to whether the instructions proposed should be made, and it was decided in the negative by a vote of 23 in favor of the instructions and 28 against the instructions.

That was upon the legislative appropriation bill upon a disagreement as to the amendment for annual clerks. The Senate had put into the bill an amendment providing for clerks at $1,800 per annum. The House disagreed to the amendment in toto, and a report was made by the committee of conference that after full and free conference they had been unable to agree upon certain amendments. Senator Dawes thought a further conference was hopeless.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wanted to make a motion that the Senate insist upon its disagreement, if that is in order, and I apprehend it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the Senate insist upon its amendments?

Mr. COCKRELL. Insist upon its amendments with an amendment reducing the amount to $1,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You can not do that. You can instruct the conferees.

Mr. COCKRELL. With instructions, then, to the conferees to agree upon $1,500.

After some discussion the President pro tempore said:

The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference, with instructions to its conferees to make the amount of compensation $1,500 per annum for the annual clerks.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], without raising any point of order, thought that we ought not to entertain the motion. He said:

That, it seems to me, is the dignified way as between the two Houses. I will not interfere with the motion of the Senator from Missouri if he thinks any good can come from it, but I think the dignified and proper way for the Senate is to recede, stating, however, that we shall insist upon these amendments on any proper occasion hereafter.

And so the discussion went on. Mr. Dawes inquired what the motion of the Senator of Missouri was, and the President pro tempore said:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to state it, that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and instruct the managers on the part of the Senate to agree to a compensation of $1,500 for the annual clerks.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire how that would be "a full and free conference?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is within the power of the Senate to make the order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is "full and free" in every parliamentary sense.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] asked for a division of the question as to the amount of salary. The question was first put on the motion to further insist, and it was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate be instructed to agree to fix the compensation at $1,500 for the payment of the annual clerks.

On that the yeas and nays were called for. Then the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] moved to reconsider, and that motion got only 5 votes as against 47. Then the President pro tempore said again:

The question recurs upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to instruct the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Then the roll was called, and the result was announced—yeas 23, nays 28. Amongst those who voted to instruct are found the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who made the motion; the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who thought yesterday we had never done it; the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and other Senators. I will place the yeas and nays in my remarks.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Connecticut whether the point of order was made. Of course by unanimous consent we can do anything here.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Connecticut also to state more distinctly precisely what was the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. PLATT. The motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] was to further insist upon the amendment of the Senate and to instruct the conferees to reduce the sum in the Senate amendment from $1,800 to $1,500.

Mr. CHANDLER. As to the salaries of clerks?

Mr. PLATT. The salaries of annual clerks.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from West Virginia says the point of order was not made.

Mr. PLATT. I have been reading the whole discussion in the Senate to show that it was decided to be in order. While the point of order was not formally made, the question was raised in the Senate as to whether it could be done, and it was decided it was within the power of the Senate to make the order and that the Senate could instruct its conferees. The suggestion was made by Senator Dawes that it would not be a full and complete conference if the Senate conferees were instructed. The whole of the discussion turned upon the question whether the Senate could instruct its conference, and it was decided emphatically by the Senator from Kansas, Mr. Ingalls, then President pro tempore, that it was within the power of the Senate to instruct its conferees.

Mr. CHANDLER. At what date did this occur?

Mr. PLATT. This was July 1, 1890, and it is the last precedent of the Senate upon this point.

Now, and as I said before I think I am not mistaken in saying it, the only instance in the history of Congress where either branch has held that it could not instruct its conferees was in 1873, when the Senate overruled the decision of the Chair that they could be instructed, and in a later session when the Senator from Ohio said he felt bound by the precedent in 1883, and held that the Senate could not instruct its conferees, and there was no appeal taken.

But in 1888 we find the Senator from Ohio himself making the motion to instruct the conferees, and the Senate adopting the motion. In 1890, upon a case where a discussion was raised as to whether the Senate could instruct its conferees, we find the Presiding Officer, the Senator from Kansas, Mr. Ingalls, holding it to be within the power of the Senate. From that decision no appeal was taken, nobody disagreeing to the decision to the extent to take an appeal.

There was an instance where in 1883 the Senate seemed to be disturbed because the other House had instructed its conferees. That was upon the tariff bill of 1883. The question was much discussed then, and, as I said, it was avoided by a resolution introduced by the Senator from Kansas, to the effect that if the conferees found that the conferees of the other House had been instructed by the House, they should come back to the Senate and report, and the Senate would then consider what it would do.

Whether the conferees of the other House had been instructed I do not know, but at any rate the Senate conferees did not come back to the Senate with any report of that character. When they came back they came with an agreement with the other House, and thus the bill became a law. But in 1890 there occurred in the other House a very marked case of instructions to the conferees, and one which did not seem to disturb the Senate at that time.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Connecticut will permit me, I will state that I was a member of the conference in 1883, and I remember the circumstances very well. The other House had instructed its conferees as to certain points. The Senate conferees declined to meet the House conferees at first upon the ground that it would not be a full and free conference.

The members of the conference on the part of the House, however, assured the managers on the part of the Senate that they did not feel bound by those instructions; that they would meet us in a full and free conference as though no instructions had been given them on the part of the House. By general consent that course was followed, both parties admitting that instructions had been given, and the force of those instructions, if they were insisted upon.

Mr. PLATT. I alluded to that case because it is the only one I know of where the Senate has made any objection to the instruction of conferees by the other House. All through the history of Congress the Senate conferees have been meeting with the House conferees, who came to the conference under instructions by the House. A very notable instance of that kind occurred in 1889 on the bill for the admission of Dakota and other Territories, which will be remembered by our friends who now represent the new States which were thus admitted. There had been a committee of conference, with a disagreement reported to the other House.

Mr. SPRINGER moved that the House further insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference requested. Thereupon, pending the motion—though the Senator from Delaware or some other Senator says it is not in order to instruct while a motion is pending to appoint a new conference—Mr. Baker, a member from New York, moved a resolution that the House instruct the new conferees to recede from the amendment in certain respects. That was afterwards changed by a motion which was submitted by a member from New York, Mr. Cox. Mr. SPRINGER having made the motion that the House further insist and agree to the conference asked, Mr. Cox sent up the following resolution instructing the conferees:

Resolved, That the House instruct the new conferees to recede from the amendments to the Senate bill 185 in the following respects:

1. That the Territory of New Mexico and the proposed new State thereof may be excluded from the bill.

2. That the bill may be so amended in conference as to provide for the admission of South Dakota by proclamation of the President, under the Sioux Falls constitution, to be resubmitted to the people of South Dakota, with provisions for a new election of State officers, and without a new vote on the question of division.

3. Further providing that the proposed States of North Dakota, Montana, and Washington shall be admitted on the same basis, and all of them under proclamation by the President.

Further, that all such matters as relate to the election of delegates and apportionment of the districts in which members to the convention are to be elected, the date of holding the convention, and the date of the resubmission of the South Dakota constitution, and the location of the temporary seat of government in South Dakota, and such other matters as are not included in the instructions above recited to be referred to the committee of conference for their discretion.

That passed on a call of the yeas and nays, the most remarkable case in the whole parliamentary proceeding of instruction. The Senate made no objection to it. The Senate conferees met the conferees of the other House, instructed upon the vital points of the measure, with a statement that certain other points were left to their discretion. The Senate agreed with the conferees, and the result was that those four Territories were admitted by the adoption of the conference report and the passage of the bill by that means.

Mr. President, observe that the first instance in our parliamentary history where the Senate has held that it could not instruct its conferees was the instance in 1873, where the decision of the Chair that it could do so was overruled, and that the only other instance was the subsequent decision in 1887, where the Senator from Ohio, being President pro tempore, felt that he was bound by that decision, and declared that the Senate could not instruct its conferees.

That he believed personally that the Senate could instruct its conferees is shown by the fact that in 1888 he himself moved to instruct the conferees, and the Senate adopted the motion. But when presiding he felt that he was bound by a precedent of the Senate which had not then been overruled. It was overruled in 1888, on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, and it was overruled in 1890 by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Ingalls], then President pro tempore of the body.

How can it be said that on the strength of this one precedent in the Senate, where Senators were anxious to pass the bill, which gave them $2,500 per year additional to the salaries to which they were entitled by law, which put $5,000 into their pockets, a precedent was established by overruling the decision of the Chair that the Senate could instruct its conferees, and that that is to make the rule for the Senate?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, if this debate is to be regarded as merely for the enlightenment of the President pro tempore of the Senate, in order to guide him in reaching a decision, of course it is not necessary that there should be a full attendance of Senators. Any arguments upon the point of order intended for members of the Senate might well enough be deferred until after the ruling of the Chair, when of course an appeal could be taken by the side which may be dissatisfied, and the question again debated before action by the Senate.

On the other hand, it seems to me that in the interest of preventing the consumption of time it would be better if Senators, who may be called upon to vote in case of such appeal, should be present in the Senate while the primary arguments are made which are addressed in the first instance to the judgment of the Chair. As I notice that there is a very limited attendance upon the other side of the Chamber, I think before the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] resumes the discussion and brings the weight of his great intellect to bear upon this important question there ought to be a quorum of the Senate present, which I suggest is now missing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dixon,	Lindsay,	Power,
Allen,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Pugh,
Allison,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Quay,

Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,
Davis,	Kyle,	Platt,

Mr. TURPIE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] is detained at his house by serious illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

The question is upon the point of order raised by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] upon the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] to amend. The Senate having adopted some six hundred amendments to House bill 4864, the bill being returned to the House and the House having nonconcurred in those amendments, and having sent to the Senate a message insisting upon its nonconcurrence, and asking a conference with the Senate upon the disagreeing votes, the Senate has presumably expressed its judgment and opinion upon the merits of these disagreeing votes by the adoption of the amendments. The House presumably has expressed its opinion in nonconcurring with these amendments, and in its insistence upon that nonconcurrence, and asking a conference.

All conferences between the two Houses of Congress in respect to disagreeing votes are intended to be full and free. Committees of conference are appointed because of the disagreements between the two Houses, and for the purpose, and the sole purpose, of compromising and adjusting the differing and conflicting opinions of the two Houses composing the legislative department. The committee is created to give and take, to compromise, and bring the two Houses to an agreement. And when either House shall instruct its conferees in respect to one or more of the disagreeing votes, it impairs the fullness and absolutely destroys the freedom of that conference.

But the Chair need not decide the broad question of the power of the Senate to instruct conferees, for that question is not necessarily involved in the point of order presented by the Senator from Delaware. The Senator from Delaware moves that the Senate insist upon its amendments and grant the further conference asked by the House of Representatives. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] moves as an amendment to the motion of the Senator from Delaware that the conferees hereafter to be appointed, if they are ordered, shall be instructed to amend one of the Senate amendments. It is clear beyond doubt that the only effect, and the object and purpose of the motion is not to recede from, but to amend one of the Senate amendments, which involves and presents directly and distinctly the question as to whether the Senate can do by indirection what no one contends it has the power to do directly—that is, to amend and modify one of the amendments of the Senate at this stage of the proceeding.

The bill was open to amendments in the Senate until it was, by the Senate, ordered to a third reading; but after ordered to a third reading the Senate has had no power to amend.

Neither House having the power in its individual capacity to change the status of the disagreements except by receding from distinctive and complete propositions theretofore insisted upon. And while it may be said that the committee of conference alone can grant these compromises and modify propositions of either House within the limits of the disagreements, the Chair does not hesitate to say that the failure upon the part of either House to instruct deprives the Houses of no one of their respective powers. The power of each House is as absolute and complete over the whole subject-matter in the absence of instructions as it can be with them, because whatever the committee of conference may report, whether an agreement in full, a partial agreement, or a general disagreement, the action of the committee must be agreed to by each House before it can become effective. Whatever the conference committee may agree to and may report, every phase and feature of that report is submitted to the Senate for its action, and the Senate must agree or disagree to the report; and it can never become effective until the Senate has agreed; so that not the smallest particle of the power of the Senate over the subject-matter involved in these disagreements is impaired or lost by a failure to instruct and whether the Senate shall instruct or not instruct.

But believing, as the present occupant of the chair believes, that the Senate can not directly amend any one of the amendments that now constitute the disagreements between the two Houses by its own positive, individual, and direct action, the Chair believes that it can not do indirectly and through the instrumentality of a conference committee or the conferees of the Senate what it has no power to do in its own right and by its own direct action.

The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Delaware, and holds that the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota is not in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President, I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and on the question whether the decision of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the Senate I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? The Senator from West Virginia moves to lay the appeal of the Senator from Minnesota on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANDERSON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRICE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. By arrangement I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. If that transfer is satisfactory to the other side I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BLANCHARD (when Mr. CAFFERY'S name was called).

My colleague [Mr. CAFFERY] is at home sick and unable to attend this day's session of the Senate. He is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER]. Were my colleague present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when Mr. GORDON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GORDON] is paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when the name of Mr. HARRIS was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and would vote "yea" if not paired.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS], and vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). While I have the floor I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If both Senators were present my colleague would vote "nay."

I announce also my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If the Senator from Alabama were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY]. If he were here I should vote "yea," and he would vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I vote "yea." I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES], and to state that if he were present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 32; as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. According to parliamentary usage, the nays have it, and by a tie vote the motion to lay the appeal on the table fails.

Mr. HALE. On the question, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. Now let the Chair state the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] having appealed from the decision of the Chair, the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? Senators believing that the decision should stand as the judgment of the Senate will vote "yea." Those of a contrary opinion, "nay." The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRICE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], which by arrangement has been transferred to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. I vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when the name of Mr. HARRIS was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and would vote "yea" if the Senator from Ohio were present.

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I vote "yea." I wish to state that if my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] were present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. RANSOM. I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. JARVIS] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment fails and is not agreed to.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. VOORHEES, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. JONES of Arkansas, Mr. VEST, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. ALDRICH were appointed.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, the Senate having recorded its determination to recommit this bill to the committee on conference, I desire to submit some suggestions upon some of the items of the metal schedule, which I wish to impress rather upon the managers on the part of the Senate and their colleagues in the other branch of Congress than upon the Senate itself.

First, as to pig iron:

The pending bill provides a duty of $4 a ton on pig iron. During the last seventy-eight years the duty on pig iron imported into this country has been as follows: 1816, 50 cents per cwt.; 1824, 50 cents per cwt.; 1828, 62½ cents per cwt.; 1832, 50 cents per cwt.; 1833 to 1842, gradual abatement from 50 cents per cwt. to 20 per cent ad valorem; 1842, $9 per ton; 1846, 30 per cent ad valorem; 1857, 24 per cent ad valorem; 1861, $6 per ton; 1864, $9 per ton; 1870, $7 per ton; 1872, $6.30 per ton; 1875, $7 per ton; 1883, $6.72 per ton; 1890, $6.72 per ton.

This summary is given to show that for more than three-quarters of a century it has been, with scarcely an exception, the uniform rule in framing tariff legislation to impose a duty on pig iron that would stimulate its manufacture, which lies at the base of all our iron and steel industries. From 1816 to 1833 the duty was higher than it has ever since been, namely, first $10 per ton and afterwards $12.50 per ton; twice since 1833 has the duty been $9 per ton; and it has at no time since 1861 been less than $6 per ton. Even the distinguished Senator from Texas, when he prepared his celebrated tariff bill of 1888, which passed a Democratic House, fixed the duty on pig iron at $6 per ton. Experience appears to have taught all our lawmakers down to the present time that a lower duty than $6 per ton can not bring prosperity to our pig-iron industry. It is now proposed to make the duty $4 per ton, which would be $2 per ton less than the rate fixed in the Mills bill.

Attention may be called to the extremely low prices at which pig iron is now sold in this country, and particularly in the Southern States, but the fact is overlooked or ignored that these are panic prices, which have already bankrupted many pig-iron manufacturers, and which have been made possible by other panic prices for iron ore, fuel, limestone, and labor. If it is desirable that these conditions should continue, than a duty of $4 per ton will accomplish this result; but if we accept uncontradicted evidence that the present prices of American pig iron are lower than they ought to be, and lower than they can long remain without bankrupting nearly every pig-iron manufacturer in the country, making a reasonable rise in price absolutely necessary at an early day, the conclusion is irresistible that our manufacturers need the duty of $6 per ton which was provided in the Mills bill.

If they are not afforded this protection against cheap English pig iron, the necessary rise in American prices referred to above would at once be taken advantage of by our English competitors, and by Scotch pig-iron makers as well, who would cut under our own prices and destroy utterly the hope of better times for our now greatly depressed pig-iron industry.

The fact is frankly admitted that pig iron can be produced in some of the Southern States at less cost than in any of the Eastern or Western States, but two additional facts in this connection should not be lost sight of. First, that the market for Southern pig iron is chiefly on the Atlantic seaboard, where at a great disadvantage in freight rates it meets foreign pig iron; and second, that pig iron for the manufacture of steel is not made in the South, only foundry and forge pig iron.

With regard to freight charges it can be shown that it costs from $3 to $5 to carry a ton of Southern pig iron to Northern markets on or near the Atlantic coast, while English and Scotch pig iron can be delivered at New York, Boston, and other Atlantic ports at freight rates which seldom exceed 4 shillings per ton, and are often much below that rate, falling as low as 2 shillings and even as low as 1 shilling, the rate depending upon the ballasting necessities of vessels destined for Atlantic ports. So desirable is pig iron as ballast that it has been brought to these ports without any freight charges whatever.

It will be seen, therefore, that to sell their pig iron in Eastern markets, Southern manufacturers are at a disadvantage of about $3 per ton in freight as compared with competing English and Scotch manufacturers. In any change which may be made in the existing duty on pig iron this $3 should be taken into account, as well as the fact that present prices of pig iron in this country, and of the raw materials which enter into its manufacture, are so low that they ought not to continue in justice to all interests involved, including the workingmen who are paid low wages, and the transportation companies which are not earning any money for their stockholders.

The following detailed statement of the prices of Southern pig iron in Eastern markets in October, 1893, and of English pig iron in the same month is taken from the bulletin of the American Iron and Steel Association:

For some time the sharp competition of Southern pig iron has fixed the price of Northern brands in Northern markets. This will be made clear by the following quotations of prices of pig iron at Philadelphia on October 23, 1893, which we take from the Press of that city:

Pig iron at Philadelphia.	Price per ton.
Standard Pennsylvania (lake ore), No. 1x	$14.00-$14.50
Standard Pennsylvania (lake ore), No. 2x	13.50- 14.00
Standard Virginia, No. 1x	14.00- 14.25
Standard Virginia, No. 2x	13.25- 13.50
Virginia and Southern, No. 1x soft	13.50- 14.00
Virginia and Southern, No. 2x soft	13.00- 13.25
Standard Pennsylvania and Virginia forge	12.25- 12.75

It will be observed that the pig iron of Pennsylvania, Virginia, and States farther South is now sold in Philadelphia at substantially the same prices and the same is true of other Northern markets. Prices at New York on October 18 of both Northern and Southern pig iron are given by the Iron Age as follows: "We quote Northern brands $14 and $15 for No. 1; $13 and $14.25 for No. 2; and $12.25 and $12.50 for gray forge, at tide water. Southern iron, same delivery, $13.25 and $14.25 for No. 1; $12.25 and $13.25 for No. 2; gray forge is $11.25 and $12."

In the following table we give the prices of Southern pig iron only at Philadelphia, New York, and Boston about the middle of October, our authorities being the Press of Philadelphia, the Iron Age of New York, and the Commercial Bulletin of Boston.

Brands.	Philadelphia, October 23.	New York, October 18.	Boston, October 14.
Southern No. 1	$14.00-$14.25	$13.25-$14.25	$14.50
Southern No. 2	13.25- 13.50	12.25- 13.25	$13.00- 13.50
Southern No. 3		11.50- 12.25	12.50
Southern No. 1, soft	13.50- 14.00	13.25- 13.50
Southern No. 2, soft	13.00- 13.25	11.75- 12.25
Southern gray forge	12.25- 12.75	11.25- 12.00

We will frankly say that there is some difficulty in comparing English and Scotch brands of pig iron with American brands, but we can not go astray if we assume that Cleveland pig iron, made in the North of England, would be the first foreign pig iron to displace Southern pig iron in Northern markets of this country if the present duty of of $6.72 per ton were greatly reduced. The various brands of Cleveland pig iron closely resemble many brands of both Northern and Southern pig iron. Competing with these brands, they would fix the price for others in our markets. The following are the present prices of Cleveland pig iron at the shipping port of Middlesborough, which we take from the Iron and Steel Trades Journal of London for October 14th, 1893:

Brands.	Price per ton.
Cleveland No. 3	35s. 0d. = $8.50
Cleveland No. 4	33s. 3d. = 8.08
Cleveland gray forge	32s. 9d. = 7.96

Comparing these Cleveland prices with the American prices given above we find a difference of $5 and $6 in favor of Cleveland pig iron.

In the last ten years the pig-iron industry of the Southern States has had a marvelous growth, which has been due largely to the low prices at which Southern pig-iron could be sold in Northern markets, the South itself consuming but little pig iron. It has been said, however, that no matter how low the duty on pig iron may be made, Southern pig iron will always find a market in the Mississippi Valley and in the great West generally, even if it should lose the trade of the Atlantic coast. This theory is a mistake. The cheapness of Lake Superior iron ores is this day creating a revolution in the Western pig-iron trade, and pig iron made from these ores is actually driving Southern pig-iron out of Western markets.

It is more and more necessary, therefore, that the foreign pig-iron manufacturer should be kept out of our Atlantic coast markets by an adequate duty on pig iron. With a low duty on pig iron the Southern pig-iron manufacturer would surely lose the Atlantic coast markets, and with Western competition he will have a hard struggle to retain any part of the Western markets. With the Atlantic coast markets surrendered to foreigners, I have no hesitation in saying that our Southern pig-iron industry, having only a small home market, would be almost destroyed. I will read an editorial article from the New York Iron Age for July 12, which may well receive the attention of Southern Senators:

THE NORTHWESTERN PIG-IRON TRADE.

Southern pig iron is now receiving some crushing blows in the Northwestern markets.

The month of June witnessed the most active trade that Chicago pig-iron houses have known for a very long time. Not only were contracts for foundry iron numerous, but some of them were very large, covering the requirements of heavy consumers far into next year. When the buying movement began an attempt was made to control it by limiting the time for deliveries to the remainder of this year and by cutting down quantities to be taken by individual consumers. But this policy was speedily dropped, and buyers were permitted to have their own way. An effort was also made to advance prices, in the belief that the buying movement was strong enough to sustain it; but this also proved ineffectual, and the best that can be said is that prices were forced no lower than the rates which had ruled prior to the resumption of active buying. This may be claimed as a distinct gain, because for many months prices have been steadily receding, with every new contract showing a lower figure than the one preceding it. Something has certainly been accomplished when prices are found to be no longer giving way.

But in all this activity the seller of Southern iron has had no share. He has heard the conflict, seen the smoke, and perhaps smelled the powder, but could not participate in the fray. With the lowest prices ever made by Southern furnaces, and the lowest freight rates ever known from the South to the Northwest, there has been absolutely no chance for Southern iron to figure in these contracts. It is the first time since Southern iron made its appearance in the Northwest and since foundry iron began to be made by Chicago furnaces that the former has been so completely ignored. Even Southern soft irons, which have hitherto been purchased for mixture with the strong local irons are neglected. Instances, in fact, are known in which good-sized contracts have been made for special soft irons to be made by Chicago furnaces for foundrymen who had for years scouted the idea of attempting to make good castings from all Lake Superior irons. They have now changed their opinions, partly through the influence of price and partly through the better education of the whole iron trade with regard to the chemistry of iron. Chemistry alone would not have wrought the change, nor could price have done it unassisted, but both operating together have been thus potent.

Peculiar conditions have, of course, favored the Northern furnacemen. They are enjoying cheap ore and cheap fuel, or they could not have met the competition of the very low prices made by the South within the past six months. Southern furnace companies have also been handicapped of late by their striking coal miners, causing quite a number of stacks to be blown out for scarcity of fuel and carrying with it a rapid reduction in pig-iron stocks. An advance in freight rates was also a bone of contention between makers and buyers, as each wished the other to assume the risk of changes in freight schedules. All this has helped the Northern furnaceman to secure contracts nearly as freely as if Southern furnaces had no existence. From present appearances the area of consumption of the coke foundry irons made in the Northwest will grow still larger, until much of the territory north of the Ohio River is occupied.

Statistics of our imports of pig iron in the last few years have been laid before the Senate, showing that the foreign value of these imports was so high that even a lower duty than $4 a ton would afford a fair degree of protection to our pig-iron manufacturers. These statistics are, however, misleading, as are many other statistics which relate to the foreign value of imported commodities. The present duty of $6.72 per ton on pig iron has prohibited the importation of the ordinary qualities of pig iron, and has permitted the importation only of special and high-priced qualities, such as spiegeleisen, ferro-manganese, fancy brands of Scotch pig iron, and Swedish pig iron. No argument based on the value of these importations can properly be made applicable to the ordinary qualities of foreign pig iron, sold at low prices, which are not now imported, but which would certainly be imported in large quantities under a low $4 per ton duty.

Now, Mr. President, as to bar iron: Bar iron is almost entirely the product of manual labor of a particularly trying and exhausting character, and this labor is very much cheaper in European countries than in our own country. Bar iron is produced by puddling, or boiling pig iron, and by heating and rolling the resulting muck bar. These operations are all exceedingly laborious. There is no harder work than the puddling of pig iron.

Until the present wave of Democratic hard times swept over the country the pay of the American puddler was $5.50 per ton at Pittsburg and throughout the West, but now it is only $3.60 at Pittsburg and is even less at mills in the East, while in England the price of puddling has averaged below $1.75 per ton for many years, and in Belgium the price is still lower. That the price of bar iron in this country now closely approximates that of English bar iron is not denied, but the phenomenally low price at home is the result not only of lower wages than have usually prevailed, but also of lower prices of pig iron and other raw materials than have ever before been known.

There should be a higher duty on bar iron than is provided in the pending bill, because the wages which our puddlers and other rolling mill hands have been accustomed to receive should be restored, and because the present low prices of bar iron in this country are based upon an exceptionally low cost of raw materials which can not be expected to continue. When the prices of all products in our country again show a tendency to rise above the present panic figures the benefit of this advance should be given to our own people and not to foreigners.

That labor constitutes the principal element in the cost of producing a ton of bar iron was proved a few years ago in a letter addressed to Secretary Manning by the American Iron and Steel Association. The period to which these figures refer is the early part of 1882. I prefer the figures I am about to give to those which have been more recently collected, because they are from the hand of one of the most eminent, painstaking, and capable of American ironmasters, Mr. John Griffen, now deceased, but for many years the superintendent of the Phœnix Iron Works, at Phœnixville, Pa. In April, 1882, Mr. Griffen compiled for the American Iron and Steel Association from the books of the Phœnix Iron Company the following statement of the labor cost to that company of a ton of best bar iron, which cost was undoubtedly a fair average for the country at large at that time:

1. PIG IRON.

Wages earned in mining enough ore for one ton pig iron	$5.18
Wages earned in mining enough limestone for one ton pig iron	.23
Wages earned in mining enough anthracite for one ton pig iron	1.71
Wages earned in making enough coke for one ton pig iron	.28
Wages earned in transporting above ore	.56
Wages earned in transporting above limestone	.06
Wages earned in transporting above anthracite	.45
Wages earned in transporting above coke	.22
Wages earned by furnace hands in making one ton pig iron	2.75
Total wages earned in making one gross ton pig iron	11.54

2. MUCK BAR.

It requires 1.13 gross tons of pig iron to make 1 gross ton of muck bar. If there are $11.54 labor earnings in 1 ton of pig iron, in 1.13 tons of pig iron, or 1 ton of muck bar, there are $13.04. The whole labor earnings in 1 gross ton of muck bar are as follows:

Wages earned in making 1.13 tons pig iron	$13.04
Wages earned in mining coal used in puddling 1 ton muck bar	1.71
Wages earned in mining ore used in fettling 1 ton of muck bar	.90
Wages earned in transporting the above coal	.56
Wages earned in transporting the above ore	.20
Wages earned by mill hands in making 1 ton of muck bar	7.44
Total wages earned in making 1 gross ton muck bar	23.85

3. FINISHED BAR.

It requires 1.20 gross tons of muck bar to make 1 gross ton of finished bar, ready for the market. If there are $23.85 labor earnings in 1 ton of muck bar, in 1.20 tons of muck bar, or 1 ton of finished bar, there are $28.62. The whole labor earnings in 1 gross ton of finished bar are as follows:

Wages earned in making 1.20 tons muck bar	$28.62
Wages earned in mining coal used in heating 1 ton finished bar	.89
Wages earned in mining sand used to 1 ton of finished bar	.20
Wages earned in transporting above coal	.25
Wages earned by mill hands in making 1 ton finished bar	6.31
Total wages earned in making 1 gross ton of finished bar iron	36.27

4. SUMMARY.

The three preceding statements represent the successive steps in the transformation of iron ore, limestone, and fuel into bar iron. The following statement summarizes the whole operation, giving the quantities of raw materials used in making a ton of bar iron and the total earnings of the labor employed:

Wages earned in preparing 3.53 gross tons iron ore	$9.19
Wages earned in preparing eighty-eight one-hundredths gross ton limestone	.45
Wages earned in preparing 4.84 gross tons coal and coke	5.64
Wages earned in preparing ten one-hundredths gross ton sand	.20
Wages earned in transporting above materials	2.91
Wages earned at blast furnace and in mill	18.97
Total wages earned in making one gross ton of finished bar iron	36.27

The total cost of making a ton of bar iron embraces a number of other elements, including the cost of materials additional to their labor cost, freight charges above wages earned in transportation, insurance, taxes, commissions, interest, office expenses, etc. This total cost in the early part of 1882 was not given by Mr. Griffen, but it was about $50, which would make the labor cost of a ton of bar iron at the period mentioned 72 per cent of the total cost. Substantially the same proportion of labor cost to total cost in the manufacture of bar iron undoubtedly exists in our rolling mills to-day. The workingman, therefore, has the largest stake in the duty on bar iron.

Next, Mr. President, I call attention to

THE DUTY ON STRUCTURAL STEEL.

The Senate tariff bill fixes the duty on beams, girders, joists, and other forms which are usually designated as structural steel at six-tenths of 1 cent per pound. Any lower rate than this would permit the importation of large quantities of Belgian beams and other structural steel, Belgian products of this character being produced at such low cost for the labor employed that they have for many years successfully competed with like products of English rolling mills in English markets. On December 12, 1893, the export price of Belgian joists or beams was 110 francs, or $21.23 per ton.

On March 15 of the present year the price of structural steel of American manufacture delivered at New York was reported by the Iron Age as follows: Beams up to 15-inch, 1.35 cents to 1.5 cents per pound for round lots; angles, 1.25 cents to 1.35 cents; universal mill plates, 1.2 cents to 1.35 cents; tees, 1.5 cents to 1.7 cents; channels, 1.4 cents to 1.6 cents per pound. The prices of American beams above quoted are panic prices, while the Belgium price that has been quoted is the result of normal conditions in that country.

To show how very low is the cost of labor in Belgium, I quote some authentic statistics which are well worth the consideration of those Senators who advocate a lower duty on structural steel than is provided in the pending tariff measure.

In 1888 the Belgian Labor Commission published a report on the condition of the working people of Belgium, from which the following statement of the wages earned in some branches of industry was compiled a year or two ago by the London Charity Organization Review: "At the Charleroi Iron Works the daily wages were for rollers, 2*s.* 1½*d.*, and for blast-furnace workers, 1*s.* 9½*d.*, while a puddler in the same district could earn £54 16*s.* in the year. Coal miners in the employ of John Cockerill & Co., at Seraing, earn underground 2*s.* 7*d.* a day, and above ground, 2*s.* 0½*d.*; ironworkers, 2*s.*, 5½*d.*; steelworkers, 2*s.* 8½*d.*, and boilermakers, 2*s.* 6½*d.* The Bleyberg smiths and carpenters get 1*s.* 9½*d.* a day, and the founders, 2*s.* 6½*d.* At the Liège foundries the average wage of the stoker is 2*s.* 4½*d.*, and of the laborer, 2*s.* 2½*d.* Masons and joiners at Kirton earn only 1*s.* 7½*d.* to 2*s.* 4½*d.* a day; carpenters, joiners, and woodhewers at Turnhout about 2½*d.*, 3*d.*, and 3½*d.* an hour respectively."

In August, 1888, Mr. Frederick J. Slade, of Trenton N. J., who was then the treasurer of the New Jersey Steel and Iron Company, but is now deceased, published an explanation of the conditions affecting the production of beams and other structural shapes, from which the following extracts, appropriate to this discussion, are taken:

There is probably no branch of iron manufacture that requires such heavy and expensive machinery for the output of so little product as that in question. The average output of each of the mills engaged in this manufacture in the year 1887, in which year the product was larger than in any previous year, was less than 9,000 tons. This quantity is much less than the product of a steel-rail mill in a single month.

In the manufacture of rolled beams, however, the orders are for quantities seldom as much as 50 tons, to be made at a given time, usually for lots of a single carload or less. While the quantity of beams in large fireproof buildings seems considerable, the fact is that, being erected only in large cities, the total quantity of beams required for them is after all small. Moreover, the orders are not given in such a way as to enable the beams to be rolled in quantity, as in the manufacture of rails, but are given out a story at a time, each containing a great variety of sizes and lengths, requiring constant changes of rolls, and constantly interrupting the manufacture.

The variety of regular patterns is so great that a period of one or two months usually elapses from the time any one is rolled till it can be again made, and consequently it is necessary, in order to ship beams as required, to carry a large stock of all sizes, and to cut from this beams of such sizes as can not be rolled promptly. The waste in this operation is very large, and as it applies to a very large proportion of the total business, becomes an important factor in the cost.

As already stated, the machinery required for the production of these large sections is so expensive that the capital invested in proportion to the yearly product is very great. Hence it is impossible that any profit can be realized unless the beams be sold at a price considerably above that charged for such staple articles as rails or merchant bars.

Mr. President, I now come to

THE DUTY ON STEEL RAILS.

In the Senate tariff bill railway bars of iron or steel are made dutiable at seven-twentieths of 1 cent per pound, or $7.84 per ton, which is only $1.12 per ton more than the rate that is provided in the McKinley tariff for pig iron, the raw material from which rails are made. As very few iron rails are now manufactured in any country, I need only to consider the probable effect of the proposed duty of $7.84 on our steel-rail industry and on the industries dependent upon it.

Our steel-rail industry, which is the most conspicuous example of the wisdom of our protective policy, had only a tentative and experimental existence until after the adoption in the tariff act of 1870 of a duty of $28 per ton on steel rails, which duty took effect on January 1, 1871. From 1871 to 1883 the duty on steel rails was practically unchanged, and during this period of thirteen years the production of American steel rails increased from 34,152 gross tons in 1871 to 1,284,067 tons in 1882, and the price decreased from an average of $102.50 per ton in 1871 to an average of $37.75 in 1883. Since 1883 the price has fluctuated between an average of $37.08, which was the price in 1887, and $24, which is the present price.

The tariff of 1883 provided the following rates of duty on iron and steel rails: Iron or steel tee rails, weighing not over 25 pounds to the yard, nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound, or $20.16 per ton; iron or steel flat rails, punched, eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound, or $17.92 per ton; iron railway bars, weighing more than 25 pounds to the yard, seven-tenths of 1 cent per pound, or $15.68 per ton; steel railway bars and railway bars made in part of steel, weighing more than 25 pounds to the yard, $17 per ton.

The tariff of 1890 provided the following uniform rate on both iron and steel rails of all shapes and sizes: Railway bars, made of iron or steel, and railway bars made in part of steel, T rails, and punched iron or steel flat rails, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound, or $13.44 per ton. It will be seen that the tariff of 1890, which is our present tariff, greatly reduced the duties on both iron and steel rails, but particularly on steel rails, the duties on the latter being reduced from the varying rates of $20.16, $17.92, and $17 per ton to a uniform rate of $13.44 per ton. The present steel-rail duty is less than half the duty which was imposed by the tariff act of 1870.

It is now proposed to make the duty on steel rails $7.84 per ton, or less than $8, against $28 eleven years ago. Steel rails are now selling in England at £3 15*s.*, or about $18.25 per ton. But steel rails have been sold in England, delivered free on board vessels for transportation to other countries, at £3 7*s.* 6*d.*, or $16.42 per ton. Against this price as well as the present price the proposed duty of $7.84 per ton would afford wholly inadequate protection. The American Iron and Steel Association has so forcibly objected to this radical reduction that I think it well to present its views at length in the following extracts from its Bulletin:

The proposition to reduce the duty on steel rails can be justified only upon the theory that the present duty is a burden upon the railroads of the country, or upon the other theory that the duty must be lowered to encourage the importation of rails and thus afford needed revenue to the Treasury.

The first of these theories is effectually answered by the fact that the managers and stockholders of our railroads are not petitioning Congress for relief from the duty on steel rails, nor has any such petition been presented to Congress, if we are correctly advised, since 1880. If the consumers of steel rails are satisfied with the present duty, or, in other words, with the prices which they are now paying and have lately paid for steel rails, then there is no burden resting upon them in the form of a duty which Congress is called upon to remove or reduce. It is pertinent to add in this connection that the duty of $28 per ton on steel rails, incorporated in the tariff act of 1870, was imposed by Congress at the request of the railroad managers of the country.

The other theory upon which the demand for a reduction of the duty on steel rails may be made to rest, namely, that the Government needs the revenue from imported steel rails, is best answered from a purely revenue standpoint by the reflection that if the policy of restricting the home production of manufactured products and encouraging the importation of foreign products were made applicable to all the leading manufacturing industries of the country our people would soon become so impoverished through lack of employment that they would cease to make liberal purchases abroad, and the Treasury, instead of being the gainer, would be the loser, as in other periods in our history when we have had a tariff for revenue only.

We have an object-lesson to-day of the effect of lack of employment, or of employment at low wages, upon our importations of foreign goods. They are falling off, and so are the receipts of the Treasury. To assure sufficient revenue to the Government the country should be kept prosperous, and this can not be done by crippling or destroying our steel-rail industry and the industries that it helps to maintain—the production of iron ore, coal, coke, limestone, and pig iron especially, not forgetting the vast amount of traffic which it furnishes to the railroads in the transportation of these so-called raw materials; or by crippling or destroying any other leading industry of the country.

Instead of accepting either of the two indefensible theories above mentioned, or, worse still, assuming a position of reckless hostility to our steel-rail industry, Congress should recognize the great service this industry has rendered to the country during the brief period of its existence, for it is less than thirty years old. Started and sustained thus far by some of the bravest and most enterprising men the country has ever known, it has steadily increased the supply of steel rails to our railroads and just as steadily cheapened their price.

Our steel-rail manufacturers have therefore been public benefactors, and our steel-rail industry has been a public blessing. It has greatly cheapened the cost of transportation, and therefore cheapened the cost of bread and meat and other necessaries of life to every American household; it has greatly increased the foreign demand for our agricultural and other products by cheapening their cost at the seaboard; it has brought all sections of the country closer together by the cheapening of railroad construction, and has thus stimulated the investment of capital in the development of all our resources in every section of the country, and made it possible for tens of thousands of poor men to obtain homes in the Great West.

Our steel-rail industry has kept hundreds of millions of dollars at home, for circulation among our people, which would otherwise have been drained to Europe to pay for foreign rails. It has been the chief factor during the last fifteen years in building up our pig-iron industry and in developing our iron-ore industry, so that each of these industries is to-day the first in the world, as is our steel-rail industry itself.

But it is said that some steel-rail manufacturers in our country have made a great deal of money, and that therefore the steel-rail duty should be reduced so that they shall not make any more. This is an illogical reason for tariff legislation concerning steel rails. Importers of foreign goods of many descriptions have amassed riches; therefore further imports should be prohibited by act of Congress. The Vanderbilts and others have laid away something for a rainy day out of their railroad investments; therefore the Government should confiscate the railroads. The banks and insurance companies make money; therefore the banks and insurance companies should be suppressed.

Have our steel-rail manufacturers as a rule become wealthy men through the manufacture of steel rails? What are the facts? Both of the two experimental Bessemer steel works which were established in this country in 1864 and 1865, one at Wyandotte, Mich., and the other at Troy, N. Y., lost money for their projectors. The Wyandotte works were abandoned. The Troy Steel and Iron Company, which succeeded to the ownership of permanent Bessemer steel works at Troy, is now in the hands of receivers. The works of the Pennsylvania Steel Company, near Harrisburg, which were the first built in Pennsylvania to make Bessemer steel rails, are to day in the hands of receivers, and so are the works of the Maryland Steel Company at Baltimore, which were the last works built in this country to make rails.

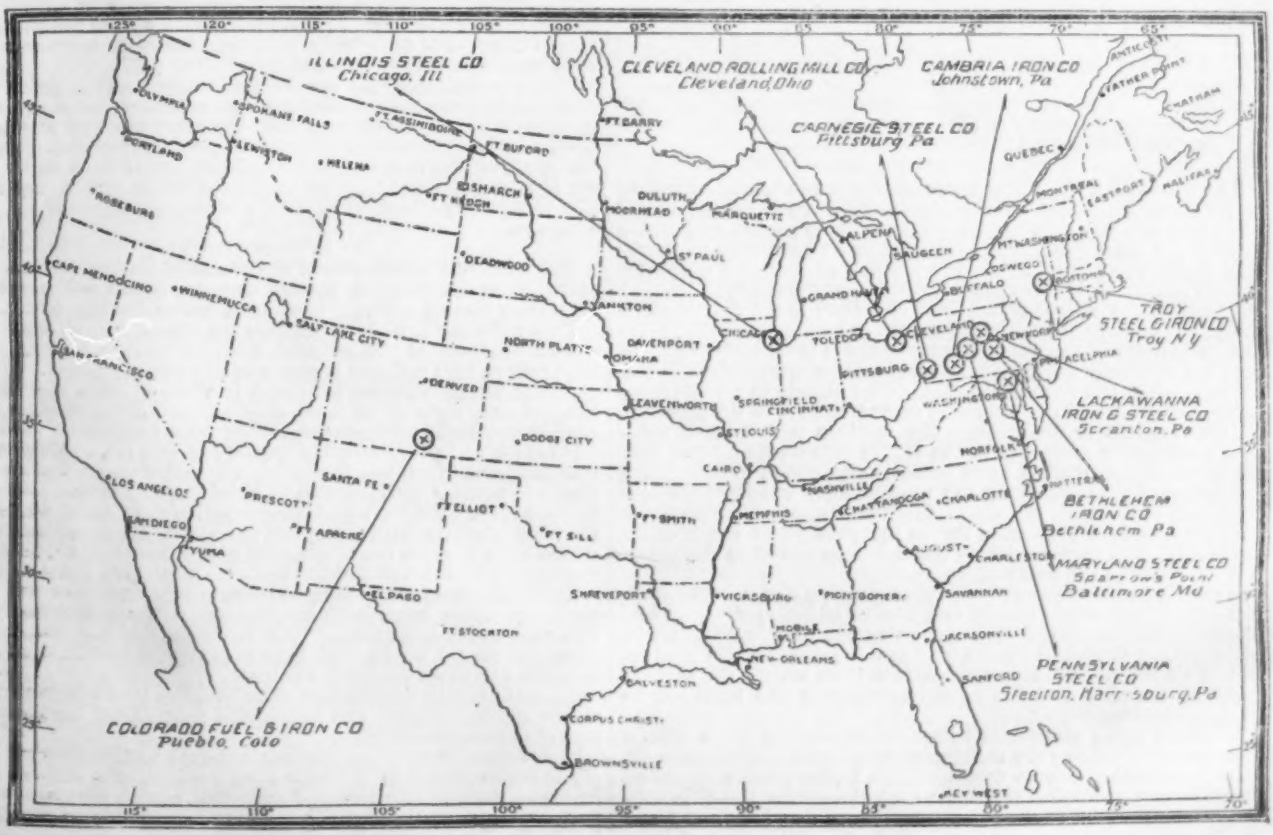
The Freedom Iron Company erected a Bessemer steel plant near Lewistown, Pa., in 1868, to make steel rails, and in 1869 the company failed and the works were afterwards wrecked. The Cambria Iron Company, of Johnstown, Pa., failed twice soon after its organization, the original stockholders losing nearly all of their large investment. The Vulcan Iron Works built a large plant at St. Louis to manufacture Bessemer steel rails, investing $2,000,000, and failed. The works have been wrecked during the past year. The Joliet Iron and Steel Company erected extensive Bessemer steel works at Joliet, Ill., to make steel rails, and failed twice. The Union Rolling Mill Company built large Bessemer steel works at Chicago to manufacture steel rails and failed disastrously.

We might add to this list by mentioning other companies now making steel rails which have either a large floating debt or a large bonded indebtedness. The steel-rail industry in this country has not, therefore, as a rule been a mine of wealth for those engaged in it. Furthermore, most of the money that is now invested in the steel-rail industry in this country was earned in other enterprises and not in making steel rails. Reduce the duty on steel rails to-day so as to encourage foreign importations and what would the investments of our steel-rail manufacturers who are still solvent be worth?

But it is contended that our steel-rail manufacturers can afford to accept a reduction in the present duty on steel rails; in other words, that a reduction will not greatly increase the imports of steel rails. We know that it will. In the Mills bill of 1888 it was proposed to make the duty on steel rails $11 per ton. This rate was objected to by our manufacturers, because, if adopted, it would surely put the steel-rail trade of the Pacific coast in the hands of foreign manufacturers, and it would greatly assist these manufacturers to gain an entrance into our Southwestern markets.

Our manufacturers could not see any good reason why they should be driven out of the Pacific coast and Southwestern markets because their foreign competitors could procure cheaper transportation by vessels sailing to San Francisco and the Gulf ports for grain or cotton. The situation has not altered since 1888. Transportation charges even to our Atlantic ports are in favor of the foreign steel-rail manufacturer, except at the single port of Baltimore. With the exception of one plant at Baltimore all our steel-rail works are located inland, and rail transportation of steel rails for even a few hundred miles is more expensive than transportation across the Atlantic.

We ask attention to the very low prices at which English steel rails have been sold free on board at English ports during the last few years. From May to August, 1886, English steel rails were regularly quoted from week to week at £3 7*s.* 6*d.*, or $16.42 per ton; and in May, June, July, and August, 1888, they were quoted at £3 12*s.* 6*d.*, or $17.63 per ton. In June of the present year they were again quoted at £3 12*s.* 6*d.*, or $17.63 per ton; and in September and October the quotation was £3 15*s.*, or $18.24 per ton. These low prices abroad may be expected in all periods of trade depression, and it is against low foreign prices, and not against high prices, that our steel rail manufacturers need protection.



A favorite line of attack upon our steel-rail industry and upon the duty which has built it up is to charge our steel-rail manufacturers with having organized and maintained a trust. Those who make this charge usually accompany it with the declaration that the trust has artificially advanced prices. They are careful, however, not to make specific declarations concerning this alleged artificial advance in prices. General charges suit them better. We have looked in vain for any free-trade Congressman or free-trade newspaper writer to quote our table of the prices of domestic steel rails from the year when they were first made in this country down to the present time. Here is the table. It gives the average annual prices of Bessemer steel rails at mills in Pennsylvania from 1867 to 1894:

Years.	Price.	Years.	Price.	Years.	Price.	Years.	Price.
1867	$166.00	1874	$94.25	1881	$61.13	1888	$29.83
1868	158.50	1875	68.75	1882	48.50	1889	29.25
1869	132.25	1876	59.25	1883	37.75	1890	31.75
1870	106.75	1877	45.50	1884	30.75	1891	29.92
1871	102.50	1878	42.25	1885	28.50	1892	30.00
1872	112.00	1879	48.25	1886	34.50	1893	28.12
1873	120.50	1880	67.50	1887	37.08	1894	24.00

We again state explicitly that there never has been in this country a combination, or trust, or pool of steel-rail manufacturers which was organized to advance the price of steel rails. There is no such combination, or pool, or trust to-day. There has existed since August, 1887, however, an organization known as the Rail Makers' Association, the avowed object of which is to equitably allot among the steel-rail manufacturers the tonnage of steel rails annually required by the railroad companies. There is nothing wrong in this object. It can be successfully defended upon moral as well as upon legal grounds. That the above-mentioned purpose of the Rail Makers' Association has not included an arbitrary advance in steel-rail prices is proved by the fact that the prices of steel rails fell very sharply immediately after the organization was formed in August, 1887. In that month the price of steel rails at Pennsylvania mills was $37 per ton; in September it was $36; in October, $34 25; in November, $32.50; in December, $32.

In 1888 the price gradually fell to $30 in June and to $28 in December. During the first six months of 1889 the price was $27.50. In July of that year there was an advance in the price, consequent upon a general revival of the country's prosperity following a period of depression, and this advance continued until the beginning of 1890, when the price again took a downward turn, which has ever since continued until to-day, as already stated, it is $24. During all the years from 1887 to 1894 the Railmakers' Association was in active existence. With what semblance of truth, therefore, can it be said that it has been a trust for the purpose of arbitrarily advancing prices, or even for the purpose of preventing them from falling?

There are ten Bessemer steel-rail companies in this country, which are prepared to make steel rails of standard sections in large quantities if there were an active demand for them. These mills are located at the following places: Troy, N. Y.; Bethlehem, Scranton, Steelton, Johnstown, and Pittsburg, Pa.; Sparrow's Point, Md.; Cleveland, Ohio; Chicago, Ill.; and Pueblo, Colo.

A reference to the map, herewith submitted, will show that the works at Troy, Bethlehem, Scranton, Steelton, and Sparrows Point, all being located near to the Atlantic coast, are particularly exposed to foreign competition.

If it is desired that these five works shall be driven out of the business of making steel rails except under such panic conditions as prevail to-day, then the proposed duty of $7.84 per ton will most effectually accomplish that purpose. The other five works, being located in the interior, would continue the struggle for existence if the proposed new duty were incorporated in our tariff legislation, but even they would be handicapped by foreign competition, which would certainly capture the trade of the Pacific coast ports and what is known as the Texas or Southwestern trade. A few years ago the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company purchased 10,000 tons of steel rails abroad. All its lines are located west of the Mississippi River.

The fact is not so generally recognized as it should be, that freight rates to all points on the Atlantic coast, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Pacific coast favor the foreigner. It costs from $1.50 to $2 per ton to carry steel rails from British ports to North Atlantic ports in the United States; from $2 to $3 per ton to Gulf ports; and usually $3 per ton to San Francisco. The freight rates on American steel rails to North Atlantic ports are at least as high as those mentioned from British ports; to Gulf ports they range from $3 to $4 per ton; and to San Francisco from $9 to $11 per ton. A comparison of these figures will show that our steel-rail manufacturers can not reach the leading points of rail distribution in their own country as cheaply as their British competitors.

Ocean transportation, therefore, not only yields no measure of protection to our steel-rail manufacturers, but reduces such protection as they derive from a duty on foreign rails. A tabulated statement of the results which may be expected if the proposed duty of $7.84 per ton on steel rails is adopted will be sufficient, I hope, to cause those who advocate this rate to assent to a higher rate. I use present prices at home and in England, although English prices, as has been shown, have often been lower than they are to-day, while the present home price is possible only through abnormally low prices for raw materials and labor, which ought not to continue:

GULF PORTS.

English price	$18.25	American price	$24.00
Freight	3.00	Freight	4.00
Proposed duty	7.84	Total cost	28.00
Total cost	29.09

PACIFIC PORTS.

English price	$18.25	American price	$24.00
Freight	3.00	Freight	9.00
Proposed duty	7.84	Total cost	33.00
Total cost	29.09

Now, Mr. President, I invite attention to

THE DUTY ON TIN PLATE.

The Senate and the House tariff bills agree in imposing a duty of 1.2 cents per pound on tin plate. The present duty, which has given our tin-plate industry a magnificent start, imposes a duty of 2.2 cents per pound. The proposed reduction is therefore 1 cent per pound, or over $1 per box of ordinary tin plate.

This reduction is cruel and altogether unnecessary. Needed revenue to the extent of millions of dollars is not only thrown away, but an industry which promises to be a great boon to our people in coming years if left undisturbed is to be seriously crippled if not wholly destroyed, as was the case once before in our history, when the duty on tin plate failed utterly to protect from foreign competition our domestic manufacturers of tin plate.

I am at a loss to understand the motives which have actuated Senators in assenting to the House rate on tin plate. Our tin plate manufacturers have actually cheapened to consumers the prices of tin plate since the present duty was imposed, less than four years ago. All tin-plate utensils and roofing plate are now cheaper than they were before the passage of the McKinley tariff. The increased duty has not been added to the price, but has reduced the price.

If our tin-plate industry, with the stimulus of a protective duty, has accomplished this result, and has in addition directly employed many thousands of our countrymen and indirectly employed many thousand others who are engaged in the production of all the so-called raw materials from which tin plate is made, why should not the encouragement it has received be longer continued?

I submit some statistical information, derived from official sources, which shows the wonderful progress of our tin-plate industry under the present tariff. First, I give a table compiled from the reports of Col. Ira Ayer, special agent of the Treasury Department, which shows the production of tin plates and terne plates during the two and one-half years which elapsed from July 1, 1891, to December 31, 1893, the quantity made from American black plates and from imported black plates being given in parallel columns:

Production of tin plates and terne plates, by quarters, from 1891 to 1893.

Total for 30 months	77,997,973	90,364,669	167,962,642	46.20	53.80

There are now in the United States 56 completed tin-plate works and 3 partly completed works. Of the whole number, 1 is in Massachusetts, 8 are in New York, 3 are in New Jersey, 25 are in Pennsylvania, 3 are in Maryland, 8 are in Ohio, 4 are in Indiana, 5 are in Illinois, 1 is in Michigan, and 1 is in Missouri. Of the amount of capital invested in our tinplate industry there are no official statistics at hand, but it is certainly not less than $10,000,000. I hope that it may yet be possible to afford to this really infant industry the continued protection it deserves.

Next, Mr. President, I deal with the item of COTTON TIES.

In the Senate bill it is provided that "cotton ties of iron or steel cut to lengths, punched or not punched, with or without buckles, for baling cotton," shall be free of all duty. Cotton ties are a highly finished form of hoop iron or steel upon which additional labor has been expended to make them fit for use. In the tariff bill which is now under consideration hoop iron which has not been made into cotton ties is made dutiable at 30 per cent.

As hoop iron is largely used by Northern manufacturers and mechanics, it will be plainly seen that in making cotton ties free of duty a discrimination has been made in favor of Southern cotton planters, while like consideration has been denied to Northern consumers of hoop iron. Apart from this exhibition of a sectional spirit, which should have no place in tariff legislation, it is an absurdity to make a highly-finished product like cotton ties free of duty while imposing duties on the raw materials from which they are made.

There is absolutely no excuse for putting cotton ties in the free list, because since their home manufacture was adequately protected by the tariff act of 1890 the price at which they have been sold to Southern planters has steadily declined. Before the panic of 1893 they were sold at lower prices than before the act of 1890 was passed. The present duty on cotton ties has, therefore, been a boon to Southern producers of cotton and not a burden.

THE DUTY ON NICKEL.

The tariff bill which passed the House of Representatives put nickel upon the free list, though no other of the ordinary metals was so treated. There is no good reason for that course.

Under the tariff of 1870 the duty on nickel was 30 cents per pound, the tariff of 1883 reduced this to 15 cents per pound, and the tariff of 1890 reduced it again to 10 cents per pound.

As the European price of nickel is about 40 cents per pound, the existing duty of 10 cents equals 25 per cent, which is less than that which is set on many other metals and metal wares.

No interest in this country appears to call for a reduction of the duty on nickel, but the European nickel-makers of course desire it to enter here free. The chief urgency seems, however, to come from Canada, which now supplies the United States, in the form of matte, with almost all the nickel consumed here, and which aims to seize the business of nickel refining, or, in other words, the business of making metallic nickel from matte.

By saving most of the freight of $6 to $7 per ton now paid for carrying matte from Sudbury, Canada, to the nickel works of this country, Canada hopes, with nickel on the free list, to destroy our nickel works, and thus to grasp for herself what she conceives to be an important industry.

Several Canadian cities now offer bounties in the form of valuable lands free of cost, and exemption from taxes, for the erection of nickel works.

The argument that raw materials should be free does not apply to nickel, for it is the advanced product of a difficult and costly manufacture. The raw material, nickel ore, is already duty free, and nickel matte, a product comparable to pig iron, is also free by existing law.

This country now has at least three nickel works producing metallic nickel, and is besides well supplied by European nickel works, which sell their product here at prices considerably below those they obtain at home, plus our duty, to say nothing of freight, interest, insurance, and commission. It is therefore not a question of sustaining a monopoly in this country.

The total quantity of nickel—that is to say, nickel in the metallic form—consumed annually in the United States is under normal conditions about 600,000 pounds to 800,000 pounds annually, of which nearly two-thirds has been imported. Last year the consumption was considerably lighter, and this year it has so far been still lighter.

The duty upon nickel should remain at the moderate existing rate of 10 cents per pound, while nickel ore and nickel matte should remain as now, duty free. The Senate bill fixes the duty on nickel at 6 cents per pound.

REDUCTIONS IN THE METAL SCHEDULE.

I append a table showing how great have been the reductions which have been made in the metal schedule of the Senate tariff bill as compared with the existing McKinley rates, the percentage of the proposed decrease in each instance being also given. For the sake of uniformity I give all rates by the ton:

Articles.	McKinley rates.	Jones rates.	Percentage of decrease.
Iron ore	$0.75	$0.40	47
Pig iron	6.72	4.00	40
Round iron in coils or rods	24.64	17.92	32
Bar iron, common	17.92	13.44	25
Charcoal bars, blooms, etc	22.00	12.00	45
Structural shapes	20.16	13.44	33
Forgings of iron or steel	51.52	33.60	35
Cotton ties	25.88	Free.	100
Railway bars of iron or steel	13.44	7.84	42
Tin plates	49.28	26.88	45
Sheet iron or steel, polished, planished, or glanced	56.00	39.20	30
Steel ingots, slabs, billets, etc., valued at 1 cent per pound or less	8.96	6.72	25
Wire rods, ordinary	13.44	8.96	33
Axles	44.80	33.60	25
Cast-iron vessels, plates, etc	26.88	17.92	33
Castings of malleable iron	39.20	20.16	49
Cast hollow ware	67.30	44.80	33
Wheels for railway purposes	56.00	28.00	50
Nickel	224.00	134.40	40

It will be seen that the cuts made by the Senate bill in the metal schedule are very great. Under the proposed new rates there would, under any circumstances, be increased importations of every article mentioned in the table, while the menace of still larger importations would unquestionably keep the prices of these articles in our own country substantially where they now are, which would be unjust to both capital and labor.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPILATION OF MESSAGES, ETC.

Mr. GORMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives for printing copies of the compilation of all the annual, special, and veto messages, proclamations, and inaugural addresses of the Presidents of the United States from 1789 to 1894, inclusive, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 6,000 copies of the complete compilation of all the annual, special, and veto messages, proclamations, and inaugural addresses of the Presidents of the United States from 1789 to 1894, inclusive; 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House. The work shall be prepared under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE NEAR SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 7734, which came from the House of Representatives yesterday, as a precisely similar bill has been agreed to by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate. It is a bridge bill, which will lead to no debate, and it is purely local in its character.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7734) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa," approved March 2, 1889, as amended by acts of April 30, 1890, February 7, 1893, and March 24, 1894.

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire to say that precisely the same bill has been introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Commerce, and that committee has made a favorable report upon it, so that there is no reason why the bill should not be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT JUPITER MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 653) to open certain parts of the Fort Jupiter military reservation, in the State of Florida, to entry under the homestead laws. I will state that the bill has been heretofore read and partially considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PASCO. This is a local bill, and there have been some differences between myself and my colleague [Mr. CALL] with reference to the shape of it. I now propose two amendments, which, if adopted, will make the bill acceptable to my colleague, and then I shall ask for its passage. I send the amendments to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). The first amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 4, after the word "patented," it is proposed to insert "or disposed of;" so as to read:

That all the lands within the Fort Jupiter military reservation, in the State of Florida, not heretofore patented or disposed of by the United States under existing laws, excepting lot 1 of section 31, in township 40 south, of range 43 east, now reserved for light-house purposes, and excepting the portions thereof reserved by an order of the President for life-saving purposes, described as lots 4 and 5 of section 5, in township 41 south, of range 43 east, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "if" in section 1, line 10, down to and including the word "alleged," in line 15, as follows:

And also excepting the portions thereof which have been claimed by the State of Florida as swamp lands, but which have not been patented, provided that upon examination it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Land Department that the same are of the character alleged.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARYLAND AND WASHINGTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TURPIE. I object.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is simply to extend the time——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana objects to the present consideration of the bill, and it will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 100) to reimburse certain persons who expended moneys and furnished services and supplies in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities within the territorial limits of the present State of Nevada.

Before the bill is read, I wish to state that a bill for this purpose passed the Senate some three or four times, but failed in the House of Representatives. The Committee on Claims of the Senate have concluded that they would not recommend the appropriation, as it could not probably be acted upon by the House at this session, but would refer the subject to the Treasury Department for further examination.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. From what committee does the bill come?

Mr. STEWART. The bill was reported by the Committee on Claims. It is the same as a bill which has already often passed the Senate, but now we propose to refer the question to the Treasury Department for further examination.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the claims of persons whose property was taken, or who rendered services, furnished money or supplies to the volunteer forces under the command of Col. John C. Hays, coöperating with the United States Army, or serving under the command of Maj. William Ormsby during the insurrection of the Piute Indians in 1860, within the territorial limits of the present State of Nevada, and which claims have been favorably reported by the board of examiners of the State of Nevada, are hereby referred to the Treasury Department for examination, adjustment, and report. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall examine and adjust all such claims upon any of the reports, depositions, affidavits, and documentary evidence at any time presented to the State board of examiners of Nevada, together with the decisions of said board, and upon such other and additional evidence as the said Secretary shall procure, or such as may be furnished by the claimants in said cases, and he shall report the amount so found to be due to each claimant to Congress for action thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

JOSEPHINE FOOTE FAIRFAX.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1539) granting a pension to Josephine Foote Fairfax.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Josephine Foote Fairfax, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Donald MacNeill Fairfax, of the United States Navy, a pension at the rate of $100 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. PUGH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 108, in relation to the times and places for holding the Federal courts in the State of Nebraska. It is a local bill, and is short.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 108) to fix the times and places for holding the Federal courts in the State and district of Nebraska.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in section 1, line 10, before the word "Monday," to strike out "third" and insert "first;" and in the same line, before the words "in each year," to strike out "September" and insert "October;" so as to read:

At the city of Lincoln, on the third Monday in January and the first Monday in October in each year.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary whether the date proposed by the amendment is in accord with the wish of the judge of that district. I lodged with the committee a letter from the judge, but I have forgotten whether the first Monday in October is the date suggested in his letter.

Mr. PUGH. I am unable to give that information to the Senator from Nebraska. I understood that the amendment had been agreed to by the Senators from Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have no objection to the amendment if that is the date which Judge Dundy prefers.

Mr. ALLEN. It is my recollection that it is the date which Judge Dundy wishes to have fixed. I was informed that this date was satisfactory both to my colleague in the Senate and my colleague in the other House, Mr. BRYAN.

Mr. MANDERSON. The date is satisfactory to me. All I desire to know is whether it is the date suggested by the judge of that district, Judge Dundy.

Mr. ALLEN. I think it is the date suggested by Judge Dundy.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then I have no possible objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment in line 8, after the word "volunteers," to insert:

And insert thereon "absent without leave from August 6, 1862, to the end of his term of service."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States Army the charge of desertion now standing on said rolls and records against John Friedlin, late a member of Company F, First Regiment New Jersey Cavalry Volunteers, and insert thereon "absent without leave from August 6, 1862, to the end of his term of service," and that he be granted an honorable discharge.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. In line 5 I move to strike out the words, "Adjutant-General of the United States Army," and insert "Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Washington Hislop, late of the Marengo Light Guards, Indiana Legion, at a rate proportionate to the degree of disability from such gunshot wound of the forehead as may be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior to have been incurred in an engagement with the enemy during the Morgan rain.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A bill (S. 1656) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. L. Eastman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WALTER S. M'LEOD.

Mr. HALL of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6384) for the relief of Walter S. McLeod.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to adjust and audit the account of Walter S. McLeod, late farmer and special disbursing agent of the Medawakanton band of Sioux in Minnesota, and remove the suspensions in his account, by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, on account of expenditures made by him in the sum of $1,556.66, disbursed subsequent to June 30, 1887, when the money appropriated by act of Congress May 15, 1886, was no longer legally disbursable.

The Committee on Claims recommended the following amendments:

(1) In line 9 strike out the word "in" and insert in place thereof the words "not to exceed."

(2) At the end of line 13 add the following proviso, viz:

Provided, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the money was expended in purchasing goods for the said Indians and that they received the benefits thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, let us have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. HALL of Minnesota. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. KIEFER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6384) entitled "A bill for the relief of Walter S. McLeod," having duly considered the same, report back said bill to the House with the following amendments, to-wit:

(1) In line 9 strike out the word "in" and insert in place thereof the words "not to exceed."

(2) At the end of line 13 add the following proviso, viz:

Provided, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the money was expended in purchasing goods for the said Indians and that they received the benefits thereof.

And that as thus amended your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The claimant, Walter S. McLeod, was a farmer and disbursing agent for the Medewakanton Sioux of Minnesota, from November 20, 1886, to October 31, 1887, and as such disbursed a large amount of money in the purchase of lands, goods, etc., for said Indians.

A portion thereof, viz, $1,556.66 was by him so disbursed after June 30, 1887, the expiration of the fiscal year, in the purchase of lumber, etc., contracted for after that date. These purchases were made under the direction of the Acting Secretary of the Interior.

It was at that time evidently understood by both the Secretary and claimant that the appropriations for that purpose belonged to the class of "permanent or indefinite appropriations," by section 3690 of the Revised Statutes, exempted from those appropriations the unexpended balances of which were carried to the surplus fund at the close of the fiscal year.

Upon the final auditing of McLeod's account, however, the Second Comptroller of the Treasury held that the appropriation came under the class of "annual" appropriations, and the unexpended balance thereof must be carried to the surplus fund, and could not be used in the purchase of goods, etc., for said Indians after the end of the fiscal year June 30, 1887. He therefore disallowed that portion of claimant's account.

Inasmuch as McLeod actually expended this fund for the benefit of the Indians, and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in good faith, and the Government has had the benefit of the expenditure, your committee sees no good reason why the amount should not be allowed in the settlement of his accounts, and no reason whatever why he or his bondsmen (McLeod being dead) should be compelled to refund said amount.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, before unanimous consent is given, I would like to hear the report, or I would like to know if the Department of the Interior, or the Department which would have jurisdiction of the matter, has recommended the passage of this bill?

Mr. HALL of Minnesota. I have in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. You know we fell into a great cavity the other day about a bill, without having sufficient information on it.

Mr. HALL of Minnesota. I have no disposition to put the gentleman in a cavity.

Mr. KILGORE. It was simply a mistake.

Mr. HALL of Minnesota. I will ask for the reading of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KILGORE. Does he recommend the passage of this bill?

Mr. HALL of Minnesota. The Department recommends and approves it.

Mr. COOMBS. Is there any disbursement required under this bill?

Mr. HALL of Minnesota. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HALL of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OLIVER O'BRIEN.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 650) to remove charge of desertion standing against Oliver O'Brien.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to so amend the record of Oliver O'Brien as to remove the charge of desertion.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I would like to know if this bill has been considered favorably at the Friday night sessions?

Mr. COGSWELL. It has, and was passed by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it has been favorably considered by the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COGSWELL. There is an amendment which was recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COGSWELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALFRED M. BURNHAM.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5990) for the relief of Alfred M. Burnham, of Lynn, Mass.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Alfred M. Burnham, of Lynn, Mass., formerly a private in Company B, Seventh Massachusetts Regiment, and in Twenty-fifth Unattached Infantry, the sum of $300, that sum being the commutation money paid by said Burnham under the draft act while suffering from injuries incurred since his first enlistment and before the recovery which enabled him to enlist again on the 9th of December, 1864.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. LOUD. I would like to hear the report read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. STONE of Kentucky) was read as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5990) for the relief of Alfred M. Burnham, submit the following report:

It appears from the certificate of the adjutant-general of Massachusetts that said Alfred M. Burnham was mustered into the service of the United States on the 1st day of July, 1862, for six months, and mustered out on the 31st of December, 1862, by reason of the expiration of his service; from affidavits that he was injured by jumping from a train in motion in February or March, 1863; from the records of the War Department that he was drafted for three years, May 13, 1864; from affidavits, that he filed affidavits and claimed exemption, but that this was refused without examination of his person or of his affidavits, and that, being unable to serve then, he was obliged to pay the commutation fee of $300.

Your committee, in view of the foregoing statement of facts, recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, I will say in addition to that——

Mr. SAYERS. I will have to object to the consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JAMES C. BOOTH.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3512) for the relief of the legal representatives of James C. Booth.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay to the legal representatives of James C. Booth, deceased, late melter and refiner of the Mint of the United States at Philadelphia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,841.87, in full for the cost value of 1,980.12 ounces of silver bullion, of standard fineness, deposited by him with the Superintendent of the Mint at Philadelphia to make good a deficiency of that amount of bullion in the accounts of the Mint for the fiscal year 1885, the same being the number of ounces of standard silver bullion contained in three bars missing from said Mint, supposed to have been stolen while in the charge of the melter and refiner, but for which safe storage could not be provided for want of vault capacity in the Mint.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request.

Mr. SAYERS. I trust the gentleman will cause to be read the communication from the Treasury Department.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk to have read, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, a recent report from the Treasury Department in regard to the matter. I also hold in my hand a letter written in 1886, and addressed to the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. SPRINGER], who was at that time chairman of the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the communication will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF THE MINT,
Washington, D. C., June 26, 1894.

SIR: Acknowledging your reference of House bill No. 3512, with the report of the Committee on Claims, and asking to be advised as to facts shown by the records of this Department, and as to whether the passage of the bill is recommended, I have to respectfully reply as follows:

That the claim of Dr. J. C. Booth, melter and refiner of the United States Mint at Philadelphia, for $1,841.87 is based upon the payment by him of that sum, the same being the cost value of 1,980.12 standard ounces of silver stolen in the winter of 1884-1885, while technically in his custody, from the fact of his having receipted for the same; his responsibility, however, was only technical for the reason that no provision had been made by the Government for the safe custody of the silver bullion delivered to the melter and refiner, by providing necessary vault room.

It was, therefore, stored in the courtyard of the mint and thus exposed to depredation, a circumstance over which the melter and refiner had no control. When called upon, however, to make good the deficiency charged to him, it was done without any demur whatever, and the account closed on the books of the mint.

All the circumstances of the case, with the full technical bearing, were related by the Director of the Mint in the fiscal report for 1885, pages 14 and 20, and again in a detailed statement which was submitted under date of April 27, 1886, to the chairman of the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives.

The Director of the Mint, Dr. J. P. Kimball, in his report for the fiscal years 1885 and 1886, as well as in the statement furnished the Committee on Claims, urged the favorable consideration of Dr. Booth's claim for reimbursement as an act of simple justice to an efficient and venerable officer, as he had held his position for nearly forty years.

During the fiscal year of 1885, that in which this bullion was stolen, the melter and refiner, Dr. Booth, operated upon 28,936,069.91 standard ounces of silver bullion, with an apparent wastage of 3,541.93 ounces, including the stolen bars above named, while the amount allowed him for actual wastage was only 1,561.81 ounces.

In conclusion I would add, that the passage of the bill for the relief of Dr. Booth's heirs would be simply a matter of justice.

I inclose herewith, for the information of the committee, a copy of the report made to the chairman of the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, under date of April 17, 1886, by Dr. J. P. Kimball, as Director of the Mint, on this claim.

Respectfully, yours,

[Signed.] R. E. PRESTON,
Director of the Mint.

Hon. J. D. SAYERS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. CAMINETTI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4204) to amend section 2335 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2335 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2335. All affidavits required to be made under this chapter may be verified before any officer authorized to administer oaths in any State or Territory of the United States or in the District of Columbia having an official seal, and all testimony and proofs may be taken before any such officer, and when duly certified by the officer taking the same, attested by his seal of office, shall have the same force and effect as if taken before the register and receiver of the land office. In cases of contest as to the mineral or agricultural character of land the testimony and proofs may be taken under such regulations and notice as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe: Provided, That the presence of rock in place bearing gold, silver, cinnabar, petroleum, or other valuable mineral shall be regarded as presumptive evidence that the land containing the same is and always has been mineral in character: Provided further, That in investigating the character of land, with a view to ascertaining whether it is more valuable for mineral than agricultural purposes, evidence may be taken of the mineral discovered or developed adjacent to such land, proof of which shall be presumptive evidence that the land in question is mineral in character: And provided further, That wherever land is proven to be within a well-defined mineral belt, such land shall be deemed, presumed, and taken to be and to have been mineral land, unless the contrary is proven: And provided further, That the officers of the Land Department of the Government, in construing the provisions of the law relative to the acquisition of the title of the Government to its mineral lands by citizens, shall construe and apply the same with great liberality, with a view to aid the applicant in procuring said title, and that the rules and regulations prescribed by said department for its government and that of its officers in disposing of said lands shall be so formulated and administered as to assist the Government in disposing of said lands to bona fide applicants, and not so as to impede said sale or impose onerous burdens on applicants."

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Mines and Mining were read, as follows:

In line 17, after the word "place," insert "or of deposits."
In the same line strike out the word "petroleum."
In line 18, strike out the word "presumptive" and insert the words "prima facie."
In line 19, strike out the words "and always has been."
In line 25, strike out "presumptive" and insert "corroborative."
In line 26, after the word "that," insert "except in Utah."
In line 27, strike out "such land" and insert "it."
In line 28, strike out the words "presumed and taken to be, and to have been," and insert the words "prima facie evidence of the," and after the word "mineral" insert the words "character of said," and strike out all after the word "land" in line 29.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to hear the report.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I think that is a question of too great importance to be passed by unanimous consent. It is a radical change in the law, and I do not think it should be passed unless we can have an hour or so for debate. I do not know how it changes the law, but we ought to have some information on the subject.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to object?

Mr. LOUD. I do not like to object, but I would like to call the attention of the House to the importance of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I would like to have the report read.

Mr. CAMINETTI. Let the report be read.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, revising the entire business with reference to mineral lands, and I object to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

POTOMAC STEAMBOAT COMPANY.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 425) for the relief of the Potomac Steamboat Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Potomac Steamboat Company the sum of $5,000, that being the amount paid by the said Potomac Steamboat Company under a decree of the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia, affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, to the Baker Salvage Company, for services rendered to the steamer Excelsior, belonging to the said Potomac Steamboat Company, when she was sunk by the United States steam tug Fortune in Hampton Roads, Va., on the 4th day of December, 1882, said amount to be received by the said Potomac Steamboat Company in full satisfaction of all claims and demands against the United States in consequence of the said collision.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, if anyone desires an explanation, I can make a statement much more brief than the report, and I will assure gentlemen that I will cover all the points.

Mr. SAYERS. Let us have the report.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania will make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. In December, 1882, the United States naval tug Fortune ran into the Potomac steamer Excelsior in Hampton Roads, and as a result of the collision, serious injury was inflicted upon the Excelsior and she was sunk. A naval board of inquiry was instituted under direction of the admiral commanding the North Atlantic Squadron, a conclusion rendered, and a report made by the naval board to the effect that the said collision was occasioned by the neglect of the officers in command of the United States naval tug Fortune. Congress acted upon the report submitted——

Mr. McMILLIN. Who was the officer and what became of him?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is a matter wholly in the control of the naval administration. I do not know. I am simply giving the House the conclusion of the naval board organized to examine into the subject.

Mr. McMILLIN. The question of how the officer was dealt with by the Department might throw light on the question of his negligence.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state to the gentleman that the examination was made under the direction of the admiral commanding the North Atlantic Squadron; all the parties interested were called before the naval board, and, as a result of that examination, the board made a report, and I am simply giving the judgment and conclusions of the board.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Did the owners of the vessel that was injured have her insured?

Mr. BINGHAM. That I can not answer. Congress acted upon the report of the naval board, but there was one item not included in the action of Congress, being a point in litigation under admiralty proceedings in the district court of Eastern Virginia and afterwards carried to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LOUD. Vessels are not insured against injury in bays and harbors.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from California, who is familiar with the question, states vessels are not insured against injuries in harbors. Under the estimates of the damage done to the vessel, Congress appropriated nineteen thousand and some odd dollars; but one item was held in reserve, being an item in contest between the Potomac Steamship Company and the Baker Salvage Company, which raised the vessel and brought her into port.

Proceedings were had in the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Virginia, and judgment was rendered for five thousand and some hundred dollars. That judgment, in 1887, was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. A bill similar to this was introduced in Congress, but, as I am informed, has received no consideration by either House of Congress. Large interests in my own city, which I represent, are identified with this Potomac Steamboat Company, and therefore I am specially desirous for Congressional action.

The report shows every question in dispute has been settled save the one as to salvage, which was reserved, and as the judgment of the Supreme Court has affirmed the judgment of the lower court, these parties now come to Congress and ask it to give them the salvage so awarded.

Mr. McMILLIN. What court rendered the judgment? Was the judgment against the United States?

Mr. BINGHAM. The judgment could not be against the United States. It was against the Potomac Steamship Company; that company having its relief in the action of Congress under the decision rendered.

Mr. McMILLIN. And the Government has already paid the claim that was presented?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, with the reservation of the claim for salvage. It was not until 1887 that that question was determined by the Supreme Court, and Congress made an appropriation for the damages to the vessel in 1883.

Mr. SAYERS. In the appropriation of $19,000 for the payment of the damages which this vessel sustained was there a special reservation of this other item?

Mr. BINGHAM. At the time the damages were ascertained and reported by the board this item was not considered. It was a claim of the Baker Salvage Company for raising and floating the steamer and towing her to Norfolk. The committee ascertained from the record and from consultation with Mr. CHANDLER, who was then Secretary of the Navy, that this item was suspended and not acted upon.

Mr. McMILLIN. Has the gentleman a copy of the receipt that was given by the steamboat company for the $19,000 paid by the Government?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will allow the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], who has examined the case, to answer that question.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, all of this evidence was before the committee, and it showed that the money that was appropriated was for the repair of the vessel. At that time the question of salvage was in dispute. There was a question as to whether the courts would allow the salvage or not, and the money that was appropriated was merely for the repairs. The Government repaired the vessel, and the cost of doing it was about $19,000. The question of salvage was left for subsequent consideration, and was, of course, as legitimate a claim as the claim for damages.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do I understand the gentleman that the sum of $19,000 was necessary to repair this vessel and put her in good shape again?

Mr. LOUD. That was the amount that was required and the amount that was paid by the Government. Even the items were before the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM]?

Mr. McMILLIN. I would like to hold back action on this matter until to-morrow, so that I may read the report. There seem to be some questions requiring investigation.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman desire the reading of the report with reference to the payment of this salvage?

Mr. McMILLIN. I want to see the nature of the receipt given when this money was paid by the Government.

Mr. LOUD. In the last Congress, I brought up this bill, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] made at that time the same request he makes now—that he have an opportunity to examine the report. He has had two years in which to do so——

Mr. McMILLIN. Very well; I will take one day longer, making two years and one day.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will allow a statement, I will say it appears unqualifiedly in the report that the Potomac Steamboat Company had paid the Baker Salvage Company $5,390, the amount carried by the House bill. The Senate bill carries $5,090; and we are asking simply for the passage of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to read the report. Let the bill go over, and I will examine it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then I have the privilege of submitting to the gentleman the report, so that after he has examined it the bill may be called up again.

REIMBURSEMENT TO STATE OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 463) to reimburse the State of Nebraska the expenses incurred by that State in repelling a threatened invasion and raid by the Sioux in 1890 and 1891.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, through the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, to audit and pay the actual and necessary expenses incurred by and for the National Guard of the State of Nebraska, called into the service of that State by Governor Thayer in the year 1890 and 1891, to repel a threatened invasion and raid, then imminent, by the Sioux, on presentation by the governor or other proper authorities of said State, of statements of the actual and necessary expenses incurred by said State for said purpose, accompanied, so far as possible, with the proper vouchers and satisfactory proof of the correctness thereof; and that the sum of $12,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That the pay and allowances to the officers and enlisted men of said National Guard shall not exceed the pay and allowances of the Army of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska that this bill be considered now?

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to state that if the House should grant unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, I propose to offer an amendment striking out the word "pay," in line 5, page 1, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "report to Congress;" also striking out all after the word "thereof," in line 14, second page, down to and including the word "act," in line 18. If so amended, the bill will put the State of Nebraska upon the same footing with other States that have been remunerated for expenses necessarily incurred through threatened invasion by the Indians.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does the gentleman propose that those words be inserted before the House grants consent to consider the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] and I have an understanding as to the amendments.

Mr. BRYAN. I consent to the amendments which the gentleman proposes.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to amend by striking out in line 5, page 1, the word "pay," and inserting "report to Congress;" and by striking out on page 2, all after the word "thereof" in line 14, down to and including the word "act" in line 18.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] to explain the effect of his amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. The effect of the amendment will be that the Secretary of the Treasury, through the proper accounting officers of that Department, will be directed to audit and report to Congress the amount of expenditures incurred by the State of Nebraska in repelling the threatened Indian invasion in 1890 and 1891. Money was actually paid by the State of Nebraska for this purpose; and the bill with the proposed amendments will put this State upon the same footing with other States whose expenses incurred in the same manner have been reimbursed.

Mr. BRYAN. In this form the bill does not provide absolutely for payment, but simply sends the matter to the Department for audit and report.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the report show the character of the expenditures?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. It will show everything connected with the matter.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to offer an amendment to insert at the appropriate place the words, "and also audit and report as to like expenditures for the same time incurred by the State of South Dakota."

Mr. SAYERS. I raise the point of order upon that amendment that it is not germane to this bill.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not know why it is not.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in the nature of a private bill to pay a single State——

Mr. PICKLER. But it arises out of the Sioux invasion, which did not affect Nebraska alone.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules it is not in order to amend a private bill by adding another private claim.

Mr. PICKLER. This is certainly not a private bill.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman's amendment be permitted, the bill will carry two claims for two different parties.

Mr. PICKLER. It is a direction to investigate and make a report upon the matter, and I can not see why it is not in order to include another investigation into the same state of facts exactly.

Mr. SAYERS. Let that be done by a separate bill hereafter.

Mr. BRYAN. We may as well combine all of the private bills on the Calendar in one as to undertake to combine these bills.

Mr. PICKLER. On, no; it is a very different case. The same examination could be made as to South Dakota that is required by this bill in reference to Nebraska.

Mr. BRYAN. If the gentleman is interested in the payment of his claim he should bring in a separate bill to provide that the same action be taken with South Dakota.

The SPEAKER. The Digest states, in connection with the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas:

It is also out of order to ingraft upon a bill for the relief of one individual a provision for the relief of another.

Mr. PICKLER. But this is for the relief of one Commonwealth.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that—a State.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; and to obtain the same information. I simply ask to have the same examination applied to another State that this bill proposes in reference to Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. But would not the principle of this decision, that the Chair has just referred to, cover that:

It is out of order to ingraft upon a bill for the relief of one individual—

Or you may say State—

a provision for the relief of another.

Mr. PICKLER. It does not seem to me that this can be construed as a private bill. It is a public matter.

The SPEAKER. It is true that usually bills for the relief of States have been regarded as public, but the same principle, the Chair thinks, would apply. The reason, the Chair supposes, is that the amendment could not have the same committee consideration that it would have if reported from the committee, and probably that is one of the reasons that the rule was drawn in that way. The Chair is inclined to think that this is not in order.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope the gentleman from Texas will withdraw the objection and let the examination be made in this case also.

Mr. SAYERS. I can not.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time was passed.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to amend the title of the bill by striking out the word "reimburse," in the title and insert in place of that word the words "audit for."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BRYAN, a motion to reconsider the last votes was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS, COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to consider the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, for the remainder of this session, two additional assistant clerks for the Committee on Enrolled Bills, said clerks to be paid by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, out of the contingent fund of the House, such compensation per diem as may be fixed by the Committee on Accounts of the House.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PEARSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness, was granted to Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi.

WATER MAIN ASSESSMENTS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the House bill, No. 6893, to regulate water main assessments in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to said bill and agree to the same with the following amendments: In line 12, after the word "made," insert the words "and the installments paid as they become due and payable, and the taxpayer is not in default or in arrears in any manner;" and add at the end of the bill the following words: "Nor for relieving any taxpayer who is in arrears for water main assessments."

JOHN T. HEARD,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
A. C. HARMER,
Managers on the part of the House.
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
JOHN MARTIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The House passed the bill (H. R. 6893) to regulate water main assessments in the District of Columbia, providing that assessments for water mains should be at the rate of $1.25 per linear foot against lots or land abutting upon the streets, etc., in which the main was laid.

The bill provided that in all cases pending where assessments have been made, and where there has not been paid a sum equal to $1.25 per linear foot then only so much shall be collected as will make the whole sum paid equal to $1.25 per linear foot.

The latter provision the Senate struck out of the bill by an amendment. The House disagreed to the amendment. The conferees recommend that the Senate recede from its amendment and agree to same with an amendment, the effect of which is to provide that where assessments have been made, and where there has not been paid a sum equal to $1.25 per linear foot, then only so much shall be collected as will make the whole sum paid equal to $1.25 per linear foot, only in cases where the assessments have been made and the installments paid as they became due and payable, and the taxpayer is not in default or in arrears in any manner for water-main assessments.

Mr. HEARD. I ask a vote upon the adoption of the report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEARD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Company to change its motive power for the propulsion of the cars of said company; and

A bill (H. R. 6373) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 7335) to grant to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1209) to regulate enlistments in the Army of the United States.

PRINTING OF A REPORT.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee submits a privileged report from the Committee on Printing, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 6,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations numbered 227, with the additional views of members of the committee and the testimony; 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee have considered House concurrent resolution to print 6,000 extra copies of Senate Report on Foreign Relations, No. 227, with additional views of members, etc., and direct me to report same with recommendation that it do pass.

The estimated cost of same is $4,495.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The corresponding House resolution on the same subject was ordered to lie on the table.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

The committees were called for reports.

PUBLIC BUILDING, GRAND HAVEN, MICH.

Mr. BRETZ, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a bill (H. R. 3608) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Grand Haven, in the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

MINNESOTA RIVER AND THE RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7591) making appropriation for survey of the Minnesota River and the Red River of the North and tributaries above Fergus Falls and Crookston, Minn., and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SUPPRESSION OF LOTTERY TRAFFIC.

Mr. BRODERICK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1620) for the suppression of lottery traffic through national and interstate commerce and the postal service subject to the jurisdiction and laws of the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COURT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. WOLVERTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. 3648) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. This bill will be referred to the Union Calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I think that bill should go to the House Calendar. It involves no appropriation at all.

The SPEAKER. It establishes a court.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is simply an amendment to the bill establishing the court. There is no expense at all connected with it.

The SPEAKER. Does it not provide for the awarding of property?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It provides for awards in cases of settlement, but the parties who settle will have to pay just as they do under existing law.

The SPEAKER. This does not disclose on its face how it changes existing law.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The existing law is that persons having patents on what are known as Mexican land-grant claims, on surveyed lands, can obtain title, and when the confirmation is made, if it is made under the Mexican land grant, that the confirmation is for so much land as the title shall be found to cover, excepting any part of such land as shall have been disposed of by the United States, and not to affect any conflicting private interests. The effect of the confirmation is to release all claim of title by the United States.

The existing law applies to surveyed lands. This bill provides that the same rule shall apply on unsurveyed lands, and the effect of it is that settlers on unsurveyed lands are placed in exactly the same attitude as settlers on surveyed lands under the existing law.

The SPEAKER. The bill will go to the House Calendar, subject to review later.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Subject to change of course, if it is found necessary under the rule.

WRITS OF HABEAS CORPUS, UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. TERRY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. 6411) in relation to the issuance of writs of habeas corpus by Federal courts or judges thereof; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and referred to the House Calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS PERDIDO RIVER.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported a bill (H. R. 7827) to authorize a bridge across the Perdido River between the States of Florida and Alabama; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and referred to the House Calendar.

NAVAL MILITIA.

Mr. TYLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (S. 1399) to promote the efficiency of the naval militia; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TYLER. The committee reports this bill with the recommendation that it be substituted for the House bill of the same character.

The SPEAKER. That is in effect simply a favorable report on the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that two hours of the time be given to the Committee on Claims, in which they may call up bills in the order designated by them. I hope the House will indulge me simply to say that having been in session nearly eleven months now, and having had several private bill days, the Committee on Claims have not consumed two hours of the time since the organization of this House. I hope, therefore, that the request which I make will be granted.

Mr. FITHIAN. Does this dispense with the second morning hour?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules the gentleman can move to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar after the first morning hour. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and, pending that, asks unanimous consent that when the House goes into Committee of the Whole for that purpose that two hours of the time to-day be devoted to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Claims, in the order indicated by the committee.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will confine himself to the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, and after we go into Committee of the Whole this question as to the disposition of the time can be agreed on by unanimous consent. I have a bill that was taken up and debated almost an entire day when we had private bill day, and I want to dispose of that. After that is disposed of, I think we can make an arrangement as to the time that will suit the gentleman.

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will not confine us to that basis. He will himself bear testimony that his committee has had eight-tenths of the time.

Mr. LOUD. Nine-tenths.

Mr. BUNN. I only ask for this, sir, at the suggestion of the friends of the bill he suggested; and I want to say to him, that I hope he will not, and I request he will not, make the point against us. We have yielded to him time and again.

Mr. ENLOE. I will state to the gentleman from North Carolina that we can take up this bill in the committee and dispose of it and then go to the consideration of bills from his committee.

Mr. BUNN. But the gentleman knows in Committee of the Whole we can not make any such arrangement.

Mr. ENLOE. You can, by unanimous consent, take up any bill on the Calendar.

Mr. BUNN. No, sir.

Mr. RITCHIE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know, if that motion prevails, whether or not, after the expiration of two hours, bills will be called in their regular order on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. They will be called in their regular order for consideration.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I did not understand the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I shall object.

Mr. BUNN. Then I withdraw the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ENLOE. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider business on the Private Calendar.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The second morning hour begins at five minutes past 1 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

STEAMER GOLDSWORTHY.

Mr. MEYER (when the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries was called). I call up for consideration the bill (S. 1426) to provide a register for the steamer Goldsworthy.

The SPEAKER. This must be called up by the committee. The gentleman from Louisiana is not on the committee.

Mr. FITHIAN. I call it up, and yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the bill, and yields to the gentleman from Louisiana.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamer Goldsworthy, purchased and owned by the New Orleans, Belize Royal Mail and Central American Steamship Company, Limited, and repaired in American ports, to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause the inspection of said vessel, her steam boilers, steam pipes, and their appurtenances, and cause to be granted the usual certificate issued to steam vessels of the merchant marine, without reference to the fact that said steam boilers, steam pipes, and appurtenances were not constructed pursuant to the laws of the United States and were not constructed of iron stamped pursuant to said laws; and the tests in the inspection of said boilers, steam pipes, and appurtenances shall be the same in all respects, as to strength and safety, as are required in the inspection of boilers constructed in the United States for marine purposes.

Mr. MEYER. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BERRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1426) granting an American register to the steamer Goldsworthy, of New Orleans, La., report back the bill and recommend its passage.

All the requirements of law relating to this case have been complied with, except the steamer was wrecked outside instead of inside the waters of the United States. But for this fact, a register could be granted by the Secretary of the Treasury under the general law. The present bill simply removes this technical difficulty.

As the Senate report states all the facts, it is appended hereto and made a part of this report:

"SENATE REPORT.

"On August 6, 1893, the British steamer Goldsworthy was wrecked off the coast of Belize, Honduras. As thus wrecked she was bought by a citizen of the United States, who sent a wrecking party to the scene of the disaster. By this party the vessel was raised and taken to Belize, where the agent of the Lloyds recommended that she be towed to New Orleans for the purpose of being docked and repaired. Arriving at New Orleans, she was docked and repaired, the cost being $2,144.11. The sum of these repairs exceeds by three-fourths the value of the vessel when repaired.

"Considering that these facts bring the vessel within the spirit if not the letter of section 4136 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, your committee report the bill admitting the vessel to American registry favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass."

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Louisiana will make some explanation of the bill outside of that which is given in the report. The report does not state that the repairs came within the limit.

Mr. LOUD. The report states that the repairs came up to that.

Mr. REED. Some portion of the repairs came to that.

Mr. MEYER. The vessel was purchased as a wreck for the sum of $804, and was repaired at a total cost of $2,194.11, as shown by the evidence sent to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries from the Treasury Department.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How much is she worth?

Mr. MEYER. She is worth about $3,000. She has a register tonnage of 40.63. She is 117 feet long, 13 feet beam, and 7 feet depth of hold; and her appraised value is $2,500. Of course, it is understood that the only reason why the Treasury Department is not able to give a register independent of the action of Congress is because she was wrecked a little way from the waters of the United States.

Mr. LOUD. I understand the gentleman to say that she has a registered tonnage of 40, and that she is 116 or 117 feet long. If so, she should certainly have a greater tonnage than that.

Mr. MEYER. That is the statement.

Mr. LOUD. It can not well be so.

Mr. MEYER. She is a very small boat, used in the fruit trade.

Mr. LOUD. That measurement would show that she is over 40 tons. She ought to measure about 160 or 170 tons.

Mr. MEYER. The estimated cost does not include the cost of raising the wreck and towage from place of wreck to Belize and from Belize to New Orleans.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why do they want to register her?

Mr. MEYER. It offers some advantages to them. I do not know particularly. It is a very small boat and is used in the fruit trade.

Mr. LOUD. She is not used as a pleasure yacht?

Mr. COOMBS. She is very shallow.

Mr. MEYER. She is used in the fruit trade at New Orleans.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MEYER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SECTION 4136 REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up, on behalf of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the bill (H. R. 7045) to amend section 4136 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4136 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read:

"SEC. 4136. The Commissioner of Navigation may issue a register or enrollment for any vessel built in a foreign country, whenever such vessel shall be wrecked and shall be purchased and repaired in the United States by a citizen of the United States, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the repairs put upon such vessel are equal to three-fourths of the cost of the vessel when so repaired."

Mr. BINGHAM. What is the report on that bill?

Mr. FITHIAN. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the report does not set out very fully the provisions of the bill. As the law now exists, a register can be granted by the Treasury Department to any vessel of foreign build which is wrecked within American waters, and on which the repairs equal three-fourths of the value of the vessel when restored. This bill proposes to change the law only in this respect: To permit the registration of a foreign-built vessel where the repairs equal three-fourths of the value, regardless of where the vessel was wrecked.

The rule has always prevailed in the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, as the gentleman knows, to recommend granting American registration by act of Congress where a vessel has been wrecked outside of American waters, and this bill simply changes the law so as to permit that to be done by the Department, thus relieving Congress from the consideration of special bills.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then, as I understand him, the gentleman states that the only change which he proposes in the existing statute is to eliminate the limitation of wreckage within American waters.

Mr. FITHIAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BINGHAM. All the other requirements of the statute remaining unchanged?

Mr. FITHIAN. Yes, sir.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITHIAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAMER S. OTERI.

Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 1852) to provide an American register for the steamer S. Oteri, and I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamer S. Oteri, owned by Salvador Oteri, a citizen of the United States, residing at New Orleans, La., and repaired in United States ports, to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause the inspection of said vessel, steam boilers, steam pipes, and their appurtenances, and cause to be granted the usual certificate issued to steam vessels of the merchant marine, without reference to the fact that said steam boilers, steam pipes, and appurtenances were not constructed pursuant to the laws of the United States, and were not constructed of iron stamped pursuant to said laws; and the tests in the inspection of said boilers, steam pipes, and appurtenances shall be the same in all respects as to strength and safety as are required in the inspection of boilers constructed in the United States for marine purposes.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report, which explains the bill, be read.

The Senate report (by Mr. FRYE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1852) to provide an American register for the steamer S. Oteri, having duly considered the same, report as follows:

The steamer S. Oteri was built in England in 1881, and has a tonnage of 542 tons net register. She has been engaged in the fruit trade between New Orleans and Honduras. She was wrecked in March, 1885, in the Gulf of Mexico, outside of American waters, when a shaft was broken and other injuries sustained, rendering her unseaworthy. She was towed into New Orleans and repaired at an expense of $9,373.85.

The steamship was again wrecked in August, 1887, in the Caribbean Sea, off the coast of Yucatan. Her machinery broke down, her cabins were swept overboard, together with nearly all her rigging, besides very serious damage being done to her hull and engines. She was again towed to New Orleans and docked in the shipyard of O. F. Valette, where she was thoroughly repaired at an aggregate cost of $22,021.75. Since this last wreck general repairs have been made aggregating $23,900.16.

A recent appraisement of the vessel, according to a valuation under oath, by the president of the board of harbormasters and other officials at the port of New Orleans, is $25,000.

The statute requires that the repairs to a wrecked vessel must equal three-fourths of the value of the vessel after having been so repaired, and that this sum must have been expended in American ports to American labor.

The evidence shows an expenditure for repairs in American ports considerably in excess of the required three-fourths of her value, but having been wrecked outside of American waters, a special act of Congress is required to give the vessel an American register. As she is owned by an American citizen and has been substantially rebuilt in the United States, it is believed by your committee that she is justly entitled to this privilege.

A bill granting an American register to this vessel was favorably reported from the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the Fifty-first Congress, but was not acted on for want of time.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a clear distinction between this bill and anything that has been passed so far. The bill seems to be an unwarrantable extension of this kind of legislation. This vessel appears to have been owned by American citizens throughout. It is not a case where a vessel was wrecked and sold and bought by American citizens and repaired. This vessel has been repaired without any contemplation whatever of an American register, and it is now proposed to admit her to such register.

I do not think her history indicates that she would be a very valuable addition to the fleet which bears the American flag, as she seems to have been a child of misfortune under all circumstances and likely to continue to be so. She is not worth to-day, apparently, the cost of her repairs.

Mr. FITHIAN. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw this bill for the present, and call up another.

SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. FITHIAN. I call up the bill (H. R. 5603) to repeal an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners," approved August 19, 1890, and I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE].

[Mr. MAGUIRE withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, I desire some time in which to oppose this bill.

Mr. FITHIAN. How much time does the gentleman require?

Mr. COOMBS. Ten minutes.

Mr. FITHIAN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by various organizations in the city of New York to oppose this bill, and no one, either sailor or labor organization, has asked me to favor it. It can not be doubted that the law under which the shipping commissioners were appointed, and their duties defined, was intended to regulate well-recognized abuses then existing, abuses which seemed impossible of remedy in any other way. It was intended as an emancipation of the sailor from the tyranny of the runner and the boarding-house keeper; to interpose a skilled Government officer between the owner or captain of a vessel, who would see that there should be fair treatment of the sailor in the place of the keeper or runner, who would sacrifice the interests of the sailor for his own personal gain. I understand that penalties applying to both parties to the agreement entered into were provided. These, if proper ones, were necessary in order to secure compliance with them.

I have not heard of any specific complaints of injustice under the law, although there may have been. If so, it would have been wiser to propose amendments to cover defects which experience may have developed.

In place of that, we are now asked to support a bill that in a few lines sweeps away every provision that makes effective twenty-five sections of the statutes of the United States, enacted after long discussion and careful consideration.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. COOMBS. Not in my ten minutes.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The gentleman is proceeding under an entire misapprehension of what the bill is. It does not interfere with the law for the appointment of shipping commissioners, nor with any of the purposes of that law, except the application of certain of its penal provisions to the coastwise trade.

Mr. COOMBS. It does interfere with the shipping commissioners act. I was present at the hearing before the committee; there were shipping merchants from New York there; they pointed out the danger that would result to shipping and to the sailors from such an enactment. At all events, it sweeps away every provision that makes the law effective.

Mr. FITHIAN. I do not think this is the bill which the gentleman has in his mind.

Mr. COOMBS. Oh, yes, it is.

Mr. FITHIAN. This bill was not considered by the committee at the time the gentleman was there.

Mr. COOMBS. I have not had an opportunity to examine it fully in relation to its effect upon the various sections of the statutes, or in relation to the coasting trade, but I am sure that the regulations are as necessary for the long voyages around the Horn on vessels bound for California as it is with reference to voyages across the Atlantic. I do not believe that a law which has received such universal sanction should be repealed without the most deliberate consideration and a full hearing of the parties best informed upon the subject.

I am willing and very anxious to coöperate in any measures that will improve the character or make more tolerable the life of the sailor, which is one of great hardship at the best, but I do not believe that either result will be promoted when we remove this safeguard now standing between the sailor and the boarding-house keeper and deprive him of the effective intervention of the commissioner. We know what a perfect system of slavery existed among the sailors at one time, subjecting them to the rapacity of the boarding-house keepers and runners, whose aim it was to demoralize them by drink and vice so that they might the more effectually be brought under their influence.

To the shipping commissioner the sailor can resort for protection; and if this protection is accompanied with the necessary restrictions and enforced by necessary penalties, penalties applied to the captain as well as to the sailor, no sailor who honestly attends to his duty will object. I have not heard that any benevolent organizations, organized especially to improve the condition of sailors, advocates this measure, and I want to hear from them.

I think a bill of this importance should not pass the House without full and free discussion—larger discussion than can be had within the portion of an hour set aside for its consideration and with so few members present. I shall therefore call upon the House to oppose its passage until it can receive the careful consideration that its importance to the sailor and the shipper demands.

Mr. BINGHAM rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MAGUIRE. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BINGHAM. All the time possible. I propose to resist this legislation.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Well, I can not yield to such a general demand as that. If the gentleman wants a specific portion of the time within my control I will be pleased to yield to him.

Mr. BINGHAM. I propose to read documents which I have here from commercial bodies not only in my own section of the country, the East, but also in that portion of the country represented by the gentleman from California. It will take at least fifteen or twenty minutes to say what I desire to say.

Mr. FITHIAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to ask whether he is laboring under the same impression as the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] was, as to the bill we are considering. This is not the bill, I understand, to which the gentleman wishes to urge his objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand that this is House bill No. 5603.

Mr. FITHIAN. That is right. But there appeared to be no opposition to this bill when it was considered in the committee, and our report is unanimous.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have the statement from the Commercial Exchange of my own city to the effect that they were not aware of this legislation until the committee had made a favorable report. Therefore they had no opportunity to be heard.

Mr. WARNER. If I may be permitted I would like to say that from the city of New York, from those who are interested in the welfare of the sailor as deeply and sincerely as any men in existence, from organizations that are looking after the welfare of the sailor, and also from the business community interested in the shipping entering and leaving that port, there has come a strong, and I may say a practically unanimous opposition to this bill.

Mr. MAGUIRE. To this particular bill?

Mr. WARNER. To this particular bill. Now, permit me to say that these people, in their memorials to me, have not so fully set out the reasons of their objection that, with my lack of the personal knowledge which my friend from Brooklyn [Mr. COOMBS] possesses, I should feel at liberty to oppose strenuously the bill at this time. But with the utmost predisposition to regard favorably any legislation pushed by a gentleman whose aims and information we know to be such as those of the gentleman from California, we feel that before those of us from New York who have been memorialized on this question can properly consent to any action on this bill, we should have the fullest possible explanation from those who advocate the measure. I hope therefore that the gentleman will take time enough to make his statements on this matter thorough and complete.

I make the suggestion, of course, knowing that in one sense it may be regarded as an obstruction, but assuring the gentleman that the interests of New York, philanthropic as well as mercantile, are disposed to look carefully, calmly, and considerately at all the grounds he may urge in behalf of the measure, and if the result is not to promote immediate action upon such a measure, a full explanation will simplify the way to the desired legislation, if it ever can be had, in the future. For that reason I suggest to the gentleman the propriety of giving as full an explanation of the measure as the time will permit.

Mr. BINGHAM. Before the gentleman from California proceeds, I desire to emphasize fully and reiterate the statement of the gentleman from New York.

The Maritime Exchange of my great commercial city use this language, resolutions having been filed by myself under the date of April 30 with the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House, submitting this statement in connection with the protest:

The shipowners were kept in ignorance of it—

That is, this proposed legislation—

until it had been favorably reported to the House.

Mr. FITHIAN. I wish to say to the gentleman that the shipowners had the same opportunity that all other people had to know exactly what bills were before the committee, and to know what bills were reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the shipowners did not know and could not know as well as the gentleman who introduced these bills what they contained.

Mr. FITHIAN. And nothing whatever was concealed from them. They had the same opportunities that are accorded to interested parties in such cases.

Mr. BINGHAM. And further than that I desire to state that the Shipowners' Association of the Pacific Coast make a protest as to the proposed legislation.

Such legislation can only be considered, I will say to the gentleman, after the fullest, fairest, and freest discussion, and this legislation is of such a character that the discussion should be given to the House in the amplest way, so that the question may be thoroughly understood before action is taken upon it.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman that there is no pretense that any protection or advantage of any kind was given to the sailor by the bill of 1890. Every section that was selected and made applicable to sailors in the coastwise trade by the bill was a provision imposing a penalty on the sailor, subjecting him to restrictions and penalties that practically make him a slave. There is nothing whatever for the benefit of the sailor embodied in that act.

A casual reading of the sections of the Revised Statutes made applicable to the sailors in the coastwise trade, by the bill of 1890, which we seek to repeal, will make it perfectly apparent that the sailor derives no benefit from any of its provisions, but is degraded and oppressed by every section.

As to the statement of the gentleman that the shipowners were not aware that this bill was being considered by the committee until the committee filed its report, I call attention to the fact that this bill was before the committee, and under consideration, for three months and a half before the report was made. It was generally and publicly known, for it was published throughout the United States, that all of these bills had been introduced and were being acted upon before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

As to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS], not one of his criticisms applies to the bill now before the House, although they do apply remotely to some other bills that are still in the hands of the committee. Those bills do not propose to do away with the shipping commissioners act, nor with the shipping commissioners, nor to limit their functions, but propose to further improve the system that was established by the law of 1884.

As to the question of giving the shipowners and their representatives an opportunity to present their objections to the bill, those who were before the committee opposing the other bills had their attention specifically called to this bill by Mr. ROBBINS and by the chairman of the committee, and they said as to this bill that they thought it, or something like it, should apply to voyages around the Horn and to long voyages between American ports. But they had nothing to say as to why this act imposing, as it does, the penal provisions and none of the privileges or advantageous provisions of the shipping commissioners act to the coastwise sailors should be continued in force.

The report of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries is full and complete upon the subject——

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Certainly.

Mr. COOMBS. Why, then, does not the bill cotnain an amendment to that law, extending some of the privileges, and why is it simply directed to removing all of the penalties, if it was not inimical to that law?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Because the drastic and enslaving provisions that apply to the employment of Americans in the industry of seamanship in foreign-going vessels ought not to be extended to American laborers in any department of domestic industry where it is not absolutely necessary that it should be extended. Those penal provisions are contrary to the principles of American liberty, contrary to humanity, and contrary to our theory of universal equality among the citizens of our common country. The law which we seek to repeal is destructive of the freedom of contract that ought to exist among the citizens of this country in all of their relations. We do not want such criminal penalties to attach to the breach of purely domestic contracts. The coastwise sailors do not need or want the advantages of the shipping commissioner's act, and they should not be subjected to its pehalties. They are entitled to the freedom of contract, which should be inseparable from American citizenship.

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman give us some of those drastic provisions and tell us just what they are?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I have given you an abstract of them.

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman read from the statutes, please?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I have before me only the act of 1890, which specifies the sections. It would be impossible to read all of those sections within the hour allotted to the committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. Are there not some twenty-five sections affected?

Mr. MAGUIRE. There are some twenty-odd sections, yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Some twenty-odd sections affected by this act, and you could not read those sections in an hour?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I could not. The digest which I have prepared, and to which I have referred, very fully shows what they are.

Mr. BINGHAM. I trust the gentleman will have that digest printed in his remarks, because the legislation will come up at a future time, probably, and the information will be useful.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have leave to extend such remarks as he may make, when he prints them in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WARNER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman that he might just as well understand that I propose to resist this legislation by every parliamentary procedure, so that if the committee have any other legislation that they are anxious to present, there is no necessity for wasting the remaining portion of this hour.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Do I understand that the gentleman proposes to filibuster against the bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. I propose to require a quorum of this House to reënact legislation that radically changes twenty-five sections of the statutes of the United States, and a proposition that is not understood by this House.

Mr. FITHIAN. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the previous question on the engrossment and passage of the bill.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WARNER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 32.

So the previous question was not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] is recognized.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the bill on the table.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FITHIAN and Mr. MAGUIRE demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 35.

Mr. FITHIAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. FITHIAN and Mr. BINGHAM.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 69.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No quorum.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, it is manifest that this bill can not be disposed of in the morning hour, and I ask that the chairman of the committee be permitted to withdraw it from consideration at this time. I will print my remarks in full in the RECORD, and ask members to consider them in the meantime, and we will call the bill up as soon as possible again.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be withdrawn.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand the gentleman when he says "as soon as possible," to refer to the next session of Congress?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I apprehend that there will be no opportunity at this session. I do not waive my right, but you understand as well as I do that it is practically impossible.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the morning hour will be considered as having expired. There are only five minutes remaining.

There was no objection.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report on the army appropriation bill.

(For conference report see Senate proceedings of July 26.)

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement of the House conferees explaining the amendments.

The statement of the House conferees was read by the Clerk, as follows:

The undersigned conferees on the part of the House on the army appropriation bill beg leave to state that the effect of the agreement reported as the result of the conference as aforesaid is as follows:

Of the Senate amendments from which the Senate recedes:

No. 16 consisted of the words "or are ordered by army or department commanders in cases of emergency," and related to mileage to officers traveling on duty without troops, for inspections or investigations.

No. 17 consisted of the striking out by the Senate of a provision in the bill which required the Secretary of War to cause to be investigated by the Inspector-General of the Army, or otherwise, and shall report to Congress at its next regular session as to the number of civilian employés of the Army, their distribution, the necessity of their employment, etc., by the Senate of the words "cause to be inspected by the Inspection Department of the Army, or otherwise."

No. 18 consisted in the striking out of the words "as to" in this same clause reported above, so that the bill now provides for the investigation desired by the House through the Inspection Department of the Army, or otherwise.

No. 20 consisted of the insertion by the Senate of the words "members of the Hospital Corps" in that provision of the bill which related to the purchase of forage for horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department, including their care and protection, and for horses of the several regiments of cavalry and batteries of light artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted.

No. 23 consisted by an insertion of the words "members of the Hospital Corps" in the provision of the bill for incidental expenditures required for the several regiments of cavalry and batteries of light artillery and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted.

No. 28 was an amendment by the Senate increasing the appropriation for expenses of the Medical Department from $160,000 to $175,000.

The amendments in which the House recedes from its disagreement are:

No. 1, the striking out of the clause concerning general-service clerks, which is inserted as No. 11 in substance.

Nos. 2 and 3 are immaterial, being the insertion of the word "such."

No. 4 consists of the words "the Adjutant-General's, the Inspector-General's," inserted in that provision of the bill which required that appointments to fill vacancies in the lowest grade in the departments of the Army shall be made from the next lowest grade in the line of the Army.

No. 5 consists of the insertion of the word "and;" and

No. 6 in the striking out of the words "and the pay," in this same part of the bill, so that the bill will now provide that appointments to fill vacancies in the lowest grade in all departments of the Army, except the Pay Department, shall be made from the next lowest grade in the line of the Army.

No. 8 consists in inserting the words "two hundred" before dollars in the provision as to additional pay for officers of the Quartermaster's Department for length of service, an omission of that amount having accidentally occurred in the printing of the bill.

No. 12 consists in inserting the words "at stations" in the provision for commutation of quarters to commissioned officers on duty without troops. That language had been used in appropriation bills heretofore, and was omitted by inadvertence when the House bill was drawn.

No. 13 consists in striking out the words "in disbursing this amount" and inserting the word "hereafter" in that part of the bill which provides for the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to any officers of the Army for mileage when traveling on duty without troops. This is done to make that provision permanent law.

No. 14 consists in striking out the word "an" and inserting the word "any" before the word "officer," in the same provision.

No. 15 consists in inserting the words "of the Army" after the word "officer," in the same provision.

No. 24 consists in the inserting of the words "the authorized number of officers' horses" in that part of the bill which provides for certain general expenditures required for the several regiments of cavalry and batteries of light artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted.

No. 26 consists in inserting the words "one hundred thousand" before the word "dollars" in that part of the bill which provided that no more than $1,000,000 of the sum appropriated by this act shall be paid out for the services of civilian employés of the Quartermaster's Department, so that $1,100,000 may be expended for that purpose.

No. 33 consists in striking out the word "twenty" and inserting the word "fifteen" before the words "thousand dollars" in the appropriation for the purchase of machine guns, improved musket caliber, of American manufacture.

No. 35 consists in striking out the words "and twenty" in the appropriation of $120,000 for the expenses of the recruiting service.

No. 36 consists in striking out the appropriation of $11,500 and inserting in lieu thereof $17,000, for expenses of the Signal Service. This is according to the estimates.

No. 37 consists of an insertion in the bill of the provision "for constructing and operating a military telegraph line between El Paso, Tex., and New Fort Bliss, Tex., 2960." These last two amendments were recommended by the Chief of the Signal Corps and by the War Department as of great necessity.

No. 38 consists in striking out the words "Adjutant-General of the Army" and inserting the words "Secretary of War" in that part of the bill which appropriates $3,640 for contingent expenses of the military information division, to be expended under the direction of the Adjutant-General of the Army.

As to such Senate amendments as the House conferees recede from with amendments, the following statement is made:

The effect of No. 7, as agreed to with an amendment, is to provide that when the office of Chief Signal Officer shall become vacant, said vacancy of the grade of brigadier-general shall not be filled, but shall cease and determine, and thereafter the commissioned officers of the Signal Corps shall consist of one colonel, who shall be the Chief Signal Officer of the Army and selected from the corps, and one lieutenant-colonel, one major, three captains (mounted), to be appointed from the corps according to seniority, and three first lieutenants (mounted), to be appointed as now provided by law, who shall each receive the pay and allowances of like grades of the Army, and the officers of the Signal Corps shall retain the commissions held by them at the date of the next vacancy in the office of the Chief Signal Officer, unless promoted in compliance with law.

The effect of No. 9, as agreed to, is to provide that hereafter no appointments shall be made to the office of assistant surgeon until the number of assistant surgeons shall be reduced below the number of 110, and thereafter the number of officers in that grade in the medical corps shall be fixed at 110. This affects a reduction of 15 in the immediate future in the number of officers in the Medical Department.

The effect of the amendment No. 10 is to provide that officers on the retired list of the Army may be detailed to colleges under the act approved November 3, 1893, upon the pay of their rank as retired officers, and that ordnance and ordnance stores may be issued to such institutions of learning as are provided for in the act approved September 26, 1888.

The effect of amendment No. 19 as amended provides that the Secretary of War is authorized to remove to such military reservation or reservations as he may select the Indian prisoners of war now confined at Mount Vernon Barracks, Alabama, and makes an appropriation of the sum of $15,000 in addition to sums herein appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the purpose of erecting buildings, the purchase of draft animals, stock, necessary farming tools, seeds, household utensils, and such other articles needed for such Indians. This amendment provides a method of distributing the Indian women and children and men who are not likely to be dangerous, now held as prisoners in Mount Vernon Barracks, in such a way as to give them an opportunity of becoming assimilated into other Indian tribes without any danger resulting therefrom.

Senate amendment 21 consisted of an addition to the proviso in the bill "that after advertisement all the supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation considered, except that purchases may be made in open market in the manner common among business men, when the aggregate amount required does not exceed $300," of these words, "but every such purchase shall be immediately reported to the Secretary of War for his approval." In the conference it was agreed to strike off the words "for his approval," because no purchases in an emergency such as was sought to be provided for in the original bill could be made if the officer making the purchase must first have the approval of the Secretary of War. If these purchases, made only in cases of emergency, are to be reported to the Secretary there is no likelihood that the provision will be abused.

No. 22 is a reduction of the amount provided for the capture of each deserter in the Senate amendment from $20 to $10.

No. 25 is an amendment which provided for the purchase of horses "for such members of the Hospital Corps in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted."

No. 27 is a Senate amendment to enable the Secretary of War to purchase land for a rifle range at Sackett's Harbor, near Madison Barracks, New York, at such sum and price as he may deem reasonable, not to exceed $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. As agreed upon in conference, it appropriates but $8,500 for this object, that being deemed sufficient to purchase as much land as is necessary for this purpose at that point.

Amendment No. 29 was as follows:

"And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, after due advertisement, to sell, under such conditions as he may prescribe, such quantity of surplus liquors, and such unserviceable medical and hospital stores, or other property, at the medical supply depots at New York, St. Louis, and San Francisco, or in the custody of the Medical Department, as the Secretary of War may deem proper, the proceeds of such sales, after deducting expenses thereof, to be paid into the United States Treasury."

As amended in conference, the words "quantity of surplus liquors, and such" was stricken out, and the words "exclusive of liquors" inserted after the word "property," so that the Secretary of War is authorized, after due advertisement, to sell, under such conditions as he may prescribe, such unserviceable medical hospital stores or other property, excluding liquors, etc.

No. 30: The Senate amendment provided for an expenditure of $10,000 for the library of the Surgeon-General's Office, which was an increase of $3,000 over the amount in the bill as it passed the House. The conference agreed upon $8,000 for that purpose, which necessitated also a change in amendment 31 from $15,000 to $13,000.

No. 32 is a provision for the Ordnance Department similar to that of No. 21, of the Quartermaster's Department.

No. 34 consisted of an amendment by the Senate in the appropriation for expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits from rendezvous to depots by striking out the word "depot" and inserting the words "military posts;" as agreed upon in the conference, the words "depots and" are inserted before the words "military posts."

In conclusion, your committee state that the total estimates for 1895 were $25,342,918.52. The amount reported by your committee was $23,568,284.68. The amount in the bill as it passed the House was $23,586,924.68, and the amount as it stands in the conference report is $23,592,884.68. This is a net reduction from the estimates of $1,750,033.84. The bill as agreed upon by the conferees carries $5,960 more than the House bill and $18,500 less than the bill as amended by the Senate.

Respectfully submitted.

JOS. H. OUTHWAITE,
O. LAPHAM,
J. A. T. HULL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield fifteen minutes, or so much time as the gentleman may see fit to use, to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I realize that it is next to impossible to defeat a conference report. There is a provision, however, contained in this bill which has never been considered by this House. There is a provision contained in this bill which the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] informs me was defeated as a separate proposition many times in this House. On December 19, 1878, Governor Throckmorton, at that time a Representative from the State of Texas, introduced as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill the following clause:

Resolved, That no Indians in Arizona or New Mexico or elsewhere outside of the Indian Territory shall be moved inside of said Territory unless authorized by Congress therein enacted.

Congress, in the Forty-fifth Congress, in 20 Statutes at Large, page 315, enacted, in a bill making provision for the support and maintenance of the various Indians, the following provision:

The President of the United States is hereby directed to prohibit the removal of any part of said tribes of Indians—

Referring to the Apaches in Arizona and New Mexico—into the Indian Territory unless the same shall be hereafter authorized by act of Congress.

The Senate tacked an amendment on this Army appropriation bill, providing that the Apaches now confined in certain prisons in the State of Alabama, and very generally known as Geronimo's band of murderers, that the Secretary of War shall be authorized to remove them to Fort Sill, in my Territory. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] offered an amendment in the Senate to strike out Fort Sill, and authorize the Secretary of War to remove these Indians to some point not prohibited by existing law. By some means unknown to me, the conferees on the part of the House have seen fit to strike out the language of the Senate, and leave the matter discretionary with the Secretary of War as to where these Indians shall be removed.

In years past, when this statute was enacted, there was no Representative upon the floor of this House from Kansas, Arkansas, Texas, or Missouri, who did not take a hand in the enactment of this prohibitory statute, prohibiting the removal of these Apaches to my Territory. Mr. Sparks, the gentleman in charge of the Indian appropriation bill in the Forty-fifth Congress, when this amendment was added and when this law was framed, stated very wisely:

This is a very grave question; one which should be considered in an independent bill, and not tacked on to an appropriation bill.

Mr. Sparks at that time, on the Indian appropriation bill, opposed the amendment to remove these Indians to the Indian Territory. He raised the point of order against it, and said that it was of so much importance that it should not be tacked on an appropriation bill. The gentleman then in the chair held that it was germane; and, as I stated before, there was not a man who was in favor of it from certain States; and if their constituents knew that the members from Arkansas, from Texas, from Missouri, or from Kansas would stand upon this floor and let the murderous Apaches be put in the Indian Territory they would be flooded with telegrams protesting against it.

The provision prohibiting sending them to the Indian Territory was introduced by Governor Throckmorton and advocated by the present Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. Mr. Haskell, from Kansas, made his fight and argument in favor of the proposition. Mr. Govan, from Arkansas, used the following language when he advocated the tacking on of that provision prohibiting the removal of these murderous Indians to the Indian Territory:

In addition to what the gentleman from Missouri has said in behalf of the civilized tribes, I protest against locating wild tribes within this Territory. These civilized tribes border immediately upon Arkansas. They have no representative upon this floor, and in their name I protest as well as in the name of the people of Arkansas, Texas, Missouri, and Kansas.

When this measure was up for consideration in the Senate, and I think that this alone should be sufficient to warrant this House to vote "no" in respect to this conference report, when it was originally brought up in this bill in the Senate, at the request of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], it was amended so that the existing law would not be changed.

Senator BLACKBURN, who was in charge of the bill in the Senate, stated that he had no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho. He said "I know that the Senator from Idaho does not want these Indians in his country, and nobody else wants them, but where shall they be turned loose?" That was a frank admission that because my Territory has no direct representative in the Senate, that we shall be used as a football, and that band of Indians, whose records are well known in every schoolhouse in the country, shall be placed upon the many feeble settlers who are now striving to eke out an existence in that new country.

I appeal to this House in fairness not to adopt this conference report. I realize that it is a hard thing and a bad thing to defeat a conference report, but there is not a man on this floor who, if he were familiar with the facts, would for one moment entertain the idea of voting for a proposition such as that to which I have called attention. Locate these Indians at Fort Sill, and if they go north they go into Kansas, if they go south they go into Texas, if they go east they go among the five tribes and into Arkansas. They are not going to stay down there.

The reason for removing them from the prisons where they now are is that they are marauding in the State of Alabama. Now, if they are marauders when confined in prison, what are they going to be when you turn them out among my settlers, scattered on tracts of a hundred and sixty acres of land.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What authority has the gentleman for saying that the reason for removing these Indians is that they are marauding. I challenge that statement.

Mr. FLYNN. Well, I do not care to inform the gentleman just now. I dislike to give away a state secret.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Ah! You may keep it, then.

Mr. FLYNN. I wish to say another thing, Mr. Speaker. This proposition has never been submitted to the Indian Office. The gentleman, I take it, in charge of the bill knows where he can get verification of my statement.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, I do not. The statement is not true, as I am informed.

Mr. FLYNN. I base my statement upon information given me by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. They can not take care of these Indians in the prisons of Alabama, and so, without the recommendation or the knowledge of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, an amendment is tacked on in the Senate to locate them down amongst the feeble and scattered settlers in my part of the country, and that, too, in defiance of an existing statute. The gentlemen in the Forty-fifth Congress representing the several States that I have mentioned, knew the condition of those people, and they specifically provided that the President should not remove any of the Apaches into the Indian Territory without the direct authority of Congress.

This House has never passed upon the proposition contained in this conference report. As I understand, it has been proposed several times and has always been defeated. This is an amendment tacked on in the Senate, where nobody was heard. The amendment of the Senate, however, as it passed was satisactory to me, but the conferees changed the Senate amendment again.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. In what respect? What is the difference between the two propositions?

Mr. FLYNN. The original report from the Senate committee provided that the Secretary of War should remove these Indians to Fort Sill in the Indian Territory. It was amended in the Senate by striking out Fort Sill in the Indian Territory, and authorizing him to remove them to some place not prohibited by existing law. Now, they are prohibited by existing law from going into my Territory, and that was all I wanted, but when the conferees met they knocked that out and framed the provision so as to leave it optional with the Secretary of War to remove these Indians to wherever he sees fit.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Where are these Indians now?

Mr. FLYNN. In prison in Alabama.

Mr. LYNCH. How many of them are there?

Mr. FLYNN. I understand there are about 260.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Are these the Indians that were known as Geronimo's band?

Mr. FLYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARSH. The Indians that killed Gen. Canby?

Mr. FLYNN. Exactly.

Mr. LYNCH. Have they any reservation where they are now?

Mr. FLYNN. No; they are in prison. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] described them correctly when he said that they were Ishmaelites; that their hands were raised against everybody and everything, and now comes in this conference report providing that they shall be sent down to Oklahoma, where the settlers already have all the hardships they can contend with in trying to break up and cultivate that new country.

Mr. MARSH. Is it proposed to turn them loose there?

Mr. FLYNN. Why, they are going to civilize them! [Laughter.] This bill carries an appropriation to buy farming implements and seeds for these Indians!

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What part of the Territory are they to be sent to—Fort Sill?

Mr. FLYNN. Fort Sill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. How far is that from Fort Reno?

Mr. FLYNN. That is about 50 miles or a little more west of Fort Reno.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That is where the Cheyennes and the Arapahoes now are, is it not?

Mr. FLYNN. It is on the adjoining reservation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And it is near where the Wichitas and other tribes are?

Mr. FLYNN. They are going to locate them in there with the Kiowas and the Comanches.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And then, just east of them are to be found the so-called Five Tribes, I understand?

Mr. FLYNN. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Does my friend know whether there is any danger in turning loose these 250 Apaches among those other Indians?

Mr. FLYNN. Within the past six months the War Department has been compelled to order out troops in my Territory for the purpose of protecting the settlers against the Cheyennes and Arapahoes that are now there.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In this connection let me ask whether these are the same Cheyennes and Arapahoes who are about Fort Reno and on that reservation, part of them having had assigned to them lands in severalty—Indians, substantially, who were there at the time that Dull Knife broke out a few years ago, about the time of this exclusion of the Indians from the Territory, and made that famous raid, leaving a track of fire and death through Kansas and Nebraska near to the Pine Ridge country?

Mr. FLYNN. They are the same tribe exactly. And notwithstanding many of our settlers are compelled to be constantly on their guard with Winchesters always loaded in their houses, it is now proposed to locate these murderous Apaches right down there in that same country.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That statement is not correct.

Mr. FLYNN. How is it incorrect? I am ready for a correction.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The statement the gentleman has just made is not correct.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Where are they going to put these Indians?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will tell you when I have the floor.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. As I understand, these men are in prison because of some crime?

Mr. FLYNN. These are the same men who inflicted their marauding and murdering for years upon everybody they met out there.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. What I want to ascertain is this: Suppose these men had not committed these crimes, where under existing law would they lawfully be?

Mr. FLYNN. If they had committed no crime they would be peaceably settled down in Arizona and New Mexico.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. They have no reservation now?

Mr. FLYNN. There are of course portions of the Apaches——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Let me say that these men were taken from the White Mountain Apache Reservation in Arizona. Geronimo and his party who went through that portion of the country for years, leaving a trail of death behind them, were finally captured after they had been chased some 2,000 miles into Mexico.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. What I want to ascertain is where these people would belong if they had not committed these crimes?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In the White Mountains of Arizona.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And they have gone from Fort Sill to those White Mountains time and again.

Mr. FLYNN. The only argument advanced for removing those Indians from where they are and putting them in my Territory is the argument of economy. Now, the life of a settler in our Territory is worth more to us, and it ought to be worth more to every member of this House, than an appropriation of $10,000, $15,000, or $25,000 for the purpose of corralling and keeping under control certain murderous Indians. If you turn them loose upon us, as proposed in this bill, there is not one of the four States I have referred to that will not come here in most earnest protest against such a measure.

I repeat that if we had a Senator to-day in the other branch of Congress this amendment would never have been proposed. The Senator from Kentucky in charge of the bill very properly said that nobody wanted these Indians; that they must be turned loose somewhere; and in looking around they found my Territory, which is not represented, as none of the other Territories are, and they said, "We will locate these Indians down in Oklahoma, because in that we can save part of the appropriation that is now expended by the War Department in feeding them."

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Mr. FLYNN resumed his seat amid applause.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, that was a very eloquent speech to which we have just listened. But it was prepared for another occasion than this. It was prepared to meet an amendment which was put on this bill in the Senate providing that the Secretary of War be authorized and directed to send all these Indians to the Fort Sill military reservation. Now, to such a proposition as that there might be some objection; in opposition to it some of the arguments submitted by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] would have some force. But he says that we got into conference and, without consulting him, changed that amendment.

Sir, the gentleman came to me and laid before me just about the same objections that he has urged here in his speech to-day. Taking his objections with me into the conference, I recommended certain amendments to that amendment of the Senate; and I also went to the Secretary of War, to whom I suggested the propriety of the amendment, stating its purposes, to all of which he assented. But before I had gone to the Secretary of War he had sent an officer of the Army to see me as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, suggesting that he ought not to be directed to send these Indians, but that he ought to have authority to keep them imprisoned in Alabama, at least those who had been guilty of atrocities and were actually criminals.

But what is the case he wished to meet and which the House and Senate conferees wished to meet? There were 260 of these Indians down there in prison. Perhaps thirty of them are those persons who were engaged in these atrocities and cruelties for which they were justly imprisoned. Sixty per cent of the whole mass of the people down there have been born while in prison. We are keeping in prison, therefore, over 200 people because of the offenses committed by their fathers. We are keeping them also at a very great and unnecessary expense. We are keeping them where they must become vicious, because they have no opportunities of cultivation or of entering into the struggle for life with those around them.

Now, this amendment does not send them to any particular place, to Oklahoma any more than anywhere else. In the first place, it is provided that the Secretary is authorized—not directed, but is authorized—not to send all of the Indians, but to send Indians; and it is the purpose only to send a portion of the Indians who are not dangerous; that is to say, the women and children. Where? Not on an Indian reservation, but to send them out amongst all of the military reservations in the United States; that is to say, that he may send one family to one military reservation, where they will be under the cognizance of the officers of the Army, and where they will be furnished some means to start in life.

Then another family will be sent to another military reservation—not an Indian reservation; and so on, scattering them around amongst the military reservations generally throughout the country, where they will be under the authority of army officers, thus distributing these persons who are at present suffering imprisonment because of the crimes committed by their fathers, out into the world, giving them an opportunity like human beings to make their own way and to establish themselves in life.

Mr. BROSIUS. Let me ask the gentleman if the whole matter o distribution is left to the discretion of the Secretary of War?

Mr. HULL. Entirely so.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Just as I have stated, the Secretary of War has discretion to distribue them amongst the military reservations.

Mr. FLYNN. Is it not a fact that the amendment you propose here repeals the act prohibiting their removal into the Indian Territory?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No; it does not repeal the act.

Mr. FLYNN. I think so. That is its effect.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But I will meet what the gentleman says as I proceed.

If the Secretary of War shall deem it wise and proper to send one or two families to a military reservation in Oklahoma, it is admissible for him to do so, and Oklahoma is certainly no more sacred than any other part of the country.

Mr. FLYNN. Not at all. I do not claim anything of the kind. But what becomes of the gentleman's statement that the Indians are sent out there because, under this amendment, there will be a saving of money? Now, if you want them, take them in Ohio; but do not force them upon us.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If there were a military reservation in Ohio I should be perfectly willing that they should be sent there, and can see no possible harm that would come of it.

Mr. FLYNN. Yes; but you have not a military reservation, and so you will drive them into Oklahoma, these murderous Indians, for the purpose of saving a few thousand dollars——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, I am not going to wait for the gentleman to talk to his Oklahoma constituents on this question.

Mr. FLYNN. I am not talking to my Oklahoma constituents. But when I talked to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I told him what I would like to have in reference to this matter, he said: "I will go and see what the Secretary of War wants."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No; I did not say that. I did not say that I would see what the Secretary of War wants, but that I would consult with the Secretary.

Mr. FLYNN. Did not I make a statement to the gentleman that the Senate bill was satisfactory to me, and asked him to leave it so; and the gentleman said he would go and see if it was satisfactory to the Secretary of War?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Oh, no; I said I would consult with him. The Secretary thought he ought to have authority to distribute them upon the military reservations.

Now, if the House thinks it proper to keep in prison a lot of women and children, who are there simply because they are the women and children of men who committed crimes many years ago, and that is the only reason they are there, then the House will vote down this conference report.

Mr. HICKS. Are the women and children in prison?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes; 60 per cent of all these persons were born in prison.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. What were they placed there for?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Oh, that has been already discussed. They were sent there because their parents were murderers, cruel, rapacious, vicious Indians, who destroyed human life on the plains without mercy or consideration.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly.

Mr. MARSH. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs how many of these Indians now living are criminals?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I can not answer that question definitely.

Mr. MARSH. About how many?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I suppose about sixty of them.

Mr. MARSH. About sixty of them are criminals?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I suppose about sixty.

Mr. MARSH. Does this amendment allow those sixty Indians to be sent into Oklahoma Territory, or any other Territory, and turned loose?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not to be turned loose, no. They are to be sent on to a military reservation, and to be placed in charge of a military officer.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman that he have the clause read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Well, I will read it myself. It is as follows:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to remove to such military reservation as he may select, not prohibited by existing law, the Indian prisoners of war now confined at Mount Vernon Barracks, Ala., and for the purposes of the erection of buildings, purchase of draft animals, stock, necessary farming tools, seeds, household utensils, and other articles needed for said Indians and generally for their support and civilization, the sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated, in addition to the sums herein appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. MARSH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio if that does not authorize the Secretary of War to turn these Indians loose and allow them to go to farming on these military reservations, and if that does not include the sixty criminals that he speaks of, who have been for many years imprisoned in Alabama?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Oh, the Secretary of War is not likely to take out of prison those that are criminals. I think it may be fairly left in that form.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That discretion conferred there seems to be broad, and would include Geronimo and the thirty others actually engaged in the difficulties?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understood the gentleman to say, however, that it was not contemplated that they should be sent West?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is not contemplated, and I want to have that expressed in this debate, so that the Secretary of War will see that this House so understands it, that it is a concurrent part of the adoption of this amendment, that it is the sentiment of this House that those men are not to be removed from prison.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Are these people, other than the thirty, actually confined in prison, or are they in what is known as prison bounds?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. They are in stockades. I think they are permitted to go out sometimes. The women and children are permitted to go out sometimes, but they are not permitted to choose their own places of residence, or to remain out over night.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the thirty real offenders, the people who, in fact, took up the tomahawk and went upon the warpath, are not to be sent back, why not take these noncombatants and send them back amongst their own people in the White Mountains?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] objects to that. He is afraid of the women, and afraid the children will grow up into warriors of bad repute.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; and gentlemen may make light of it, but the little ones are the very ones who perpetrate cruelties upon prisoners, such as cutting off the breasts of women, and their eyelids, and leaving them to die.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. How much time does the gentleman from Arizona want?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, in several different Congresses an effort has been made to remove the Apache Indians from a situation which is really but a very slight curtailment of their personal liberty, in Alabama, and to send them back where they will eventually reach their old haunts of murder and blood.

Every time this thing has come up as a separate proposition I have succeeded in defeating it in the committee. This proposition has never been started by the War Department that I ever heard of until this time. It was dictated by a false sentiment that the health of the Apaches is not as good in Alabama as in the mountains of Arizona. I want to say right here to this House that the fact that these Indians should not be moved west of the Mississippi has been demonstrated by Gen. Miles, than whom no greater Indian fighter has been known in modern times, who settled the Indian question by getting these Apaches from Arizona; who settled this Indian question by taking them away and sending them to Alabama, or rather the President did it under his advice.

Gen. Miles was before the Committeee on Indian Affairs when the Senate had passed in the last Congress a resolution similar to this. I had Gen. Miles subpœnaed to appear before that committee. He went before the committee and in the most earnest terms begged the committee never to think for a moment of removing these Indians or any of these Indians back beyond the Mississippi River. He gave instances of where escapes had been made very near to St. Louis. Indians had escaped in carrying them to Fort Sill. One of them who escaped found his way into the White Mountain Reservation, and was soon on the war path, and so far as I know is still on it.

You can not send these Apaches to any military reservations in the West without practically surrendering them. Any one of these Apaches, if he is 15 years old, can leave any one of the military reservations in the West, unless you put him behind the bars and lock him up, and will find his way to the White Mountains for himself. He is well acquainted with Mexico. To those gentlemen who so often declare the fact that the Indian is passing away in the sunlight of civilization I will suggest that from 1878 to 1879, when these Indians were placed where they are, 60 per cent of the 200 or over that are there have been born on that reservation.

If you want to cultivate the Indian, if you want to increase that population, keep him where he is; and in answer to the other suggestion made by the chairman of the committee, that there were no depredations committed by the Indians in Alabama, I would say that the wisdom on the part of this House would be shown in keeping them where they are when it is found that there is one place on which on God's green earth an Apache can stand the treatment of other people, of other colors, and other nationalities on earth, and continue to live under it. I say I congratulate the House and this country on the fact that it has found such a place for the Apaches, and that is the best place to keep them.

It is much better than this idea of sending them back. Then here is a provision of $15,000 to buy horses and plows, and to educate them. Now, if the experience of any man who knows the Apache can show me any of the Geronimo White Spring Apache Indians, of which these were a part, who has at any time put his hand for one hour to any work, I will surrender this argument now. I say that, send him where you please. You say you will send these children to the military reservations and teach them how to plow. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that my people are particularly interested in this matter.

This follows the idea of civilizing this Apache tribe of Indians. If you send these children West, the next thing you may send them to Fort Huachuca or Fort Grant, in Arizona, or the Prescott military reservation. There is nothing to prevent that, if you are to send these children where they would be near their friends. All of that could be done under the sentiment that prompted this bill, and will do it. I am justified in that assertion. I tell you they would get back, as Gen. Miles said. He told the committee he never would send one of them back west of the Missouri River.

There is no provision protecting us against sending them west of the Missouri River or anything to prevent putting Geronimo there, notwithstanding the very honest statement made by the gentleman in charge of this bill, that the Secretary would not consent to that; but under the operation of that law there is no telling how soon it might be done. Secretaries of War do not live forever. You will not be able to stop it, and they will very soon return, as Gen. Miles said, and it will ultimate in a war with these Apaches again.

There are six or eight or ten of them out now who have been marauding in Mexico and in this country, headed by one of your beautiful educated Apaches by the name of "Kid," one of those Indians who has had the advantages of education, and they have left and are still leaving the corpses of settlers hundreds of miles away from the reservations, and even going on to the reservations and killing Indians that were antagonistic to them. They are out now in the mountains of Mexico and probably in Arizona.

It has been but a short time since I saw the corpses of two boys that I knew well, who had been living down on a ranch in the southeastern part of Arizona, brought back to my town mutilated beyond recognition—boys that had done nobody any harm; hard-working boys who were trying to protect their cattle, and who had been come upon and murdered by this same band. And yet these Indians are to be sent back or the power is to be given to some human being to send them back!

I protest against it in the name of the peace of this country. I protest against it in the name of the murders that they have committed. I protest against it in the name of humanity. If this provision goes through and those Indians are scattered, my word for it, they will come together and renew their depredations. A hundred miles between them amounts to nothing, with their signal lights visible everywhere from the mountain tops. The difficulty in catching them before was that they would separate and then, by their signal fires upon the mountains, would appoint a rendezvous perhaps 200 miles south. You can not keep them from going out from the reservations at any time in a country like that, where signals can be seen at least a hundred miles with the naked eye.

Tell me that they will not go back! If they have been subjected to the horrors of which the gentleman speaks, and if they require the sympathy which is at the bottom of this proposed legislation, I suggest that that sympathy had better be exercised toward the poor white people who will certainly become the victims of these murderous Indians if you allow them to go back into that country. They will go back all the more aggrieved, according to what we have heard here——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. These men are not going back at all.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The bill does not say that. Put it in the bill that no male Indian over the age of 16 shall be taken west of the Missouri River, and, so far as I am concerned, I will consent to that, because I think that means safety to my people. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] has pleaded earnestly on this question, but not from the experience that I have had, and I can tell him that as sure as those Indians go on the military reservation they will renew their depredations and their murders.

Some of those Western military reservations are 10 miles square, with no fence, no inclosure, and with only two or three companies of soldiers. There is no means of confining these Indians to a reservation unless they are in a stockade, as you have them in Alabama; and I appeal to the chairman of the committee to say whether the women and the children of the Apaches there now are not going in and out there as freely as anybody?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. They are; and they have never gone back to Arizona either, or tried to go back.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No; I do not think the women and children would try to walk from Alabama back to Arizona, or would try to swim the rivers, but if you get them to the other side of the Missouri River they will go back and they will take their women and children with them. I have myself seen the Apache Indians on the war trail, a party of perhaps fifty men with as many women, hiding in the mountains and killing everybody that they could possibly sneak up to without danger of losing their own lives. As sure as this bill passes in its present shape these things will happen again, if not under the present Secretary of War then under some later Secretary.

This honest but mistaken sentiment of sympathy for these Indians is going to force that calamity again upon our people, and send us out again upon that beautiful crow hunt, trying to catch Apache Indians on the mountains of Sonora. In all the history of Indian warfare there never lived a more desperate, bloodthirsty, cunning villain than the Apache Indian. Geronimo's hand is imbrued in the best blood of American men, women, and children, not one of whom ever did him or his any harm.

The misfortune was that when those Indians were brought back from that celebrated raid when they were followed 2,000 miles by Gen. Miles and caught down in southern Mexico after crossing the Sierra Madre Mountains time and time again—the misfortune, I say, was that when they were captured and brought back they were not taken to the reservation and made a proper example of, as was done years ago in the case of other Indians. Every one of them ought to have been hanged as a plain warning to others that when they violated the law they should suffer the penalty as others do. But instead of that you propose to set these Indians to cultivating some rocky reservation; and you propose an appropriation for that purpose! You have no idea how that suggestion strikes a man from that portion of the country. An appropriation to put an Apache Indian to work! My conscience! One dollar put into such an undertaking is thrown away; a cent put into it is squandered.

I do trust that this House will never allow this report to go through. This proposition has been beaten heretofore, and would be beaten again if it could be met directly as an independent measure. The proposition was put on in the Senate, where we had no chance to fight it. The conferees have agreed upon a report which they bring to the House, where we have no chance to amend. Thus the matter has slipped in. I do not mean anything offensive by that; but I say that those who have been behind this measure knew very well it could not pass this House as a separate proposition, and it has been put upon this appropriation bill. I am questioning the conduct of nobody in this matter; but those interested in getting this proposition through knew that this was their safest course. They took the surest route to their end.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Why not move these Indians East?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Just one moment more, for a single suggestion. These Indians can be kept more cheaply, every one of them, at the Fifth Avenue Hotel in New York than you will ever keep them if they get back to the military reservation.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. They are costing twice as much now every year as the amount of this appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not care about that. If they once commence this movement toward Sonora, it will cost the military arm of the Government many millions of dollars to catch even a few of them. Why not put these Indians somewhere else? Are there not plenty of places to which they can be taken? I see before me a gentleman who represents the beautiful civilization that surrounds and resides in the great city of Boston. That philanthropic community loves the Indians.

Why not take these Indians to that portion of the country? They will educate the Boston people—will show them what an Apache Indian is. Take the Indian and put him on a little farm up there with his farming implements and see how long he will remain.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] five minutes, or such time as he may desire.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, when I went into the conference on this bill I was opposed, as an original proposition, to any amendment whatever to the Senate amendment. But on consultation with other gentlemen, the proposition of the Senate to remove these Indians from Alabama seemed to me so strongly backed up by proof as to the necessity for a change, that I was willing to consent to a modification of the Senate amendment so that the Secretary of War should have such discretion as would permit him to deal with this question in the full light of whatever might be necessary to be done.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] assume in their argument in the first place that these Indians must necessarily be sent to Oklahoma or Arizona; in other words they assume that the Secretary of War will in the treatment of this question do the very thing he should not do. What may be their basis for that belief is more than I can explain or understand. The Secretary of War himself has not taken primary action in the removal of these Indians because at his suggestion the Senate amendment was changed by striking out the word "directed." By that amendment as it passed the Senate the Secretary was "authorized and directed" to remove these Indians. He had no discretion as the amendment came from the Senate. He was directed to remove them. As I understand, the gentleman from Oklahoma was satisfied with the amendment as originally passed by the Senate.

Mr. FLYNN. That is correct.

Mr. HULL. Why? Because that amendment as originally passed provided that the Secretary of War should not send these Indians to any place now prohibited by law, and he is prohibited by law from sending them to Oklahoma. In other words, the gentleman from Oklahoma was willing to have that amendment passed, not only authorizing but directing the Secretary of War to remove these Indians from Alabama and to send them wherever he pleased, provided he did not send them to Oklahoma. The gentleman thus concedes the advisability of removing these Indians. Mr. Speaker, if this is true, the House will not act from very high motives if it should limit the discretion of the Secretary of War so that he may send these Indians to any place in the United States except Oklahoma.

So far as concerns the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], I understands that he objects to removing these Indians to any place west of the Missouri River, although the Secretary of War could send them to numerous reservations west of the Missouri River not prohibited by law. So that the gentleman from Arizona goes farther on this question now than he went in his statements before the conferees.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Secretary of War, in calling attention to the fact that he does not wish to be absolutely directed by law to remove these Indians, shows that he realizes he has the entire field before him and will do what is right in the treatment of this question.

It was further shown by the evidence before the conferees that it was the intention of the Department not to send these Indians to any single military reservation, but to send them to military reservations; in other words, to break up their organization by sending certain families to one restrvation, and certain other families to other reservations, thus widely distributing them over the different reservations of the country.

As a matter of humanity I want to say to the House that the time has come when something must be done for these Indians; not the old criminal who was sent there as a punishment, but the great number of children born in captivity. I believe that under the construction the Secretary of War puts on the original amendment, and his desire for the modification, that he will send none of these criminals—the old Indian prisoners—out of the stockades and the prisons at all. Those he will send out will be only the women and children. But when 60 per cent of these people have been born in captivity, it is not right to treat them in this cruel manner by keeping them in constant captivity for the offenses of their fathers, and continue them during their entire lives in prison.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. HULL. In a moment. Now, I detest an Indian just as much as the gentleman from Arizona does, or anybody else can. I know exactly what confidence is to be placed in them. There is nothing but the strong arm of the Government and the fear of punishment that will compel them to behave themselves. And so far as these Indians are concerned, if every buck or warrior had been shot when they were first captured it would have been the proper solution of the difficulty.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is correct.

Mr. HULL. But neither the gentleman from Arizona nor myself, nor anybody else, would advocate that sort of a solution of the difficulty now.

I yield now to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I wanted to know how you got the estimate—I failed to ask the chairman of the committee—of 60 per cent of these Indians born in captivity?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Ohio has the figures on that point.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will give the gentleman some information which I did not have at hand at the time I spoke here, and I confused the number 13 with 30.

Healthy and able-bodied men, 13.

That is all there is down at this place in Alabama, including the old criminals, not 30, as I first said.

Mr. HULL. Altogether of the able-bodied men-

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does that include criminals?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I suppose all who are considered as criminals, who were originally confined there as a punishment.

Women	102
Boys and girls over 12	21

The gentleman from Arizona said he would have no objection if it dealt with those under 16.

Boys and girls under 12	103

That is where I got my 60 per cent calculation. These must have been born since the imprisonment began. That makes a total of 239 under the head of "healthy and able-bodied."

Again:

Sickly and infirm, men and women	63

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How many men are in that "sickly and infirm" list?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am reading all the information I have on the subject, which is a statement submitted from the Department.

Men and women	63
Boys and girls over 12	1
Boys and girls under 12	16
Total	80

Indian soldiers, 47. Grand total, 366.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What are the soldiers; Indians?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is stated here that

These 366 persons constitute about seventy families of five persons each.

Mr. BROSIUS. Will the gentleman state how these families are divided? He has said that there are thirteen men and over a hundred women and children.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I said able-bodied men. Under the head of "sickly and infirm men and women" there are sixty-three.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What are the forty-seven soldiers; Indians?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. They are Indian soldiers in the Army.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Are they composed of the Indians who were sent down there as a punishment?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not know. They are Indian soldiers. The gentleman knows that there are Indian soldiers in the Army.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. These, I suppose, are some of the same Indians who were sent there as a punishment, and are now being used to guard the others.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not know as to that.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How are the children divided as to sex?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That I can not say. This is the only information I have.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If my friend will allow me, the motive seems to have followed the policy of sending Geronimo and his followers to prison, and of giving them the company of their wives and children, not caring to break up family ties. If this proposition is carried out, and the wives and children are scattered over the country, will not the Government be guilty of more cruelty in the separation of families than was contemplated in the original policy of sending these prisoners down into Alabama?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is not unusual for criminals to be separated from their families, or families to be separated from criminals all over the country. It is a common policy.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If this consideration, to which the gentleman now calls our attention, had been pursued at an earlier period perhaps the children would not have increased so largely.

Mr. HULL. I should like to have a few moments longer.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield additional time to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. HULL. I understood that both the Delegates from Oklahoma and from Arizona were satisfied with the Senate amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No, I never intimated it anywhere on earth.

Mr. HULL. Then, I will take that back. What I want further to emphasize to the House is that the conferees have improved that by striking out the word "directed," and have left it simply discretionary with the Secretary of War.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That was done at the suggestion of the Secretary of War, because the Secretary of War did not want to be compelled to send these Indians out into the country.

Mr. HULL. Yes; I stated that he did not want to be compelled.

Mr. FLYNN. Is it not a fact that unless this provision had been incorporated, the Secretary of War would not have been even authorized to do this?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I believe this is the best that can be done. I believe the time has come to take the women and children of this old Geronimo band out of captivity.

Now, I wish to say a word or two further concerning this amendment. I have stated to the House that the amendment which was offered in the Senate, and which was so very objectionable to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN], was suggested to the Secretary of War, and that the Secretary of War does not intend or expect, and does not want to be compelled, to distribute these men among these military reservations or to release them from prison; but that it is the purpose of the War Department to distribute the women and children among military reservations where, as it is said in the letter of the Secretary of War, they will be under the observation of military officers. There is no danger connected with distributing a family here and there, in the way that we propose.

If there were a military reservation in Ohio large enough to afford them room, I should not object to one or two or three families of five persons each going to Ohio and having an opportunity to start in life. There are ninety-five military posts and reservations. There are probably forty of these that have enough ground to accommodate some of these families, and upon which they can have the opportunities of life such as other human beings have. That is all we desire. The War Department, as is shown by the frequent efforts that have been made heretofore in previous administrations, do not wish to keep over 200 women and children in prison all their lives, because of the sins of their fathers. So far as any efforts have been made in the direction of sending them back to the neighborhood from which they came, I believe those efforts to have been ill advised.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If they are to be turned loose, why not turn them loose in Alabama?

Mr. BROSIUS. The family relation is maintained within the stockades, is it not?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. To a certain extent.

Mr. BROSIUS. I understand that the population is increasing?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is correct.

Mr. BROSIUS. How many years will the stockades contain that growing population?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not very long at the present rate of increase. As I said before, 60 per cent of these people were born in prison, and it is about time that the American people should give them an opportunity to live out of prison.

I move the adoption of the conference report, and upon that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ACCOUNT BETWEEN FLORIDA AND THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Union Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BAILEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 102) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the account stated between the General Government and the State of Florida by the said Secretary, under the authority of the act approved March 2, 1889, known as the deficiency act, and to pay the balance found to be due.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to settle the account stated between the United States and the State of Florida, under the authority of section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1889, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for prior years, and for other purposes;" and in making such settlement he is hereby authorized to set off what is found to be due by the State to the day of settlement, on account of principal and interest upon the bonds of the State, in which a portion of the Indian trust funds has been invested, against what is found to be due the State to the same date for moneys expended by her during the Indian hostilities of 1849 and 1856 and 1857, and to surrender such bonds and the coupons thereto to the governor of said State upon making such settlement. And in making the settlement the Secretary is directed to follow the statement of the account as made under the authority of said act, as found in the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, dated December 16, 1889, published as Executive Document No. 68, House of Representatives, Fifty-first Congress, and to adopt the first mode of settlement proposed near the foot of page 3 of said document, containing the computation of interest upon the principal on both sides to the date of settlement And such sum of money is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as is necessary to make such settlement.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, the object of this bill is to reimburse to the State of Florida moneys expended by her in resisting attacks of hostile Indians in the years 1856, 1857, and 1858. The bill has passed the Senate twice and has passed this body once; but never has passed both Houses during the same session. The purpose of the bill is simply to correct an omission or error that arose through no fault of the governor of the State of Florida, but through a misunderstanding at the time when the troops furnished by the State of Florida were mustered out by the State.

They were not mustered in or out of the service of the United States; and inasmuch as in order that troops under such circumstances should be paid it was required they must be mustered in and out, it was impossible for the Secretary of War at that time to pay these men. Subsequently to the time that they went out of the service, the governor of Florida called the attention of the Secretary of War to the fact that these men had been necessary, that they had rendered valid and substantial aid in resisting Indian hostilities. In response to that application of the governor of the State of Florida, the Secretary of War wrote:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., May 21, 1857.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, asking an approval of the services of certain volunteers called out by you, and in reply to inform you that the explanation as to the necessity of their services is satisfactory, and orders have been issued to the officer commanding in Florida to muster them in and out of the service of the United States.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN B. FLOYD,
Secretary of War.

His Excellency JAMES E. BROOME,
Governor of Florida, Washington.

At the time that this order was made these volunteers of the State of Florida had returned to their homes, and it was found impracticable to bring them together again in order to be mustered in and out. The attention of the Secretary of War was called to this fact by the governor of Florida. On the 7th of July following the governor wrote the Secretary of War, stating that it had been found impracticable to muster in these troops, as directed by the Secretary, they having been long since disbanded and it being impossible to assemble them again at any one point. He received the following from the Secretary of War:

Under the circumstances the only course left for the Department is to receive as official the State rolls, duly certified by State authority, and to base upon them a recommendation for the appropriation necessary to pay the troops. This course will obviate the difficulty named by you in consequence of the disbandment of the troops.

I call attention to this correspondence, and to this status of the case at the close of the Indian war, for the purpose of showing that although these troops were not originally called for by the Government of the United States, that nevertheless the governor of Florida, in the exigency that presented itself to him at the time, when there were not enough United States troops to meet the Indians who were arrayed against them in hostility, called, on his own responsibility and upon his own judgment, upon the people of Florida to furnish volunteers for this duty; that these volunteers participated in the Indian campaigns; that they rendered valuable services in those hostilities, which services were approved by the Secretary of War, and that the Secretary of War authorized that they be mustered in and out of the service, in order that they should be paid. The only difficulty in this case arose from the fact that these men had been disbanded and had returned to their homes, and the order of the Secretary of War requiring that they be mustered in and out could not be complied with.

There was no question whatever as to their service; there was no question whatever as to the value of their service. The mere fact that they were not mustered in and out was the only reason why they were not paid at that time. This claim continued in existence for some years without action being taken on it, principally by reason of the outbreak of the late war; but subsequently the attention of Congress was called to it, and in 1881 Congress passed an act referring the matter of this claim to the Secretary of War, and requiring him to make a report thereon.

The Secretary of War considered the claim and made his report, which is contained in both the majority and the minority reports on this bill. Subsequent to that Congress again took the matter in hand and authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to examine into and consider all the claims existing on the part of the State of Florida against the United States, and also all counter claims on the part of the United States against the State of Florida. The Secretary made his report, which is contained in the majority report of the committee on this bill, and to which I call attention.

Under the date of December 16, 1889, the Auditor considered the various items, rejected a number, and finally struck a balance in two forms. One balance, according to his figures, brought the United States in debt to the State of Florida in the sum of $567,954.50. The other method reduced the amount to $421,569.05. It seems that considering the claims on the part of the United States against the State of Florida, certain bonds which had been issued by the State of Florida for the purpose of raising money wherewith to pay these troops had come into the hands of the United States in the Indian trust fund, to the amount of $132,000.

It is proper to state that when these Indian hostilities began and when a detachment of United States troops under Lieut. Hartsuff were attacked near the edge of the Everglades without any warning whatever, the governor of the State of Florida, finding it necessary by reason of the small number of troops in that part of the country, to call upon volunteers, obtained permission from the Legislature to issue bonds. The Legislature authorized the governor to issue $500,000 worth of bonds for the purpose of raising money to pay and maintain the troops. Those bonds were disposed of in various ways. Some were purchased by private parties, some were purchased by banks, and some found their way into the Indian trust fund to the amount, as I have stated, of $132,000.

The State of Florida has been paying interest on those bonds at 7 per cent ever since they were issued. She paid interest into the Treasury of the United States on the $132,000 worth of bonds held by the United States up to 1873, since which time I believe the interest has been unpaid and is still due. At least it so appears from the report of Secretary Windom.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that it is necessary for me to go into the argument that is used against the validity of this claim. There is, so far as I can gather from the views of the minority, only one argument. That is that these troops or volunteers were not called for by the United States Government, and that their services were declined, although they were tendered by the governor of Florida.

It is a fact that they were not called for by the United States Government, and it is also a fact that their service was declined, but subsequent to that declination, the United States authorities found that it was necessary to have additional troops and accepted their services, not formally through the Secretary of War, but in fact through coöperation with these Florida troops. Subsequently in the correspondence that was had with the Secretary of War, he said in his letter to the governor of Florida:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, asking an approval of the service of certain volunteers called out by you, and in reply, to inform you that the explanation as to the necessity of their services is satisfactory, and orders have been issued to the officer commanding in Florida to muster them in and out of the service of the United States.

Now, as an answer to the position assumed by the opponents of this bill, that these troops were not tendered and accepted, we have here in the official records of the country the evidence that subsequent to the declination of their services, the Government of the United States, through an officer authorized to act for it and whose action bound the President and bound the Government, approved of that service and authorized the mustering in of these troops.

Mr. HERMANN. Previous to the declination by the United States Government of the services of these volunteers, were their services actually required by the necessity then existing in that part of the country?

Mr. MALLORY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HERMANN. Were there any Government troops on the scene of hostilities at that time?

Mr. MALLORY. There were very few; not at all enough to cope with the Indians.

Mr. HERMANN. And the position taken by the advocates of this bill is that the troops down there were inadequate to put down the hostile Indians?

Mr. MALLORY. They were so. That is a fact of history.

Mr. HERMANN. And that therefore it was necessary to raise these volunteers?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly. The Government of the United States called for volunteers and did enlist a number of companies; but those, with the troops then on hand, were inadequate to stop the murders and depredations that were being carried on by those Indians, who, like the Apaches referred to in the discussion which took place here awhile ago, made little of distance, and appeared at points very remote from each other in very short intervals of time, massacreing everybody that they could lay their hands upon. Thereupon the people of Florida, through their governor, finding it absolutely necessary in order to protect themselves, placed these volunteers in the field, issued bonds to raise money to pay them, paid them every dollar that the State owed them, and protected the people until the United States, through the Secretary of War, ratified that action and authorized these troops to be mustered into and out of the service.

Mr. HERMANN. Did not these volunteers coöperate in many instances, if not entirely, with the United States troops?

Mr. MALLORY. They acted side by side with them all the time. I contend, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that while it is true that the services of these men, although tendered, were declined by the United States Government, that fact ceases to have any valid force, ceases to constitute an argument, when you bear in mind the additional fact that their services subsequently were formally and officially recognized by the United States Government, and that the only step necessary to pay them for the services rendered was authorized to be taken by the Government of the United States.

That it was not taken arose from no fault of theirs, but because hostilities had ceased and the volunteers had been disbanded and sent to their homes. In fact, this bill simply proposes to do that which ought to have been done at that time—to validate the mustering in of these men in accordance with the rolls which have been filed and are set forth in these reports. The State of Florida, finding it impossible to muster in these troops through the regular officials, made muster rolls and filed them in the records of the War Department, where they are now.

This whole claim has been examined. The services of each man have been thoroughly investigated; and the claim covers only those items which were paid, as the State of Florida has shown by proof, which can not be and is not disputed. The salaries of the officers and men, and their subsistence, and the money necessary for their equipment, were all paid by the State of Florida, as has been proven by the State, and she now presents herself here, as she has done in previous Congresses, asking simply that justice be done in the premises.

I reserve the residue of my time

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, although I filed the minority report in opposition to this bill, I do not know that I shall occupy much time upon it. There are a number of gentlemen who have given the subject some attention in previous Congresses. I believe that among these the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DAVIS] has made some preparation upon the subject, and has data affecting the facts involved. I yield to him thirty minutes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, in order to understand this old bill which has been here a great many times, all the facts and circumstances ought to be stated. It comes down to us from a period prior to the war. During the last Congress this bill passed the Senate, and was before the House upon a favorable report by the committee. In that situation, the facts being stated here by myself and two or three gentlemen in short speeches, the bill was killed.

Mr. MALLORY. The bill was not killed; but gentlemen succeeded in talking it to death.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, the bill did not go through.

Mr. Chairman, take up the history of Florida by the various authors (Sprague, Fairbanks, Bertram, Giddings, and Julian), and you will find that devoted country to have been the battle ground of American liberty. More so, perhaps, than any other spot on this continent.

As early as 1696, expeditions were organized in South Carolina against the inhabitants of Florida. Because, says Fairbanks, in his history—

Many of the settlers in the province of Carolina had lost servants, who had fled to Florida, and had been harbored and protected by the Spanish authorities, and many other of the inhabitants (of Carolinas) were quite willing to procure labor, by making an inroad upon the Spanish Indians and reducing them to a state of servitude.

The Spaniards were willing to surrender all the criminals and debtors, but they refused to surrender "the fugitive slaves." They harbored and encouraged the desertion of the negroes from the English settlements.

These early wars for slavery on the one side and liberty on the other were very bloody, destructive, and merciless. Towns were sacked and burned. Men, women, and children were butchered. None were spared but the negroes. These were dragged into bondage.

The forays of the whites of Georgia and South Carolina provoked retaliations, and there was an emulation of barbarities. It was the beginning in America of that "irrepressible conflict" of the ages known as slavery against liberty. On the side of liberty were the Indian and the negro. On the side of slavery the white man.

The Indians and negroes established places of refuge for fugitive slaves from the white settlements. The whites organized expeditions to break up these places of refuge, and to reënslave the fugitives. So frequent and so well organized were these forays and counterforays, and so persistent were the fugitive slaves from the white settlements, that there gradually formed in Florida a distinct tribe, composed of negroes, Indians, and mixed bloods, known as "Seminoles," or runaways, as that term implies.

The Seminoles were never very numerous, but they occupied a wide extent of country. When unmolested the Seminoles were peaceable, and enjoyed life in the most primeval and contented manner, free from want and care. The traveler, Bertram, has described their peaceful and happy manners and mode of life as follows:

They have no wishes to gratify, nor wants for which they are required to provide; no enemies to fear, nor disquietudes, unless such as they may entertain from the continual progress of the white settlements. Content and tranquil, they seem as free from care as the birds of the air; like them they are light and volatile, and like them they sing and coo. The Seminole presents the picture of perfect happiness. The joy, the internal content, the tender love, and the generous friendship are imprinted on his very countenance; they show themselves in his demeanor and in his gestures; they seem to form his habitual state of existence, and to be a part of his nature, for their impress only departs from him with life.—Fairbank's Florida, pages 272, 273.

In 1821 Florida became a Territory of the United States. The slaveholders were in power in those days, and their first thought was to secure the safety and perpetuity of their "peculiar institution." No longer checked by the jurisdiction and power of Spain, war on the Indians and the recovery of fugitive slaves became the fixed purpose and policy of this great Government. The first step was to remove the Indians further south and to restrict them within narrower limits. The next step was to remove the Indians to a new country west of the Mississippi River, and to return to slavery such of the Seminoles as might be claimed by white men. This removal and the rendition of alleged fugitives had two features connected with it which the Seminoles considered worse than death.

(1) The rendition of fugitives involved the separation of families, and the enslavement of men, women, and children who considered themselves free, or had been born free. (2) The removal to the West placed the Seminoles in close proximity to the Creek Indians, who had preceded them, and who, being slaveholders, claimed many of the Seminoles as their property. Having nothing before them but death or slavery, these brave men preferred death. They would neither surrender nor go West peaceably.

So, after years of predatory forays, with all the horrors of chronic savage warefare, the Government finally resolved on the forcible removal of the Indians and the recovery and rendition of the fugitive slaves to their masters.

In 1835 that long-to-be-remembered Seminole or Florida war began in diabolical earnest. Brave men met in a thousand death struggles, with no truce or mercy on either side. The Indian had courage, climate, swamp, love of liberty, jungles, and justice on his side. The white man had equal courage, numbers, discipline, and insatiable rapacity on his.

No Greece nor Rome ever produced greater heroes than did that Florida war in the thirties and forties. Leonidas and his Spartans at Thermopylæ were equaled by Osceola and Coacoochee as they led their swarthy heroes against the invading whites. And Julius Cæsar, in the forests and morasses of ancient Germany or in the fastnesses of Helvetia, never made a better record for persistent courage and watchful generalship than was exhibited by Gens. Jessup, Taylor, Worth, and others.

This war of seven years, ending in 1843, was a successful war. It reduced the Indians from 3,500, with 1,400 warriors, to a number less than 300, with less than 100 warriors. Five hundred alleged slaves were returned to their alleged masters at a fearful cost of blood and treasure on both sides. The remnants of the Indian tribes were driven south into the swamps and morasses, where they would never have been heard of more had the whites refrained from molesting them. The whites, however, could not restrain their rapacious greed for human chattels. They acted on the doctrine that "every black man should be a slave and every white man a bloodhound to catch him when he runs away."

Herein, Mr. Chairman, we find the real milk of the cocoanut. Herein is the origin of the present war claim now under discussion.

Mr. Chairman, has not this nation done and suffered enough on account of chattel slavery? Why do men come in here broaching subjects and prosecuting claims which tear open old wounds, and perpetuate old memories and heartburnings which should long ago have been buried?

For each slave recovered in that seven years Florida war, three brave white men laid down their lives, and in treasure the cost to the Government was $80,000 for each alleged slave returned to his alleged master. Was not that enough? No, the rapacity of the slave traders was not satisfied, and $141,000 was paid to the masters for the children which the slaves might have had if they had remained at home. Surely that is enough. Not at all. Now comes a claim estimated at half a million dollars which it is said the masters in the forties and fifties spent trying to recover more slaves, after they had all been returned to them or paid for by the General Government.

Mr. Chairman, in making these statements I do not speak without authority. Mr. George W. Julian, in his Life of Joshua R. Giddings, says:

Mr. Giddings proceeded to read further documents sustaining his position that the Florida war had been waged by the Government to aid the slaveholders in the capture of their slaves and for the enslavement of Indians and negroes who were free. He showed that a large portion of the fugitives from Georgia who fled prior to 1802 intermarried with the Seminoles and Southern Creek Indians, and that the Government by treaty in 1821 compelled the Creeks to pay for their fugitives.

The Creeks, supposing they had thus acquired a good title to them from the United States, claimed the wives and children of the Seminoles, who, however, finally refused to move West, preferring to remain and fight the whites, rather than hazard the loss of their wives and children by becoming again incorporated with the Creeks; and that the interest of the Florida slaveholders required that the Seminoles should be compelled to emigrate, which the United States undertook to accomplish. He further proved by official documents that $141,000 which rightfully belonged to the Indians was paid to the slaveholders by the Government as compensation for the children of the fugitive slaves who would have been born to their masters if their parents had remained in servitude.—Julian's Life of Giddings, page 93.

Mr. Giddings, in his Exiles of Florida, places the number of Seminoles at the beginning of the war of 1835 as follows: Number of Seminoles, 1,200; number of blacks, 200; altogether, 1,400 warriors. At the close of the war, in 1843, the number still in the country who had not been transported or captured was about 98 warriors. The war was for the removal of the Indians west of the Mississippi River. They objected to going because many of them had been the slaves of the Creeks, and would be in danger of being captured and enslaved by them in the West if they were settled near their old masters.

That fact explains why they fought so desperately to prevent removal. This war for the special purpose of removing the Indians was a very bloody, destructive, and costly affair. Led by Osceola and Coacoochee, they fought with all the desperation which brave men usually exhibit when fighting for country and personal liberty. The following items will give some idea as to the terrible straits to which our Army of the United States was sometimes driven. Bloodhounds and Spaniards had been imported from Cuba as allies to the Army in tracking and capturing the enemy. Referring to that fact, Mr. Giddings says:

The animals had been obtained and authority given to our officers to employ them. The Spaniards attended them. The dogs were attached to different regiments, and fed liberally with bloody meat. Young calves were provided and driven with each scouting party to provide food for them. The Spaniards were supplied with a sufficient number of assistants to keep the dogs in their leashes. Thus provided, several parties composed of regular troops, militia, Indians, Spaniards, dogs, and calves started for the interior.

Their marches continued in some instance for days before they found even the track of the enemy; but when they found the footprints of Indians, the dogs were looked to with confidence to lead on the warlike host, while some more humble officers, following the canine leaders, Spaniards and calves, were expected to bear aloft the glorious Stars and Stripes, as they engaged in deadly conflict with the wily foe. Lo! just at that moment, when all hearts were palpitating, while hope was at its height; when the stern resolve clothed each brow with the dark scowl of battle, the dogs were blithe and frolicsome, and paid no more attention to the tracks of the Indians than those of the ponies on which they sometimes rode.

This grand experiment for closing the Florida war was now pronounced a dead failure; and the use of dogs, and calves, and Spaniards was discarded, and the whole affair served no other purpose than to bring odium on the Administration and ridicule upon the officers who proposed the employment of bloodhounds to act as allies of the American Army.—Giddings' Exiles of Florida, pages 272-3.

In the same history Mr. Giddings further says:

In 1843 most of the troops were withdrawn from Florida, Gen. Worth retired from the command, and the Florida war was supposed to have ended. It had been commenced with a determination to reënslave the exiles. The object was, in part, attained. More than 500 persons were seized and enslaved between the 1st of January, 1835, and the 14th of August, 1843. Probably one-half of them had been born free; the others had themselves escaped from slavery. To effect this object, forty millions of dollars were supposed to have been expended. Eighty thousand dollars was paid from the public treasury for the enslavement of each person, and the lives of at least three white men were sacrificed to ensure the enslavement of each black man.

The deterioration of our national morality was beyond estimate, and the disgrace of our nation and Government are matters incapable of computation. The suffering of the Indians and exiles amidst such prolonged persecution, with loss of lives and property, we can not estimate. The friends and families who were separated, the number of those who were made wretched for life, the broken hearts, we will not attempt to enumerate. Nearly one-half of the whole number were consigned to the moral death of slavery.

After wandering in the wilderness thrice forty years they fell under the oppression, the persecution, and the power of a mighty nation, which boasts of its justice, its honor, and love of liberty. We lament the sad fate of those who died in that struggle, but with deeper anguish, and far keener mortification, we deplore the unhappy lot of those who were doomed to drag out a miserable existence amidst chains and wretchedness, surrounded by that moral darkness which broods over the enslaved portion of our fellow beings in the Southern States.

There are yet remaining in Florida a few descendants of the pioneer exiles. They are intermarried with the bands of "Billy Bowlegs" and of "Sam Jones," sometimes called Aripeka: they are now mostly half-breeds, and are rapidly becoming amalgamated with the Indian race.

Besides these, there are a number of Spanish refugees, or colored people who fled from Spanish masters and took up their residence with those called Spanish Indians. These did not engage in the war until 1840, nor did they then engage in any of the battles with our Army; they contented themselves with plundering ships wrecked on their coast, and the forays upon Indian Key. They refused to send delegates to the council summoned by Gen. Worth, to establish terms of pacification. They live independent of the white people, subsisting mostly on fish and the natural products of the soil, holding very little intercourse with either white men or other Indians. Descendants of exile parents, they have the complexion and appearance of pure Spaniards; but they are rapidly blending with the Indians, and forming a mixed race.

These different bands, remaining in Florida and aggregating into a distinct people, have on several occasions since 1843 given evidence of implacable hostility to the whites. And at the time of writing this narrative (1857) they are engaged in open war, while the Government of the United States is endeavoring to secure peace in the same manner and upon the same terms on which Gen. Worth obtained it in 1843. Their future history may here after occupy the pen of some other historian.—Giddings Exiles of Florida, pages 314 to 316.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before the committee is a part of that "future history" spoken of by the historian.

In 1845 Florida was admitted as a State into this Union. The remnants of the Seminoles and a few other tribes, numbering less than one hundred warriors, were driven into the swamps and everglades of Southern Florida. There were no more dangers from the Indians among the white settlements, except as provoked by the aggression of the slaveholders, seeking for alleged fugitives from bondage.

The bill before the House is to settle a claim for services rendered by the Florida militia from 1849 to 1857. During that period the war was merely a predatory warfare by the slaveholders of that State with remnants of the Seminoles and other tribes which still remained after most of them had migrated, for the purpose of recovering alleged fugitives, and for the enslavement of men, women, and children who had been born free.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, that war was neither just nor necessary, nor is there sufficient evidence that it was authorized by the General Government. With this view of the matter, Mr. Chairman, the claim made in this bill is outrageously unjust, and it should not be paid. [Applause by opponents of the bill.]

Mr. MALLORY. I yield ten minutes to my colleague from Florida [Mr. COOPER.]

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I know this House gives very little attention to a local claim of this sort; and I am going to intrude upon the attention of this body for only ten minutes. I ask the honest consideration of this House for an honest claim and the authorization for the payment of a debt that the United States ought to have paid years ago.

Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that a gentleman should get up here and undertake to prejudice a claim of this sort by raking up the stale embers of sectional discord and appealing to prejudices based upon institutions that long since ceased to exist.

This Florida war had no more to do with slavery than the recent war between Germany and France.

Mr. DAVIS. What was the date of this war?

Mr. COOPER of Florida. From 1856 to 1858.

Mr. DAVIS. When the slaveholders were in the saddle, and the catching of slaves was the principal business of the Government.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. This war began in a treacherous attack of these Seminole Indians upon a camp of United States soldiers, an officer being wounded and a number of the men being massacred. Slavery never entered in anyway whatsoever into the question. There was a remnant of the worst of the Seminole tribe who remained in the far southern portion of Florida. A detail of the United States troops went down there and encamped. They were surprised and massacred. In this emergency the governor of the State called out a considerable force of militia. The United States sent some regular troops which were not sufficient to deal with the difficulty.

Now, I want to impress upon the minds of members this fact: The President of the United States at the close of that war examined into the necessity of the employment of those State troops. You have been told that their services were not accepted. The literal fact is this: They were called out in that emergency, and at the termination of hostilities the President of the United States, upon careful examination of the matter, with all the facts before him, determining that their services were necessary to the Government, ordered them mustered in and out of the United States service, so that this bill for their expenses could be paid.

The Secretary of War issued his order to muster them in and out, so that the bills might be paid, and he sent an officer down there to perform that duty. These, however, being volunteer troops and the war having ended, the troops had disbanded, the State having mustered them out, and consequently the officer got there too late. The only thing now for Congress to do is to dispense with the technical act of mustering in and out, because the troops left before the officer got there, as I have stated.

Mr. Chairman, this matter has been before Congress frequently, and has been always acted upon favorably. The account was referred to Secretary Windom, and here is his report adjudicating the balance due the State and reporting the facts. It was referred to Secretary Lincoln, and here is his report adjudicating the balance due the State and reporting in favor of the claim. It has been reported time and again favorably in the House and Senate. It has been passed both by the House and Senate, but unfortunately there has been no simultaneous action upon it by both Houses at any one Congress.

There has never been but one report in either House against the bill, and that was the report of Senator JONES of Arkansas to the Senate, which report the minority of this committee of the House adopt and publish here. Since that time the committee of which Senator JONES is a member has twice considered and reported favorably upon this bill, and the Senator from Arkansas has not submitted a dissenting report.

Now, here is a bill which every Department of the Government, the President, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, and all of the officers of the Government under whose examination it has come, have reported in its favor as a legitimate, honest debt of the United States. Deducting the offsets against Florida, everything ever claimed by the Government that we owed them, we have the bill here now simply providing for paying the difference due to the State. Each House has passed it time and again, every Department has reported in its favor, and the question is simply whether you are willing to pay your honest debts or not.

You passed a bill this morning paying just the same kind of a claim to the State of Nebraska without objection—by unanimous consent. Is there any rule here that permits the payment to Nebraska and refuses it to Florida, and if so, why? You paid the same kind of a claim to Kansas. Why should Kansas be paid, and not Florida? You have paid the same kind of claim to Texas on the motion and after the advocacy of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Governor SAYERS.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me to state here that none of these claims were antiquated. We did not go back ten or twelve years behind the war. What was paid Texas was for moneys expended by her since the close of the war.

Mr. BUNN. That makes no difference.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly it does. Why, when these occurrences were fresh, did not Congress make the appropriation to reimburse Florida; and why was not the claim then pressed?

Mr. BUNN. Why, the answer to that is so plain that it seems hardly necessary to suggest it. The gentleman knows what it is.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. The only answer required, if the gentleman will permit me, I will make perfectly clear to him.

The answer is simply this: The war ended out of which this claim of Florida arose in 1859. Senator Yulee introduced a bill in the next Congress, but before action could be taken on it the civil war came on. That, of course, prevented consideration of the claim; but after the war ended we came and presented the same claim, and it has been pending ever since, having been favorably reported by every committee, except as I have mentioned, and recommended by every departmental officer. It has been recognized, I repeat, by the President of the United States; it has been adjudicated by Secretaries Windom and Lincoln, and here is your admitted and honest obligation presented to you in the shape of a bill, and the question is whether you will pay us now or refuse to pay us because you have the power to delay it still further. It belongs to us. It is our due. We are not asking sympathy or charity. We are not pleading for anything. We demand only our rights, and we ask you to pay us what you owe us.

All the stuff read by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DAVIS] about the "old Indian" and negro troubles in Florida, under the Spanish dominion, and the old Seminole war in 1836, had nothing whatever to do with the question. This was begun in 1856 and the gentleman's citations have no more relevancy to it than the hanging of witches at Plymouth.

The question of slavery did not enter into the matter at all. There is no authority to say that anybody went there to catch a slave. It had nothing to do with it. It began in the massacre of United States troops by these Indians and the officer in command was killed.

Mr. MALLORY. If my colleague will permit me the officer was wounded seriously.

Mr. BUNN. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Well, the officer was seriously hurt, at all events, and some of the men were killed, and the governor called out the troops of the State in the emergency, and the President of the United States accepted their services, and ordered them to be mustered in and out, and paid. The Secretary of War ordered an officer to proceed and muster them out, but he failed to get there in time, for the reason I have stated. There are the facts of the case. We have had every report in our favor, and only the one against us, and that by Senator JONES, whose committee has twice favorably reported on the bill since then, without any adverse report from him.

Mr. BUNN. The report of Senator JONES was a minority report.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What is the amount of this claim?

Mr. MALLORY. Something over $560,000.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I notice that the opponents of this bill are fighting it upon the same ground that they fight the payment of the French spoliation claims, namely, that the Government has owed it so long that they do not want to pay it at all?

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to read from the minority report, by Mr. COUSINS, who, I believe, presented the views of the minority. On page 6 this language is used:

Considering the number of the enemy and the number of troops in the Government service, there certainly was no such emergency as required the governor of Florida to call the State troops into the field, and under no other circumstances is the State entitled to pay for them.

This claim against the Government does not seem to have been much thought of in Florida at the time. In 1856 the Government appropriated $240,000 to pay Florida troops. In the spring of 1857 $92,000 was paid to Florida on account of Indian hostilities. She filed two accounts against the Government in 1857, and this is not mentioned.

I call the attention of the committee now to this especially:

And when in 1859 the governor suggested that it was the debt of the Government and asked the Legislature to instruct their delegation in Congress to take action in the matter, a resolution to that effect was introduced—

That is, introduced into the Florida Legislature—

but no notice was taken of it, not even a vote had on it, and this, too, in the very year in which the Government appropriated $413,000 to pay Florida troops.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I am speaking by the courtesy of my colleague [Mr. MALLORY], and if the gentleman from Texas wishes to make an argument against this claim, he should do it in his own time, because my time is limited.

Mr. SAYERS. What has the gentleman to say in reference to the neglect of the Florida Legislature in 1859, when it failed to instruct its Senators and Representatives in Congress to attend to this very matter?

Mr. DALZELL. What has the gentleman from Texas been reading from?

Mr. SAYERS. From the minority report.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I will make this reply to the gentleman, and it seems to me it is entirely sufficient: Immediately at the termination of these hostilities, as shown by the report, the governor of Florida sent a message to the Legislature claiming this amount to be due. The gentleman says that the Legislature of Florida did not pass a memorial on the subject. What has that got to do with the matter, when Senator Yulee at the very next session of Congress introduced a bill for the payment of this claim? The civil war came on and stopped it. I say that the governor claimed it to be due at the time when he sent an official message to the Legislature with reference to it, and our Senator introduced a bill for its payment.

Now, I wish to say one thing more. Some stress was laid upon the fact that there were a comparatively small number of Indians who waged what the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DAVIS] calls a predatory warfare in the everglades and swamps of Florida. I want to ask how many Indians there were in the Modoc war? I want to ask how many Indians there were that went through the Yellowstone Park with Chief Joseph, when nearly the whole regular Army of the United States was called into service? A large part of the 25,000 men who constituted the Army of the United States were after those Indians.

How many Indians were there? Were there as many as in this Florida war? There were not. We heard the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] this morning state upon this floor that it would take a thousand United States troops to one Indian to deal with the Apaches in their fastnesses. There were no more troops sent after these Indians in Florida than were necessary, and any man who knew the hummocks and swamps and everglades of Florida would know that the mere statement of comparative numbers would convey an entirely false impression. There were more Seminoles than there were Modocs. There were more Seminoles than there were of those Indians who went out with Chief Joseph, and you found there were enough then to keep the Army of the United States pretty busy. I want gentlemen of this House to understand that this is an honest and just debt. It has been so found by every tribunal that has ever examined it. And you can pay it or leave it alone, but give us a vote on it and give us a fair show.

Mr. DANIELS. What is the amount claimed?

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Something over $500,000.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, with reference to that portion of the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DAVIS] as to this having been a slave war, carried on for the purpose of the recapture of runaway slaves, I will simply call the attention of the House to the report of Bvt. Col. Harvey Brown, who was commanding in that section of the country at that time.

I will state that a short time previous to the outbreak of this war the first real hostility was the killing of a white boy by some Indians over on the east coast of Florida. I remember myself as a boy, living at Key West at that time, that they also killed two men down at what was called Miama, men who were engaged in making turpentine, before any outbreak had occurred. That was in 1856. Gen. Brown, in his report on the first outbreak of hostility, calls attention to an expedition sent by him under then Lieut. Hartsuff. He said:

Lieut. Hartsuff was ordered, with two noncommissioned officers and eight privates (six mounted and two on foot), with two six-mule teams, to proceed to and reconnoiter the Big Cypress swamp and its neighborhood, his whole force, including teamsters, being ten men, a number deemed by me sufficient, he having during the last winter repeatedly passed unmolested alone and with an escort of one man over the very same grounds, and the Indians never subsequently having given the slightest evidence of a hostile disposition.

Now, he sent Lieut. Hartsuff down there to the Big Cypress, which is on the west side of the Everglades, with ten men of his companies, and he found no Indians and saw no evidence of hostility at all. Lieut. Hartsuff proceeded along the route and had made up his mind to return.

Accordingly the men had at daybreak got their breakfast, struck their tents, and partly saddled and harnessed their horses and teams (Lieut. Hartsuff himself not yet having breakfasted nor had his tent struck), and were employed in preparing for their march, when they were attacked by a party of Indians, varying, in the opinions of the different men, from 25 to 40. The Indians being distant about 15 to 20 yards, and behind trees, and the soldiers in the open prairie, there is great obscurity as to the conduct of part of these men, which requires a closer investigation than I can now give it, but the probability is that the most of them fell at the first fire.

Lieut. Hartsuff, on hearing the whoop, ran immediately from his tent to the wagons, passing a soldier (Foster or Hook) with his leg broken, and found at the wagon three privates, Hanna, of Company K, Baker, of Company G, and Murtagh, of Company K. He was wounded in the arm probably in passing from his tent to the wagon. Being from his wound unable to load, he directed one of the men to load for him, and he fired two or three times with a musket and about the same number with a rifle. He was, while so engaged, and most nobly and gallantly encouraging his men, again struck in the breast, the ball striking his pistol hilt and stunning him. Whether wounded a third time seems somewhat doubtful, but he probably was, in the arm, when he told the men (they all being wounded and Murtagh killed) they could do no more, and directed them to take care of themselves, and he himself retreated to the hammock, since which he has not been seen or heard of, and it is to be feared that he has fallen.

Lieut. Hartsuff succeeded in getting into a little lily pond, and by keeping his body under water, so that he only left his head out, he managed to live; and he succeeded after two or three days in crawling back to Fort Myers, where the headquarters of the little command were. That was the first indication of hostilities in that year.

Now, I say to this House that it is unfair, even conceding that all that has been read by the gentleman from Kansas is correct, which of course I do not concede; even conceding that the white people of Florida in the Territorial days of Florida (because it was not admitted into the Union until after all these things the gentleman has read about had occurred), but conceding for the sake of argument that the white people of Florida were as atrocious and as villainous in their disposition as depicted by the gentleman who has read this account, I say what in the name of God has that to do with a war that occurred ten years afterward, and which the official records show was begun by a bold, wanton, uncalled-for attack on the part of the Indians.

The purpose for which that was introduced was to lead us from the consideration of the merits of this case and the facts of this case by an appeal to feelings which probably are more bitter in their effect in arousing hate between the sections than any other that can be appealed to in order to have our attention distracted from a calm, cool consideration of this measure. I am free to say that I do not think this House can be influenced by such an argument. There is no question in the world that this is a just claim. There is no doubt that it was admitted by the United States Government to be just; and the only difficulty is that the amount is large, and therefore there is an indisposition to see it paid at this time.

It has been pending here before Congress, Congress after Congress. If it is defeated this time it will probably come up again. Florida does not relinquish her right, which is a just one, to be paid as other States, a long list of which I have, have been paid by the United States Government under the same circumstances. Gen. Harney, who took the command, succeeding the preceding officers, immediately issued a call for additional volunteers. The troops were regular United States troops and volunteers who had been received from the State of Florida and mustered into service. They were found to be inadequate for the occasion, and he called for an additional number of troops, and these 400 or 500 troops who were not paid by the Government, and who were paid by the State government, were out in the field and took a part in the capture and overthrow of these Indians.

Mr. Chairman, how much more time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida has twenty minutes.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. I find that the original claim was $261,934.31, and that this bill adds to that $295,098.10 of interest, computing the interest at the rate of 7 per cent.

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I think the gentleman will agree with me that it has not been the policy of the Government, at least since the late war, to pay interest on claims of this kind. There have been times where the Government has paid interest to the States, but never I think since the war; and in no instance that I am aware of has it paid interest at the rate of 7 per cent, which would be obviously unjust to the Government, since it has been able to borrow money at 3 and 4 per cent.

Mr. MALLORY. I cite to the gentleman the case of the State of Massachusetts in 1870, where interest was paid.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. At what rate?

Mr. MALLORY. I do not know. I have not examined the details.

Mr. BUNN. I will state that the committee have suggested an amendment to that proposition to the effect that the State of Florida shall be reimbursed only to the extent of the interest that it has actually paid on this money.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. That will not do.

Mr. BUNN. That has been the unbroken custom.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. If my colleague will permit me, I will state, in answer to the gentlemon from New Hampshire, that the State of Florida borrowed money at the rate of 7 per cent to pay these expenses, and has been paying that rate of interest upon it, and paying it to the United States on a large portion of those bonds ever since. That is the reason why it is proposed to allow interest on this claim at 7 per cent.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. What do you propose to do with those Indian bonds?

Mr. MALLORY. We propose to retire them when we get them.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. To pay them off?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. It is provided in the bill that they are to be paid off in this settlement.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I understand you to claim that you have been paying interest on these bonds at the rate of 7 per cent, and that you have paid it up to 1873? Now, do you not know that the record shows that there has been no interest paid since 1862?

Mr. MALLORY. The statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Windom, shows that it has been paid.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. When the Indian appropriation bill was up sometime ago I investigated this matter, and I had a written statement from the Secretary stating that no interest had been paid on those bonds since 1862.

Mr. MALLORY. It may be that no interest was paid in money by the States, but the United States deducted the interest from other funds to which the State of Florida was entitled. You will find the matter all set forth in the report of Secretary Windom.

With reference to the question of interest, I would say that while the United States as a general rule does not pay interest, it has paid it in some instances. It is true there have not been many claims of this character arising since the late war. This case of Massachusetts which I have cited I have not investigated and I do not know the circumstances. But we have the opinions of three Attorneys-General upon the subject of the payment of interest, and one of them I think shows very clearly that under certain circumstances the Government of the United States does pay interest. Mr. Wirt said:

> The expenditure thus incurred forms a debt against the United States which they are bound to reimburse. If the expenditures made for such purpose are supplied from the treasury of the State, the United States reimburse the principal without interest; but if, being unable itself, from the conditions of its own finances, to meet the emergency, such State has been obliged to borrow money for the purpose, and thus to incur a debt on which she herself has had to pay interest, such debt is essentially a debt due by the United States, and both the principal and the interest are to be paid by the United States. (See Opinions of Attorneys-General, volume 1, page 174.)

In addition, the opinion of Attorney-General Crittenden, who says:

> "The act of 27th of February, 1851, is intended to indemnify the State against loss or damage. Reimbursing means repairing the loss or expenses by an equivalent. If the State of Florida has contracted obligations bearing interest, or has paid money with interest, for the use and benefit, in necessary and proper supplies for the troops called into service in 1849, to refund to the State of Florida the principal sum only, without the interest, would not reimburse the State, would not save the State from loss and damage, would not be an equivalent for the expense the State has incurred for the United States. There is no public policy, no saving to the public Treasury, no virtue, no laudable end consulted in order to cut down the claims of the several States in opposition to the intention of Congress and the good faith of the Government."

Also of Attorney-General Brewster, in case of the State of New York, dated July 23, 1883:

> "Undoubtedly the interest paid by the State of New York on money borrowed and applied to the objects specified in the act of July 27, 1861, forms a part of the burden borne by that State for general public defense, and constitutes a just charge against the United States, and the obligation to reimburse for payments of that kind, made under similar circumstances, has frequently been recognized by Congress, as appears by statutes above cited."

Mr. SAYERS. In the reimbursement of the different States for moneys expended for repelling Indian invasions, no interest has ever been allowed by the Government. The accounts in those cases were readjusted without the allowance of interest, and upon the basis of paying the State volunteers at the same rate that the General Government paid its soldiers.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the gentleman know whether in those cases to which he refers the States had to borrow the money and pay interest upon it?

Mr. SAYERS. I know that Texas had, and she was not allowed any interest.

Mr. MALLORY. Did she claim interest? My impression is that Texas did not claim interest.

Mr. SAYERS. She did not claim it because, according to precedent, she was not entitled to it.

Mr. MALLORY. The object of legislation of this kind is to reimburse the States. Now, if they had not the money and had to borrow and pay interest upon it, you do not reimburse them when you pay only the principal.

Mr. BUNN. Why was not there a bill introduced to pay Texas her interest?

Mr. SAYERS. The reason there was no bill introduced was that, before I was a member of this House Congress had passed a law directing the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury, through the proper officers, to examine the claims of Nebraska, California, Texas, and other States, and report the amount due them respectively to Congress, and those claims came here in the shape of estimates from the Treasury Department, and went upon a general appropriation bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Perhaps the gentleman from Florida will answer a question?

Mr. MALLORY. I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. COUSINS obtained the floor.

Mr. SAYERS. I hope the gentleman from Florida will allow me one moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida has reserved the residue of his time, and resumed his seat. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COUSINS].

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me a moment?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. The act under which this claim is before the House is wholly different from the acts under which the claims from Texas, Nebraska, California, and Kansas came before Congress. There are two acts relating to claims from those States, and there is but one act in reference to the Florida claim. If the act with reference to Florida be compared with the acts with regard to those other States, it will be found that they are totally different.

Mr. BUNN. If the gentleman is replying to me, I want to say in response that the Committee on Claims examined that question very fully; they also took note carefully of the motion made by the gentleman from Texas in regard to the claim of his State; they observed the success of the effort to put the claim upon an appropriation bill. The parliamentary situation of the two questions prior to that action was the same. This claim might just as well have been put upon the appropriation bill as that of the State of Texas.

Mr. SAYERS. An important difference is that in this case there has been no estimate transmitted to the House from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BUNN. You are mistaken about that. There is an estimate in reference to this Florida claim.

Mr. SAYERS. I have not seen it.

Mr. BUNN. That estimate is here, and indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all. Will the gentleman read the estimate?

Mr. COOPER of Florida. There is a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury making report under the statute referring the matter to him.

Mr. SAYERS. That is an entirely different matter.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, this debate has proceeded thus far without any statement of the real fact involved in the case. The gentleman who represents the committee, and also the gentleman from Florida, have in their remarks proceeded upon their own assumption that this is a just claim, that it has been recommended by all the Departments of the Government, including the President; but they have failed to state any of the acts involved. Now it will be found that the determination of this class of cases rests upon a very distinct and well-marked policy, which is evolved from the Constitution itself.

The Constitution of the United States provides that—

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops, or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

Now, at the time of the breaking out of hostilities in Florida, the immediate occasion of which was the attack upon ten men under Lieut. Hartsuff by a band of forty or fifty Indians. The whole number of hostile Indians visible or engaged was ninety-eight, and at no time either at the beginning of the outbreak or following it did the number exceed that. At the very beginning the force of United States regular troops on hand numbered 840; and besides those 840 regulars there were 321 volunteers.

By September 1 following the outbreak, the United States Government had 1,756 regulars and 1,164 volunteers. The latter, constituting four companies, were furnished by the State of Florida herself, and were regularly enlisted by the United States and were on her pay roll. The State of Florida had also four other companies. It seems that there were a number of citizens there who had nothing in particular to do except to offer themselves to fight Indians. Four other companies were raised and were at the disposal of the Government, but their services were specifically refused by the United States; they were not allowed to enlist as a part of the force of the Government.

Now, it should be remembered that all this time the Government never had less than 840 regulars; and within a year from the beginning of the outbreak it had, as I have stated, 1,756 regulars and 1,164 volunteers to fight 98 Indians. The truth of the matter is that these Indians had to be followed over the Territory, which was a very large one; and it took some time to capture them.

But there was not, as I understand, at any time any such imminent danger there as to justify the calling out, under the provision of the Constitution, of a greater number of troops than were actually in the service of the United States at the beginning. Nevertheless, the United States did enlist 1,164 of the tendered troops. Now, the controversy turns upon the question whether or not the other four companies offered by Florida, although they were not enlisted, although their enlistment was specifically refused by the Government, should be paid, and whether or not interest from the time the expense was incurred to the present time should also be allowed. That is all there is in this controversy.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Did not the President of the United States examine and determine that these men should be paid; and were they not ordered to be paid by the War Department?

Mr. COUSINS. Later on I will come to the consideration had of the matter by the different branches of the Government.

Now, the question arising on that statement of facts is whether the expense incurred by troops offered by the State of Florida should be paid by the United States, though not enlisted by the General Government, which question can be and must be determined by the facts, in view of the Constitution. Was there such an emergency? That is the test of every such claim. Was there such an emergency then and there as warranted the State in calling into the service of the State the four companies that were not enlisted in the service?

Now, Mr. Chairman, the reason I have tendered the minority report is that I believe, under that provision of the Constitution, there was no such emergency.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Was not the President of the United States the sole judge of that?

Mr. COUSINS. Not at all.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Did not he determine it?

Mr. COUSINS. Not at all. At the present time we are the sole judges of it.

Mr. MALLORY. But he was at that time.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. And he so determined.

Mr. COUSINS. At the present time the Congress of the United States is the judge; and every time when such a claim is presented Congress must be the judge, and the sole judge.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us stop and think of this for a minute.

Mr. BUNN. If the gentleman will permit me, to my mind he is mistaken about the constitutional question——

Mr. COUSINS. The gentleman from Florida urges the claim on the ground that claims of like character from Kansas and Nebraska have been paid. That brings out the very point that I had in mind and desired to bring out. In those cases that have been allowed here, where payment was made for troops tendered to the Government in such emergencies, the condition of affairs—the emergency existing at the time—absolutely demanded it. It was a danger that was imminent and menacing. It was so imminent in the cases where payments have been made that it was seen at once that it was necessary to enlist the troops which were tendered by the State to the General Government, and for that reason, when the service was accepted, payment was made.

That is the history of it. Why, they were overrunning the Territory, filling it with bloodshed and death. The Indians had broken out, set fire to the dwellings of the people, murdered men, women, and children in their cabins; the air was filled with the smoke and the terror they created, and it was in such an emergency that the troops, who were on the scene of action, and whose services were needed to repell the outbreak and protect the people were paid, and the claims thus generated allowed. Therefore, I contend that we must be governed by the conditions surrounding at the time, and must consider the constitutional question to which I have referred, whether the emergency justified the use of the troops or demanded their presence.

If you allow the Florida claim to-day, what will be the result of it? If this claim is allowed in a supposed emergency, where ninety-eight hostile Indians were confronted with something like three thousand regular troops, supported by the United States Government—I say if you allow such a claim, amounting to something over a half million of dollars, you will establish a precedent which will bring forward claims of States far greater in number, I imagine, than any gentleman on the floor has supposed; States which can come and demand the allowance of a claim of the same character, and far greater in amount, and more plausible than this, and many others that have been presented and refused.

I have taken pains to correspond with some of the States that have from time to time been considered frontier States, and which have been involved in Indian warfare. I find that the State of Idaho looks in the direction of having certain claims of this character allowed. I find that the State of Kansas has claims on file here in Washington in the hands of an attorney, ready to come to the door of Congress at any time that the occasion presents itself, and demand that you shall pay their claims if you set this precedent. I find Minnesota in the days of her frontiership, in the days of real Indian warfare, in the days when Indians swept the country with fire and blood, I find Minnesota is here with a claim in the hands of attorneys waiting for the establishment of just such a precedent.

Mr. Chairman, I only point out the dangers to show what would be the result of the action sought here, and what we may expect if we grant this claim and disregard this provision of the Constitution. If you determine that on such a state of facts the emergency had arisen, that it was imminent, look what it leaves you here in the way of claims that are to come up in the future. Why, in my mind, this claim is a monstrous joke. Ninety-eight Indians facing 3,000 United States troops; and the claim now that the emergency called for four companies more! You will discover that in 1858 the claim was first taken up in Congress, when Florida sent instructions here to her Representatives to begin to look after the claim; and then as late as 1859 they had to send to Florida for the data on which to found the claim. They had to send to Florida for the very facts upon which the claim itself was based.

We find that in 1859 Florida had two claims for Indian warfare, and she was allowed two specific sums, for money that had been expended in Indian warfares, and in neither one of those accounts was this Florida claim, now up before Congress, ever mentioned. They themselves did not consider it of sufficient importance, as late as 1859, to even claim it. The trouble was, the claim did not amount to enough then. No interest had run on it. It was only the keeping of four companies for that short time that was involved. But you know through the mutations of time, interest, which has swift feet, interest which keeps running, gives a sort of justification to this claim in the eyes of the claimant, so that now it amounts to enough to be worth fighting for in Congress.

Now, so far as the justification that is claimed to have been given to this claim by the Departments of the Government is concerned, you know there is always a sort of courtesy running through the Departments. If it is claimed that Florida expended money for the suppression of Indian hostilities, the Secretary of War of course says, "Well, if they had been mustered in regularly, there is no question but what the claim could be allowed," and all that sort of thing. They came there and tried to muster them in, but it was found they had already disbanded; and listen to what the Secretary says, upon their informing him that the troops were disbanded and they could no longer muster them in. The Secretary says:

"Under the circumstances the only course left for the Department is to receive as official the State rolls, duly certified by the State authorities, and to base upon them a recommendation to Congress for the appropriation necessary to pay off the troops. This course will obviate the difficulties mentioned by you on account of the disbandment of the volunteers in question."

A committee which formerly reported upon this matter used this language:

This letter of the governor of Florida is not now amongst the papers in the case, and this committee have been unable to procure a copy of it at the War Department, but they accept as correct the statement of its contents as above; but they respectfully submit that the apparent effort of the Secretary of War to muster troops by a sort of nunc pro tunc proceeding into the Government service was unauthorized, especially after he had declined to accept these troops before the alleged service.

It must be remembered that at the very time this matter was brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, the fact that the troops were tendered was brought to his notice. The whole situation was before him at a time when he could judge, at a time when he was competent to determine, and he specifically declined to have them enlisted for the reason I have stated.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true, so far from its being the case as he states it, that the troops which were rejected by the commanding officer who preceded Gen. Harney, were accepted by Gen. Harney when he came there, and six hundred more besides. Is not that true? Just answer that one question.

Mr. COUSINS. No, not wholly so.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Is not any part of that true?

Mr. COUSINS. I can not answer that question by yes or no, because part of it is true, and part of it I think is incorrect. The situation is this: Such a number of the troops as were accepted were enlisted, as I said in the beginning, and were upon the pay roll of the United States, and were paid by the Government. They were the four companies. Then those over and above the four companies, the expense of maintaining which is the foundation of the claim which is now before us—when their claim came before the Secretary, and when it was sought to have them enlisted and put upon the pay rolls, the Secretary refused it, upon the ground, I presume, that we decide this question upon now, that there was no emergency calling for a greater number than they had already enlisted.

Mr. HUTCHESON. Let me ask the gentleman to look at page 10 of the report, and he will find—for I know he does not intend to misrepresent the facts—that the amount involved is not alone for the four companies, but there is involved a claim for every company, including the time that they were mustered in by the State, up to the time that they were received by the Government. That has never been paid to them. The gentleman will observe that not one dollar of that has been paid for the companies which were accepted.

Mr. COUSINS. I think the gentleman will find that all of the 1,164 volunteers, the four companies that were accepted by the Government, were paid. You will find that the amount in controversy is claimed for the additional troops that were over, and the interest that has accumulated in this great length of time. You must remember that this claim is older than I am. It happened before the war.

And there is another significant fact that I want to present in this connection touching Florida's position in the matter of claims for Indian warfare.

I want to read the record of what Florida was receiving in those days for helping to suppress hostile Indians. Here is a list of appropriations for payment of military services in Florida from July 1, 1849, to June 30, 1861:

Now, in that account that was allowed in 1859 there is no mention or reference to the sum incurred or claimed to have been incurred and as justly due to them for the hostilities in question. There is not a word mentioned in this last account allowed in 1859. So that it appears that at that time the State of Florida had no faith whatever in the justness of the claim which is now sought to be raised here.

Mr. MALLORY. I will state to the gentleman that those troops were mustered in. This claim is for troops that were never mustered in, and which the Secretary of War ordered to be mustered in.

Mr. COUSINS. I understand. I was just reading this summary of what Florida was receiving for this business she was doing in those times, and to show that it was a sort of crop that Florida had got into the habit of harvesting off the Government annually for the suppression of Indian hostilities; and notwithstanding the fact that they were paid for these four companies that were enlisted, 1,164 men, they were not satisfied with their regular annual allowance, but they wanted to increase it; and, as I think the record shows, they themselves had no faith whatever in the justness of the claim in 1859, the time when it should have been considered, if at all. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the point made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COUSINS] as to the fact that the approval of the calling out of these troops by the President is not conclusive and that Congress is justified in acting upon that theory, while that may be so, I would nevertheless call the attention of the gentleman to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Luther vs. Borden, where that court in that memorable case referred to the case of Martin vs. Mott, in 12th Wheaton. Speaking of the power conferred upon the President of the United States in calling out troops, the double power conferred under the Constitution of calling out the militia, and the other power of calling out troops to suppress insurrections, the court said:

Whenever a statute gives discretionary power to any person to be exercised by him upon his own opinion of certain facts, it is a sound rule of construction that the statute constitutes him the sole and exclusive judge of the existence of those facts.

The President called on the governor for troops. Those troops were furnished by the State. These very troops were put in the field by the governor of Florida at once, but were declined by the War Department, and subsequently the War Department approved of them having been ordered into the field, and authorized that they be mustered in.

Mr. COUSINS. Is there any record that the President of the United States had called for these four extra companies which the governor of Florida had called for?

Mr. MALLORY. He did not call for these. He called for troops, and put them in the field, and the President, through the Secretary of War, ratified his action, and ordered them to be mustered in for the purpose of being paid.

Mr. COUSINS. But that would not be covered by the case you cited.

Mr. MALLORY. He had called for troops subsequently.

Mr. REED. But he did not accept them.

Mr. MALLORY. He afterwards did.

Mr. REED. After he had declined to accept them: and he had then passed his judgment.

Mr. MALLORY. The Secretary of War had advised the President that they should be paid.

Mr. REED. It was discretionary with the officer, according to the case that you read from. When an officer has discretion, he is supposed to have exercised his discretion rightfully, and it can not be questioned; but having exercised his discretion in refusing, and somebody else having put the troops into the field, has he then any right, under any provision of the Constitution, to pay for the men whose services he refused.

Mr. MALLORY. Let me ask the gentleman if these troops, instead of having disbanded and having gone to their homes, had been mustered in and out of the service, does the gentleman doubt that they would have been paid?

Mr. REED. By whose orders?

Mr. MALLORY. By the orders of the Secretary of War.

Mr. COUSINS. I would like the gentleman to cite any language of the President in which he refers to the action of the governor as to these four last companies.

Mr. MALLORY. It is given in Secretary Floyd's letter to the governor, and in that of Adjt. Gen. Cooper, which is quoted in the majority report. He had at first declined to allow the enrollment of these last companies, some twenty odd in number.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. MALLORY. I move that the committee rise and report this bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SAYERS. I make the point of order that the bill has not been read by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the motion of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] that the bill must be considered by sections, which point of order the Chair thinks is well taken.

Mr. SAYERS. General debate has not been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to report a bill, when there has been no consideration by sections, would be tantamount to closing general debate; which the Chair thinks is not in order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] has moved that the committee rise.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Florida did not move that the committee rise. He moved that the committee rise and report, and that not being in order, the whole motion would fall to the ground.

The CHAIRMAN. But later the Chair understood the gentleman from Florida to move that the committee rise. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] suggested that the first motion was not in order, whereupon, as the Chair understood, the gentleman from Florida moved simply that the committee rise.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman from Florida did not make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair is in error, and will recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, until I had read the majority and minority reports on this bill I could not imagine that such a proposition would have been seriously entertained by the House of Representatives. I could not believe that it would be seriously proposed to pay the State of Florida $261,934 by way of principal, and enough interest to swell the amount to nearly $568,000, for the services of four companies of volunteers, those services never having been accepted by the Executive of the United States, or by his representative, the Secretary of War.

This great Indian war arose, it would seem, in December, 1856, by an attack of twenty-five or fifty Indians upon a United States officer whose gallant services have been so eloquently alluded to by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. Now, I can hardly conceive what the heroism of Lieut. Hartsuff, which is set forth in two or three papers in the appendix to the report, has to do with the claim of the State of Florida for payment for the services of four hundred men whose services were never accepted by the Government of the United States. If we establish this precedent the governor of any State who may yield to his imaginary fears and enlist a thousand or two thousand men, may, forty years later, saddle the expense of that operation upon the Federal Government.

It seems to me, as one not unfamiliar with the services of militia or volunteer troops, and as one who has made some study of questions of this nature, that the true test is what took place when the services of these troops were offered in December, 1856, by the governor of Florida to the Secretary of War. Had the Secretary of War at that time accepted the services of those four companies there could be no doubt whatever as to the liability of the Federal Government to reimburse the State.

Mr. BUNN. Suppose that at that time it was not deemed necessary to accept the services of these troops but that subsequent conditions showed that they were necessary, could the Secretary by any means have changed his opinion?

Mr. BARTLETT. The only Secretary of War to be considered——

Mr. BUNN. I wish the gentleman would just answer that question.

Mr. BARTLETT. The only Secretary of War to be considered is the one who was Secretary of War at the time of the inception of hostilities in December, 1856, and at the time of the tender of these Florida troops by the governor. The action of that Secretary of War decided the whole question of liability, and when Governor Broome received a definite reply from the Secretary that he would not accept the services of more than the 260 men who were enlisted and mustered into the United States service, he should not have called upon the remaining companies of volunteers to serve, and if he did call upon them the State of Florida alone was liable.

Another test is sought to be imposed, the test of mustering in. I admit that that might have been a test, and had these troops been mustered in 1857, when another Secretary of War, John B. Floyd, said that they might be mustered in and out of the United States service—had those troops been present and been mustered in at that time the United States might be liable. But they were not. Why? Because they had been already disbanded; they had gone to their homes, and there is nothing in the record here to show how long they served.

Mr. BUNN. Let me correct the gentleman. Their accounts are here, fully verified.

Mr. MALLORY. Here is a list of twenty and odd companies, instead of four, with a statement of the length of their service.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, there is another reason why this enormous sum should not be paid to the State of Florida, and that is, the character of that war. Take even the glowing picture painted by Governor Broome, in his message of 1857, in which he tells us what the troops did. It appears that there was one detachment under the command of a lieutenant which overtook the enemy and succeeded in recovering the property of one citizen that had been stolen, and that in the engagement which ensued seven or eight Indians were killed.

What did the other companies do? In all it is supposed that they killed twenty Indians. In all they fought in three engagements, with a loss, it would appear, of about three men on their side. What was the total number of hostilities engaged in that war? It is shown in the report of Judge-Advocate-General Barr and in the report of Adjutant-General Cooper that the total number, as is stated by the gentleman from Iowa, who submits the views of the minority, amounted to about ninety-eight or somewhat short of one hundred.

So we find at the end of this conflict that the hostile force was decimated to the extent that out of ninety-eight Indians sixty-three were left, and for the services of the troops in those sanguinary engagements, in which, as we are told by the governor, the fighting became so intense that the men were obliged to resort to pocketknives, and that one Indian had his throat cut, for services of that character we are asked forty years later to give the State of Florida nearly $600,000. It seems to me that the proposition is monstrous.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Let me remind the gentleman that the State of Florida borrowed that money and is paying interest upon the bonds issued for the money. Does the gentleman suppose that we borrowed that money and issued those bonds and have been paying interest upon them all these years for fun?

Mr. BARTLETT. Suppose I am ordered to take a battalion to Buffalo, a battalion consisting of about as many men as all these forces in question here; and suppose there is no liability on the part of the Government of the United States to pay for the services of my battalion. Is that any reason why forty years later some of my descendants should come to the Congress of the United States and ask half a million of dollars in payment?

Where there is no liability there should be no payment; and the test of liability here was the refusal of the Secretary of War to accept the services of these troops, together with the failure of these volunteers a year later to be present to be mustered in, and their disbandment. We have, too, the further evidence that this whole claim is an afterthought. It seems never to have occurred to the State of Florida for years after the date of the occurrences; and as has been stated by the gentleman from Texas, we find in 1857 the payment of $92,000, and in 1856 the payment of $240,000, without any reference whatever to this claim of equal magnitude.

It seems to me, gentlemen, in view of these sound and just objections, and considering the character of the warfare in question, this claim should not be allowed. It pains me to take a position against any State whose interests seem to be involved in the payment of claims; but I can not support a claim of this nature, which is based on neither law nor equity, nor on the merits of the services alleged to have been rendered.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, as it lacks but four minutes of the time when the House, under the rule, must take its recess, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BAILEY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 102) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the account stated between the General Government and the State of Florida by the said Secretary, under the authority of the act approved March 2, 1889, known as the deficiency act, and to pay the balance found to be due, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HEIRS OF DON JUAN FILHIOL.

Mr. TERRY, by unanimous consent, reported back adversely from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (H. R. 5160) to refer the title of the heirs of Don Juan Filhiol to certain lands in Arkansas to the Court of Claims; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 38) relating to the pay and retirement of mates in the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 83) authorizing the State of Montana to make selections from certain public lands;

A bill (H. R. 366) providing for the sale of the old custom-house and lot connected therewith in the city of Louisville, Ky.;

A bill (H. R. 4452) adding the towns of Manchester and Vernon, in the State of Connecticut, to the customs district of Hartford, Conn., and making the city of Rockville, Conn., a port of delivery;

A bill (H. R. 4858) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 882) granting a pension to Frances Corse, widow of Gen. John M. Corse; and

A bill (S. 1209) to regulate enlistments in the Army of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] will perform the duties of the Chair at the evening session.

And then (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House, in accordance with the rule, took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. BROOKSHIRE, as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar under clause 3 of Rule XXVII.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 6405) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Patrick Kelleher, late private Company C, Thirty-eighth Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Patrick Kelleher, late a private of Company C, Thirty-eighth Illinois Infantry, by removing the charge of desertion standing against his name and granting him an honorable discharge from said service.

The pending amendment was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emolument of any kind shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I have a suggestion to make in regard to this bill which I think ought to be acceptable to the House. This is a very warm night, and the spirit of compromise is on me. I wish to state that I am perfectly willing to accept as an amendment to this bill the amendment which was placed some three weeks ago upon the bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COGSWELL]. I therefore ask unanimous consent to add at the end of the pending amendment the words "or pension paid to this date."

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. As last Friday night I raised and insisted upon the point of no quorum, I wish to say that in view of the presentation of this amendment, the effect of which as I understand, is that if the bill be passed no pay or emolument in the way of pension shall thereby accrue to the beneficiary, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the report in this case be read.

The CHAIRMAN. This proceeding is only by unanimous consent. This bill is and has been the unfinished business. The report was read at a previous Friday night session.

Mr. LOUD. The amendment which I propose is precisely the same that was assented to upon the bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I have withdrawn the point upon this bill in order that it might get out of the way, hoping that others of similar nature may not be brought up, but that we may proceed to clear the Calendar of meritorious measures. I hope that this bill, with the amendment now offered, may be disposed of.

Mr. LOUD. I repeat that this is precisely the same amendment which was adopted upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] upon the bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts which was passed.

Mr. JONES. I wish to say to the gentleman that there are a great many bills here for the removal of the charge of desertion; and I never admitted that I thought all these bills, or any of them, ought to pass if amended in the form the gentleman now suggests. I think that each of these bills ought to be considered on its own merits.

That bill of Gen. Cogswell's was one of some little merit, I thought, after it had been fully explained.

Mr. LOUD. I beg to suggest to the gentleman that it is of no higher character of merit than the bill I now propose.

Mr. JONES. Well, it was reported to me by the gentleman from Massachusetts himself as one of peculiar merit and very exceptional in character.

Mr. LOUD. At the suggestion of the gentleman from South Carolina I agreed to accept that amendment——

Mr. JONES. I do not remember the circumstances of this case, and would like to have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the report can be again read.

Mr. EVERETT. I object to the reading of the report, or rather it is not a matter of objection. The order on the bill is that the vote be taken by tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the report can be read. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. EVERETT. I withdraw the objection.

The report (by Mr. BOWERS of California) was read, as follows:

The committee to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6405) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Patrick Kelleher, have considered the same, and report the same back with an amendment, as follows: "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emolument of any kind shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act;" and that so amended, the bill do pass.

The military record furnished the committee and made a part of this report shows that the soldier served faithfully for two and a half years, then reënlisted, and in 1864 received a furlough of thirty days and went to his home in Massachusetts, and remained there sick, under treatment, unable to return to his regiment until it was mustered out. The soldier was severely wounded at the battle of Murfreesboro in his right arm, shoulder, and leg; is now badly crippled, and unable to labor for his support.

Case of Patrick Kelleher, late private Company C, Thirty-eighth Illinois Infantry.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, War Department, April 4, 1894.

The records show that Patrick Kelleher, aged 28 years, was enrolled August 4, 1861, for three years, and mustered into service as a private in Company C, Thirty-eighth Illinois Infantry, September 7, 1861. He appears to have served faithfully until December 31, 1862, when he was captured at Murfreesboro, Tenn. He was confined at Richmond, Va., January 15, 1863; paroled at City Point, Va., January 20, 1863; reported at Camp Parole, Md., January 21, 1863, and was sent to Benton Barracks, Mo. He rejoined his company May 6, 1863; enlisted as a veteran volunteer February 29, 1864, and is reported as having deserted May 12, 1864, at Mattoon, Ill., while on veteran furlough.

In an application for removal of the charge of desertion the soldier testified September 20, 1886, that in December, 1862, at the battle of Murfreesboro, Tenn., he was severely wounded in the right arm, shoulder, and right leg; that about April, 1864, he obtained a furlough for thirty days, being unfit for duty, and went home; that he became much worse and was under the medical treatment of one Dr. Page; that he remained under Dr. Page's treatment until his regiment was mustered out of service, and that he never received a certificate of discharge.

In another affidavit of the same date the applicant made a similar statement, adding that he had no intention of deserting, but was prevented from rejoining his command by physical disabilities.

Under date September 20, 1886, William G. Anderson testified that he had known the soldier for six years; that he (affiant) had been through the war as a member of Light Battery B, Fourth United States Artillery, and knew from conversations with the applicant that his statements are true, although he did not meet him on the battlefield. (Battery B, Fourth United States Artillery, was not present at the battle of Murfreesboro, Tenn.)

John J. Chapman testified in this same affidavit (dated September 20, 1886), that he had known the applicant since 1880, and identified him as the soldier in question.

The application for relief was denied February 21, 1887, and renewing the application in 1893 the soldier testified that he had served faithfully until about April 12, 1864, when he received a thirty-days' furlough and went home to Massachusetts, and that while there he was taken sick, was treated by Dr. Page, was not able to leave his bed when his furlough expired, and was sick for about a year, and could then get about only on crutches.

On November 15, 1893, the evidence on file in the Bureau of Pensions was examined and found to contain nothing additional to that already cited, except the testimony of Dr. Nomus Page, the family physician, who declared that he had treated the soldier in April and at other times in 1864 and in 1865 for chronic rheumatism and malarial poisoning, and in another affidavit that he had treated him in May, 1864, during the remainder of 1864, and also in 1865, for debility and malaria.

On November 18, 1893, the application for relief was again denied, the evidence submitted not being deemed sufficient to establish that the soldier was prevented from completing his term of enlistment by disability contracted in the service and line of duty.

The status of the case has not since been changed, either by the introduction of new testimony or by legislation.

Respectfully submitted.

F. C. AINSWORTH,
Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. JONES. Now, I would like to ask the parliamentary status of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when the bill was under consideration at the last meeting, but is advised by the clerks at the desk that the amendment just reported as a part of the bill had been agreed to by the committee, and the question was being taken on laying the bill aside as amended with favorable recommendation. The point of no quorum was made, and tellers had been appointed, but upon the vote by tellers a quorum failed to appear.

The gentleman from California now asks unanimous consent to modify the amendment adopted, so as to exclude the applicant from the benefit of a pension, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. JONES. If that consent is given, would it change the status of the bill before the committee? It would not change the status of the bill as to the vote, I presume.

The CHAIRMAN. The question would then be on laying aside the bill with favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. In view of the fact that the change was made, to the effect that this applicant could not get a pension, I agreed to withdraw the point of no quorum, thereby bringing the matter to a direct vote.

Mr. JONES. There would be a question in my mind as to whether the gentleman who made the point of no quorum on a previous evening could withdraw that point at this session.
